Mr. VANDENBERG. I have not the total here, Mr. President. It is not a large sum. I know that it is $1.07 apiece. I am not complaining about the total expense involved here, but I am urging that the time to stop a bad habit is when it starts and before it becomes contagious. I am not commenting at the moment on the work of the Resettlement Administration. That is beside the point. I am dealing solely with a problem in printing and propaganda.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator exhibited what he said was the report of the Federal Trade Commission, which is a relatively small volume.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, it has the same number of pages as the other volume.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; but the second volume is larger, as the Senator will see by exhibiting it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Because of its magnificent typography and illustrations, and its cover.

Mr. ROBINSON. And because of its beautiful colors.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Just what useful purpose is served by the colors on the cover is a question in my mind, Mr. President. I am a great admirer of art when my limited intelligence permits me to recognize and appreciate it, but I do not understand the purpose of that kind of a cover.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Michigan will be received and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 46) requiring the approval of the Joint Committee on Printing for the inclusion of illustrations and color printing in Government annual reports was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Printing.

REPORT OF BILL FROM COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the recess or adjournment of the Senate to follow the session of today the Committee on Banking and Currency may have leave to report as if the Senate were in session.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what is the length of time covered by the request of the Senator?

Mr. ROBINSON. That during the recess or adjournment which will follow the session of today—that is, during tomorrow—the committee may have leave to report. It is my intention to move an adjournment until Monday, unless it shall be necessary to keep the Senate in session in order to give the committee a chance to report; and I do not wish to do that.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I ask the nature of the report? In some instances I have thought that a request of this kind was reasonable, although it is unusual, because when a report is made under a unanimous-consent agreement of this kind the measure reported is subject to immediate consideration when the Senate convenes. Otherwise it must go over for a day, giving each Senator opportunity to study the proposal. I am asking, therefore, the reason for the proposal, and what is to be offered on Monday.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not know that the committee will be ready to report. I am making the request at the suggestion of members of the Banking and Currency Committee. There is no business on the calendar of the Senate at the present time, and if we have a session on Monday, I should like the Senate to have the opportunity of considering any report the committee may make. I may say that there are two bills pending before the Committee on Banking and Currency for the extension of certain statutes hereofore passed by Congress. If the committee should in the meantime report either of those bills, I should think the Senate might desire to proceed to their consideration. There would be no disposition to press either measure to a conclusion if the Senator thought reasonable time had not been afforded for deliberation.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that is fair enough; but I think the practice is not a good one, and I must object. When the bills or joint resolutions are reported on Monday, if they should appear to be fair and there is urgent necessity for immediate consideration, I shall interpose no objection. I should rather leave it in that way than to consent at this time to the request made by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then, at the conclusion of the session today, I shall move an adjournment until tomorrow.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 81) to create a joint congressional committee on Government organization, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting several nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably the nominations of the following ambassadors:

William Phillips, of Massachusetts, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Italy, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate, vice Breckinridge Long;

William Christian Bullitt, of Pennsylvania, lately Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to France, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate, vice Jesse Isidor Straus; and

Joseph E. Davies, of the District of Columbia, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate, vice William Christian Bullitt.

Mr. PITTMAN also, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service to offices to which they were appointed during the last recess of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported favorably the nominations of Clarence G. Nevins, of Kansas, to be State administrator for Kansas in the Works Progress Administration, vice Evan Griffith, resigned, and John J. McDunough, of Massachusetts, to be State administrator for Massachusetts in the Works Progress Administration.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of the following-named persons for appointment to the offices to which they were appointed during the last recess of the Senate:

Stanley H. Wright to be director of the Public Works Administration for North Carolina, vice Herman G. Baity;

Massena L. Culley to be director of the Public Works Administration for Mississippi;

Ralph C. Chaney, of Ohio, to be State engineer inspector for the Public Works Administration in Ohio;

Robert A. Hurley to be State administrator in the Works Progress Administration for Connecticut, vice Matthew J. Daly;

F. H. Locey, of Hawaii, to be director in the Works Progress Administration for the Territory of Hawaii;

Miles H. Fairbank, of Maryland, to be regional administrator for the Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration, vice Carlos E. Chardon; and Frank Ingram to be a State administrator in the Works Progress Administration for Florida, vice E. A. Pynchon.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry general and numerous other officers and persons for appointment in the Regular Army.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for appointment, by transfer, in the Regular Army.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for appointment to temporary rank in the Air Corps of the Regular Army under the provisions of law.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nomination of Capt. Leon Edgar Sharon, of the Air Corps, for appointment as major with temporary rank in the Air Corps, Regular Army, from January 21, 1937, under the provisions of law.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nomination of Brig. Gen. Luke Henry Callan, Reserve, to be brigadier general, Reserve, from February 4, 1937, under the provisions of law.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of sundry general officers, for appointment in the National Guard of the United States, under the provisions of law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be be placed on the Executive Calendar.

ADJOURNMENT

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Saturday, January 16, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 15, 1937

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

George Keller, of Iowa, to be State administrator in the Works Progress Administration for Iowa.

COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

George E. Allen, of the District of Columbia. (Reappointment.)

Melvin C. Hazen, of the District of Columbia. (Reappointment.)

PROMOTION IN THE COAST GUARD

Lt. Donald G. Jacobs to be lieutenant commander in the Coast Guard of the United States, to rank as such from June 1, 1935.

SENATE

SATURDAY, JANUARY 16, 1937

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou to whose all-searching sight all things are whole, whose justice weighs men's motives, not alone their deeds: stoop to our world of sense and lift us high above the lower things to kindling thoughts of goodness, to promptings of a love that conquers self and counts supreme the deeds which yield life's truest harvest as they spring from the soul's outreaching hope.

O Light behind life's shadows, O Love behind life's sorrows, shine forth in us as we walk our way with Him in whom Thou hast gathered up man's noblest thoughts and mingled them with Thine, Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Friday, January 15, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Byrnes	Green	McNary
Andrews	Capper	Guffey	Maloney
Ashurst	Caraway	Hale	Minton
Austin	Chavez	Harrison	Murray
Bachman	Clark	Hatch	Neely

Sheppard	Townsend	Vandenberg	Wheeler
Steiwer	Truman	Van Nuys	White
Thomas, Okla.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is detained on account of a serious injury to a member of his family; that the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] are detained on account of illness; and that the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MCGILL], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. MCNARY. I announce the absence of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] by reason of illness in his family; and also that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is absent because of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

WITHDRAWALS AND RESTORATIONS OF PUBLIC LANDS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office dated January 8, 1937, reporting relative to withdrawals and restorations of public lands under the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. 847), during the period from January 1, 1936, to December 31, 1936, inclusive, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

REPORT OF GEORGETOWN BARGE, DOCK, ELEVATOR & RAILWAY CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from Hamilton & Hamilton, attorneys, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator & Railway Co. for the year ended December 31, 1936, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PETITION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from the Workers' Alliance of America, signed by David Lasser, national president, praying for the making of a deficiency appropriation of $1,040,000,000 for the employment of 2,800,000 W. P. A. workers for the balance of the present fiscal year, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. GLASS. For the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, who is unavoidably absent, I report from that committee favorably and without amendment the bill (S. 416) to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised, and I submit a report (No. 3) thereon.

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 4) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the original Norfolk, Va., land grant and the two hundredth anniversary of the establishment of the city of Norfolk, Va., as a borough, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 4) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 879) to carry out certain obligations to certain enrolled Indians under tribal agreement; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 880) for the relief of Albert D. Castleberry; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RUSSELL:

A bill (S. 881) to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1937, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

A bill (S. 882) to amend the Judicial Code to create a new district in the State of Georgia, known as the northeastern district, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 883) authorizing the attendance of the Marine Band and Drum Corps, from San Diego, Calif., at the Annual Rose Festival to be held at Portland, Oreg.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

(By request.) A bill (S. 884) to amend chapter 6 of title 8 of the United States Code by adding thereto a new section to be known as section 155a, to prevent the separation from their families of certain aliens convicted of crime who arrived in the United States as minor children, limiting the time in which certain aliens convicted of crime may be deported, providing for legalization of their status for the purpose of acquiring citizenship, and canceling pending deportation warrants against such aliens; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. GILLETTE:

A bill (S. 885) for the relief of H. G. Harmon; and

A bill (S. 886) authorizing the redemption by the United States Treasury of certain documentary revenue stamps now held by L. J. Powers; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 887) for the relief of Walford W. Watt; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 893) for the relief of Jack Wade, Perry Shilton, Louie Hess, Owen Busch, and William W. McGregor; to the Committee on Claims.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS AND SURVEYS

Mr. ADAMS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 62), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Seventy-fifth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not to exceed 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

A. J. WATTS—WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS

On motion by Mr. BLACK, it was Ordered, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to release to A. J. Watts the papers accompanying and in connection with the bill (S. 3067) for the relief of A. J. Watts (74th Cong., 1st sess.).

LEASES ON NAVAL PETROLEUM RESERVE NO. 2

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, on December 19 last the Secretary of the Navy transmitted a report to the Senate, as required by law, setting forth the oil and gas leases made in the naval petroleum reserve no. 2 in California since the last session of Congress. The report is very brief. Only a few leases were made. A great many inquiries are being received as to the leases, and I ask that the brief report of the Secretary of the Navy be printed in the body of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
Washington, December 17, 1936.

The VICE PRESIDENT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: On July 9, 1936, the Acting Secretary of the Interior and the Acting Secretary of the Navy, for and on behalf of the United States and certain holders of United States oil and gas prospecting permits and leases, executed a plan agreement for cooperative development of lands of the United States in Buena Vista Hills oil and gas field, Kern County, Calif., which plan agreement was entered into under statutory authority provided by the acts approved March 4, 1931 (46 Stat. 1523; 30 U. S. C., sec. 226), and August 21, 1935 (49 Stat. 674), amending the act of Congress entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain", approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437).

Section 17 of the above-mentioned act of February 25, 1920, as amended, referring to oil and gas leases on lands of the United States, reads in part as follows:

"Leases shall be for a period of 20 years with the preferential right in the lessee to renew the same for successive periods of 10 years upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the department having jurisdiction thereof, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods: Provided, That any lease heretofore or hereafter issued under this act that has become the subject of a cooperative or unit plan of development or operation of a single oil or gas pool or area, or other plan for the conservation of the oil and gas of a single pool or area, which plan has the approval of the Secretary of the department or departments having jurisdiction over the Government lands included in said plan as necessary or convenient in the public interest, shall continue in force beyond said period of 20 years until the termination of such plan: And provided further, That said Secretary or Secretaries shall report all leases so continued to Congress at the beginning of its next regular session after the date of such continuance."

In compliance with the last proviso quoted above, I hereby report that the following oil and gas leases in naval petroleum reserve no. 2, in California, have been continued, in the public interest, beyond the period of 20 years until the termination of the plan agreement:

Associated Oil Co., leases Sacramento nos. 019571 and 019571 (a); General Petroleum Corporation of California, leases Sacramento nos. 019336, 019337, 019424 (b), and 022065 (b); Honolulu Oil Corporation, Ltd., leases Sacramento nos. 019343, 019385 (b), and 019386 (b); Murvale Oil Co., lease Sacramento no. 019577; North American Oil Consolidated, leases Sacramento nos. 019383 (c), 019396 (b)–019626–019627–019628–019629 (consolidated), 019630, and 019752; Union Oil Co. of California, leases Sacramento nos. 019352, 019352 (b), and 019424 (a); the United Oil Co., leases Sacramento nos. 019594 and 019384 (c).

Very respectfully,

CLAUDE A. SWANSON.

WITH YOUTH PLOWED UNDER—POEM BY GEORGE S. HOLMES

[Mr. CONNALLY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a poem by George Sanford Holmes entitled "With Youth Plowed Under", which appears in the Appendix.]

CHAIRMAN FARLEY'S ADDRESS TO HIS FELLOW WORKERS

[Mr. BACHMAN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the radio address delivered on Nov. 10, 1936, by Hon. James A. Farley, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, to his fellow workers in the Presidential campaign, which appears in the Appendix.]

SEVENTEENTH ANNIVERSARY OF EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, on this the seventeenth anniversary of the adoption of Nation-wide prohibition, which was repealed after an existence of nearly 14 years, it is significant to observe that the scene with reference to beverage alcohol as a social menace is rapidly changing.

To a degree never before realized, human safety and human life are dependent on the careful operation of machinery. About 37,000 deaths and hundreds of thousands of accidents resulted from the operation of automobiles alone in the United States last year. It is estimated that 100 persons perish in traffic in this country every day—a little more than four every hour—one every 15 minutes. A prominent newspaper writer, Mr. Blair Moody, in a dispatch from Detroit to the Washington Evening Star of January 4, 1937, informs us, to use his own language, that "in one wild Christmas Eve carnage 10 people were killed in a single night on the streets of Detroit alone." He also states in this dispatch that the property loss including wages and medical expenses of persons injured in connection with automobile accidents in this country last year is estimated by the National Safety Council at a billion six hundred million dollars. The factory cost of all new passenger cars sold last year is estimated by the automobile industry at a billion eight hundred and forty million dollars. Thus the property loss from automobile accidents in 1936 almost equaled the value of the passenger-car output in that year.

It is true that it is difficult to determine the exact extent to which the drinking driver is responsible for these conditions, due to the fact that the capacity for careful driving of even a moderate and occasional drinker not visibly intoxicated or that of a drinker whose condition is not subject to detection by ordinary means is impaired to such an extent that he becomes the cause of accidents or is helpless to avert them. When it is definitely known, however, that the obviously drinking or drunken driver caused at least 3,600 deaths in the single year of 1935, according to statistics compiled by the National Safety Council, it is reasonable to assume that the actual number of deaths caused by all drinking drivers far exceeds that figure. More significant than all assumptions and figures, however, is the fact that the drinking-driver situation is such that sober and careful drivers and pedestrians are in constant dread of what may happen to them from drinking and drunken drivers. Still more significant is the fact that such statistics as have been compiled show an increasing percentage in recent years of deaths and accidents that can be traced to drinking drivers. In the "horse and buggy" days the drinking driver could drop the lines, relapse into a stupor, and reasonably depend upon his sober horse to take him home safely, and this without menace to others on the highway. In the present age if the driver relaxes control of the steering wheel of an automobile for but a moment he invites and frequently causes death or mutilation to himself, to other drivers, to passengers, and pedestrians.

The new scene consists also in the increasing responsibilities that devolve upon the airplane pilot and the locomotive engineer, on whose sobriety, steadiness of nerve, control of reflexes, and reactions depend the lives of greater and greater numbers of people. The same impairment of mental and physical capacities produced by even moderate indulgence in alcohol in the case of the driver of an automobile occurs also in the case of the airplane pilot and the locomotive engineer. It occurs also in the case of those who operate the vast machinery of modern industry—machinery representing the most tremendous concentrations of mechanical power ever known—where momentary loss of mental and physical control may mean destruction of life and property on an unprecedented scale.

It is well said that, with alcoholic liquor so extensively sold today, it can scarcely be an exaggeration to credit to its use a considerable proportion of the 4,000 accidental deaths last year in the trade and service industries; of the 1,900 deaths recorded in the manufacturing world; of the 2,100 deaths reported in the field of transportation and public utilities; of the 2,500 deaths in construction activities, and certainly a definite percentage of the 31,500 fatalities recorded as home deaths.

While it is true that rigid rules against drinking while at work have been established by employers, the fact that liquor is increasingly available everywhere and less subject to regulation than ever before creates a situation whereby the operators of machinery are increasingly powerless to resist the lure of alcoholic drink.

Another aspect of the alcohol problem may be found in the wider and more complicated problems of modern government, requiring the exercise by the individual of all his faculties and all his mental and moral resources. These faculties and resources are needed in their utmost purity and power at the ballot box, where every individual in a democracy participates in the direction of a nation's destinies. A drink-dulled mind is thus a handicap to the performance of the duties of citizenship—a handicap which becomes more serious as society becomes more vast and intricate.

The new scene shows the civilization of the machine age speeding forward. The individual must go forward with it, his faculties alert, intact, and constantly improving. Progress will continue in proportion as individuals are able to operate modern machinery with safety and efficiency. They cannot do so if beverage alcohol is permitted to narcotize their energies and to slow down their mental and physical powers. The world must be made safe for the speed essential to modern civilization.

Another part of the new scene is the new saloon—more alluring, more enticing, more dangerous than the old. The old saloon was the outgrowth of years of experience in the attempt to police the liquor traffic. The argument in support of it was that it segregated the sale of liquor from that of other merchandise; that women and children were excluded.

The old saloon fell into disrepute, not only because of the products which it sold but because of the social and other abuses which it helped to develop. It was promised that when the eighteenth amendment was repealed the saloon in any form would not be permitted to return. Many ingenious devices have been contrived to prevent the place of retail sale from having the appearance of a saloon. Package stores are being tried. The requirements that liquors shall be purchased only with meals, that patrons shall drink while seated at tables and not while standing with one foot on a brass rail at a bar are also being tried. But thoughtful observers of conditions today are inquiring whether these modern substitutes for the saloon are not in many respects far worse. The employment of hostesses and barmaids, including many young girls, and the presence of women and girl patrons in growing numbers in these new liquor places are developing serious problems.

A characteristic of the old saloon, however, that has returned in more sinister proportions is the practice of wage-check cashing across the bar.

This new-old scheme of boosting bar profits through "courtesy" drinks, common in preprohibition saloon days—is rapidly becoming a menace to the happiness and solvency of thousands of American homes.

Says the American Business Men's Research Foundation—

It also says that on the basis of investigations made during the past few weeks, as a result of complaints from various industrial centers, the present unrestricted practice of cashing wage checks in taverns and saloons, which is now being widely promoted by liquor sellers and dive keepers, has not only become a serious factor in increasing liquor consumption but is depriving legitimate trade of millions of dollars of normal business.

Again it says that thousands of taverns or saloons, especially those in the vicinity of factories and industrial plants, are adding thousands of dollars to their gross profits every pay day by promoting the vicious custom of cashing wage-earners' checks, with the confident knowledge, attested by long experience, that such favors unfailingly swell the bar purchases of customers thus accommodated.

The foundation says also that first-hand investigations develop the fact that in many cases a large proportion of the tavern patrons for hours following pay-offs are those who crowd into the bar for this accommodation, and who, practically without exception, reciprocate by purchases ranging from one to an indefinite number of "courtesy" drinks.

It further says that this practice, on the basis of reports received, is developing even more serious abuses, such as temporarily withholding complete payment of checks so proffered, with the result that credit so extended leads to week-end liquor bouts that leave in the barkeeper's till all or a large portion of the entire amount of the workers' checks.

The foundation asserts that self-evidently the most serious phase of the saloon pay-check cashing problem is the increasing diversion of labor's wages thereby to the liquor trade from legitimate neighborhood retailers, merchants, and banks, and the consequent curtailment of savings deposits and expenditures for the purchase of necessities and wholesome luxuries.

It asserts also that so extensive is the check-cashing accommodation now in evidence at various points that it apparently indicates cooperation and encouragement of brewers and distillers in developing this plan of profit boosting.

Again it asserts that the most surprising development of the investigation so far has been the apparent indifference of many employers to the serious dangers involved in saloon check cashing, with the consequent tragic effects upon the life and happiness of thousands of workers' families involved.

Another phase of the liquor problem at the present time is the increasing consumption and increasing storage for future consumption of distilled and fermented liquors. Consider what has happened in the 3 years since repeal. Before national prohibition the largest consumption of alcoholic beverages occurred in 1911, amounting to a little more than 22 gallons per capita.

In the 3 years since national prohibition the per-capita consumption of legal liquor has been increasing in such a ratio as will bring this consumption to what it was in 1911 in another 3 years. The official tax-paid per-capita withdrawal figures representing liquors withdrawn from bonded warehouses for sale are as follows: About eight and a half gallons per capita in 1934; eleven and a half gallons per capita in 1935; and about thirteen and a quarter gallons per capita in 1936. This does not take into account the consumption of bootleg liquor since repeal.

Not only are we confronted with a rapidly mounting consumption of liquors but with the efforts of liquor manufacturers to insure greater consumption in the future. Vast quantities of distilled and fermented liquors are being manufactured and stored in Government warehouses for future use.

These tremendous stocks indicate the plans of the liquor traffic for the future. Misery in storage! Crime on deposit! Murder in reserve! Hell warehoused for the future destruction of mankind!

According to the study entitled "After Repeal", published by the Institute of Public Administration, an endowed institution affiliated with the New York Bureau of Municipal Research and Columbia University, the most discouraging thing in connection with the liquor traffic since repeal is that the bootlegger is still with us.

Repeal Associates, an organization including many individuals formerly connected with the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, is so disturbed by the present situation that it has sent a letter to temperance groups urging cooperation in the effort to suppress bootlegging, saying:

> Knowing your keen interest in the promotion of abstemious temperance in the use of alcoholic beverages, I take pleasure in inviting you to join in a campaign to get rid of bootlegging—a campaign in which Repeal Associates is now engaged. Despite a fundamental difference in our philosophy as to the best methods for handling the liquor problem, I am confident you will agree with us that bootleggers and the murderous criminal organizations which they support are still serious menaces to public security and personal well-being and stumbling blocks in the way of temperance education and proper control of the liquor traffic.

And yet we were told that with repeal the bootlegger would disappear.

Officials charged with the enforcement of liquor laws say that the bootlegger persists and continues to be a real problem.

Such are some of the present aspects of the liquor problem. An element of the problem which never has changed, however, and which never will change is the nature of beverage alcohol and its effects on the human body.

Because of its nature and of its effects I arraign beverage alcohol before the thought and judgment of America.

I arraign it as a narcotic poison.

I arraign it as a poison side by side with morphine, opium, and cocaine.

I arraign it as a false and pretended stimulant.

I arraign it as an agent that attacks the higher centers of the brain and blunts the normal guides of observation, attention, judgment, reflexes, and reactions.

I arraign it as a habit-forming, will-destroying drug.

I arraign it as a destroyer of life, reason, self-control, endurance, skill, and moral fiber.

I arraign it as a source of crime and waste and human degradation.

I arraign it as an executioner of soul and body.

I arraign it as a promoter of disease.

I arraign it as a barrier to thrift.

I arraign it as a threat to life and limb.

I arraign it as a producer of mental break-down and insanity.

I arraign it as the enemy of youth.

I arraign it as a wrecker of homes.

I arraign it as a defiler of motherhood and virtue.

I arraign it as a blight upon the happiness and the progress of mankind.

What will the future historian have to say concerning the constitutional change that occurred on December 5, 1933? That date marked the repeal of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution, which had outlawed liquor throughout the United States. Three years have since elapsed. Within that period a majority of the States of the Union have enacted legislation reestablishing the legalized liquor traffic under various plans of regulation and control, and the Federal Government has established its administrative system for policing the liquor traffic within those spheres of Federal activity now possessed by the National Government under the twenty-first amendment.

How is the new attempt to solve the age-long problem of beverage alcohol working? To what extent are we realizing upon the promises that the legalization of beer and wine would discourage the use of hard liquors, that repeal of national prohibition would promote temperance, would lessen the cost of administration of the liquor laws, and reduce crime? In none of the present so-called liquor-control systems is there any adequate or effective method for dealing with the social factors involved in the liquor problem.

It would be difficult to imagine a greater diversity of approach than is suggested in the liquor-control laws that have been set up since repeal of national prohibition. In 15 States the State monopoly is in force, where liquors of higher alcoholic content are sold either by State stores or by State-appointed agents. But even in the monopoly plan great differences of method are employed. In 25 States license systems are in vogue. These also vary greatly. Some provide for a central licensing authority with full power to issue licenses; others provide for the exercise of concurrent power between the State and local license boards; still others allow some types of licenses to be issued by the central authority and other types by local bodies. In six States there is State prohibition, while two others have local dispensaries. Wide variance is also shown in the method allowed for local option in those States which permit it.

No matter what type of law has been enacted since repeal by the States or by the Federal Government, the basic consideration appears to have been the collection of liquor revenues, with slight regard for social consequences. In the mad scramble for tax receipts social considerations are being ignored.

This condition challenges action. The American people did not adopt either State or National prohibition as a result of prejudice or of haste. No, Mr. President, they adopted prohibition after years of experience with the liquor traffic had left them no other choice.

Today there is still no other choice. The bootlegger is still with us, crime is still rampant, the highjacker is still present, the gangster still kills, public enemies still war upon us, kidnapers still ply their ghastly trade, while the destroyer, alcohol, converts the highways into avenues of death and mutilation.

Mr. President, it is evident that 3 years after repeal beverage alcohol is more of a danger and more of a menace to America than ever before. It is also evident that those who brought about repeal have not remedied the danger nor modified the menace. It is further evident that the evils of beverage alcohol have assumed such obviously destructive forms that an aroused public sentiment, when the case is properly presented, may well be expected to support the reenactment of Nation-wide prohibition. The widespread revolt against the eighteenth amendment was, in my judgment, due mainly to the feeling that prohibition was an effort on the part of certain groups to interfere with the private habits of others. This was perhaps the principal cause of the break-down of enforcement and of the support of the paid propaganda which ultimately produced repeal. Present events in connection with beverage alcohol show that the liquor problem involves more numerous and more serious considerations than has ever been realized by the opponents of prohibition.

The American people are becoming alarmed over the continuous and increasing slaughter of human beings in which beverage alcohol plays a continuous and ever-growing part. They will not long continue to tolerate the degradation of their most cherished traditions and ideals resulting from a traffic producing so many evils, including the spread of drink among the women of the race.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JANUARY 18, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our help in ages past and our hope for years to come, we pause to offer Thee our praise and gratitude. Grant that our spirits may chant a silent and humble refrain in memory of Thy mercy. Let Thy spirit come to every breast and bestow blessings of peace. Graciously remember our firesides and the loved ones of our home circles; may they be kept very near and dear to the heart of our Heavenly Father. We pray Thee to bear with our infirmities and fortify us against error and make us strong, wise, and urgent men for today. When the way is uncertain and confused, do Thou show forth the light of Thy wisdom. Without fear or hesitation may our devotion to the public good be without stint or reservation. Sustain us with the counsel of the Lord. In our Savior's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, January 14, 1937, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

The resolution was agreed to.

ELECTIONS TO HOUSE COMMITTEES

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution for immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] is entitled to recognition. Does he yield for this purpose?

Mr. LUCE. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

House Resolution 70

Resolved, That the following-named Members be, and they are hereby, elected members of the standing committees of the House of Representatives, as follows:

Merchant Marine and Fisheries: VINCENT F. HARRINGTON, Iowa.

War Claims: HAROLD G. MOSIER, Ohio; J. HAROLD FLANNERY, Pennsylvania.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

ing committees of the House of Representatives on Insular Affairs, Agriculture, Labor, and Territories.

The resolution was agreed to.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that following the address of my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] I may be allowed to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, on January 11 I obtained permission to extend my remarks by inserting an address of the Honorable Marriner S. Eccles, Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, delivered at the Seventh New England Bank Management Conference of the New England Council, in Boston, November 13, 1936. I have been notified that it would take 3¼ pages of the RECORD to insert this address and that it would cost $147.

Mr. Speaker, I now renew my request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS

Mr. KVALE presented himself at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces that on January 13, pursuant to the authority conferred upon him by House Resolution 39, Seventy-fifth Congress, he appointed Hon. William E. Thorpe, county judge of Greene County, N. Y., to administer the oath of office to Hon. PHILIP ARNOLD GOODWIN at Coxsackie, N. Y. The Chair has since learned that Judge Thorpe is not available to perform this duty, and therefore designates Hon. Frederick G. Traver, county judge of Ulster County, N. Y., to administer the oath of office to Mr. GOODWIN at Coxsackie, N. Y.

COLUMBUS, TEX., January 14, 1937.

Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,
Speaker, House of Representatives, United States,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: In accordance with your designation of me, pursuant to House Resolution No. 50, adopted by the House of Representatives, to administer the oath of office to Representative-elect JOSEPH J. MANSFIELD, of the Ninth District of Texas, I have the honor to report that on the 14th day of January 1937, at the city of Columbus, county of Colorado, State of Texas, I administered the oath of office to Mr. MANSFIELD, form prescribed by section 1757 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, being the form of oath administered to Members of the House of Representatives, to which Mr. MANSFIELD subscribed. I have the honor to be

Yours respectfully,

HENRY BUESCHER,
County Judge, Colorado County, Tex.

HON. JOSEPH J. MANSFIELD

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 73

Whereas JOSEPH J. MANSFIELD, a Representative from the State of Texas from the Ninth District thereof, has been unable to appear in person to be sworn as a Member of this House, but has sworn to and subscribed to the oath of office before Hon. Henry Buescher, county judge of Colorado County, Tex., authorized by resolution of this House to administer the oath, and the said oath of office has been presented in his behalf to the House, and there being no contest or question as to his election: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the said oath be accepted and received by the House as the oath of office of the said JOSEPH J. MANSFIELD as a Member of this House.

The resolution was agreed to.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of the address to be delivered by the gentlemen from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE and Mr. TREADWAY], I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of the special orders previously entered, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 7 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FADDIS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] may extend his remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech made by him on the subject of the Free Port of New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under a special order for today, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-nine Members present; not a quorum.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 5]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. NORTON). Three hundred and seventy-five Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. COOPER, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] yield for a moment?

Mr. LUCE. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

DEATH OF HON. ROBERT D. CAREY

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Speaker, it is my painful duty this morning to announce to the House of Representatives the death of Hon. Robert D. Carey, who until January 3 of this year was a United States Senator from the State of Wyoming.

Senator Carey served with distinction as Governor of Wyoming from 1919 to 1923 and as United States Senator from the State of Wyoming from 1931 to 1937. During his entire mature life he has been an outstanding citizen and a leader in public life within the State of Wyoming and in the Nation. He carried on the fine traditions of public service in the State and Nation laid down before him by his father, the late Joseph M. Carey, who was a Territorial Delegate to the Congress of the United States, a Governor of the State of Wyoming, and a United States Senator from the State of Wyoming.

Senator Carey was a leader, an illustrious and outstanding citizen, and statesman, and Wyoming and the Nation have lost a very great deal in his untimely death.

The SPEAKER. Under a special order of the House for today, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, when George Washington gave his first message to Congress there was formal reply by the Senate and by the House after the fashion of Parliament.

This practice continued through Adams' administration, but was dropped with that of Jefferson; yet the President's message continued to give opportunity, as was the case with the Speech from the Throne in Parliament, for debate covering all manner of questions. This general debate has now come to be confined to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Nevertheless, the practice of paying attention to the messages of Presidents and Governors might well be resumed in some form.

In my own State it was abandoned about 1825, and I imagine it appears in no other American legislature today. The custom now is to refer the messages of Presidents and governors to the various committees concerned, where usually they are promply pigeonholed and never come to life.

This lack of regard and respect for what a Chief Executive may say strikes me as unfortunate; therefore this morning I am going to make an address in the nature of a reply to the Speech from the Throne. I shall not be presumptuous enough to think I reflect the sentiment of the whole House, perhaps even a big majority of the House, although I hope it will find sympathy in every man here trained in the practice of the law. I do not intend to discuss the whole of the President's message, but shall confine myself to what he had to say about constitutionality and the courts.

First it may be well to have an idea of what has taken place. At the outset, Presidents undertook the task of passing upon constitutionality. Washington's first veto was on that ground, and it was said that he acted upon the advice of Jefferson, who thought that otherwise his power of veto would fall into disuse by his not exercising it and that the people would think that it was of no consequence. Adams did not veto nor did Jefferson. There were seven vetos under Madison and Monroe; six of them were on the ground of unconstitutionality. One by Madison concerned a topic as big in the eyes of the people then as any New Deal measure today, the question being as to the constitutional limits on appropriations for internal improvements, such as roads and canals.

By the way, I would remind the House that when the Virginia-Kentucky resolutions were passed in 1798 they brought up this question of constitutionality, the issue arousing the interest of the whole country. The complaint of Jefferson, Madison, and most of the other Democrats of the time, then known as Anti-Federalists, was not that the Supreme Court had pronounced laws unconstitutional but that it had failed so to do. Indeed, the Court avoided the question of constitutionality, and only once in its first 50 years did it rule that a statute was unconstitutional. Meanwhile Jackson had vetoed the bank bill, partly on constitutional grounds, starting a controversy that shook every corner of the Nation. Since then, Presidents and courts alike have thought it proper to test the constitutionality of statutes.

If gentlemen desire to inform themselves of what has taken place, I advise them to send to the Library of Congress for an exceedingly valuable report entitled "Provisions of Federal Law Held Unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States." Each Member or any other person may secure additional copies from the Government Printing Office for 15 cents apiece.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Has the gentleman made a careful analysis of the document to which he makes reference; and if so, is it, in his judgment, a very good job? In other words, has the gentleman made a careful analysis of it?

Mr. LUCE. I have.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman think it is a fair statement of the problem with which he is undertaking to deal?

Mr. LUCE. No question of that was aroused in my mind.

Mr. COX. I will say to the gentleman I have examined it, and it has impressed me as being a very good job.

Mr. LUCE. It proved very helpful to me, and by reason of its facts, if for nothing else, it furnishes easy access to the history of the problem. I found in it nothing controversial or partisan, and it seemed to me comprehensive enough for all practical purposes.

By the tabulation therein you will find that the Supreme Court in 147 years has in 76 cases held statutes unconstitutional. Only in 10 cases have there been decisions by a majority of 1; in only two more by a majority of 2.

The Court has always studiously avoided, if it could, applying the test. I might give you quotation after quotation from Justices in the course of the last 50 years laying that down as the practice of the Court, but one that is typical will suffice—the words of Justice Sutherland in the Atkins against Children's Hospital case:

> This Court, by an unbroken line of decisions from Chief Justice Marshall to the present day, has steadily adhered to the rule that every possible presumption is in favor of the validity of an act of Congress until overcome beyond rational doubt.

Since the present Chief Executive was inaugurated there have been 12 decisions where statutes have been held unconstitutional.

I have here a memorandum also from the legislative research service of the Library—a service, by the way, with which the newer Members should acquaint themselves.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCMILLAN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCE. This being granted, I will add to the transcript of my remarks a list of the Supreme Court decisions involving the constitutionality of legislation enacted since March 4, 1933.

These decisions have much interested the people, particularly those of them who concern themselves with the principles of government and the application of the Constitution in our Federal system.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Is it not a fact that every decision the gentleman is speaking about was rendered prior to November 3, 1936?

Mr. LUCE. The list in question was brought up to date.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Is it not a fact that the major portion of those decisions to which the gentleman refers were rendered prior to the time of the election?

Mr. LUCE. Of course.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. And is it not a further fact that the members of the gentleman's party throughout the United States emphasized every single thing the gentleman is talking about here this morning, and is it not a further fact that the American people repudiated every contention that you make?

Mr. LUCE. I regret that the gentleman should interpolate into a serious discussion of fact, opinions which I do not entertain or share with him.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Was not the verdict of the American people rendered on November 3, after the same arguments had been made that you and the gentleman who preceded you here the other day made in the House?

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has anticipated what I am going to say.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Oh, no.

Mr. LUCE. I have as yet made no argument——

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I realize the gentleman has not and the American people realized that the Republicans had no argument to make last fall and that is why they rendered the decision which they did.

Mr. LUCE. Now, Mr. Speaker, regretting this somewhat untimely interruption, I would go on with the subject to which I shall address myself, the foundation, simply, having been laid, for I would discuss some sentences in the address of the President. He said:

> With a better understanding of our purposes and a more intelligent recognition of our needs as a nation, it is not to be assumed that there will be prolonged failure to bring legislative and judicial action into closer harmony.

The phrase about "intelligent recognition" is so worded as to leave it uncertain whether the President wished on the part of the Supreme Court more intelligent recognition of our needs as a nation, and it is to be hoped that he did not intend such a superfluous affront. "Understanding of our purposes" would seem clearly to have been sought from the Supreme Court. It is hard to see how the words can mean anything but that the Court, when interpreting the Constitution, shall pay attention to the purpose of laws.

The province of the Court is to determine the meaning of what the Constitution says. This is so well established that I feel it hardly necessary to back it up with quotations, and yet a few may well be given to show their explicit nature.

Particularly I call attention to what Mr. Justice Holmes said in the Minimum Wage case. Mr. Justice Holmes—and I am proud of the fact that he came from my State—perhaps the greatest lawyer of our time, himself a liberal of liberals, the foremost of dissenters from his colleagues on the Supreme Bench, put the matter with his usual pithiness in what he had to say about the Minimum Wage case—

The criterion of constitutionality is not whether we believe the law to be for the public good.

I repeat that—said by the greatest liberal who ever sat on our bench:

The criterion of constitutionality is not whether we believe the law to be for the public good.

Gentlemen, of course, who have strong partisan predilections may question my quotation of another man, because he happens to be a Republican and was a candidate for the Presidency of the United States; yet I think there is no man here who will deny that Charles Evans Hughes is a great lawyer. Here is what he said:

The good sought in unconstitutional legislation is an insidious feature, because it leads citizens and legislators of good purpose to promote it without thought of the serious breach it will make in the ark of our covenant, or the harm which will come from breaking down recognized standards.

Said Justice White in the Employers' Liability cases—

In testing the constitutionality of the act, we must confine ourselves to the power to pass it, and may not consider evils which it is supposed will arise from the execution of the law, whether they be real or imaginary.

If it be charged that the present membership of the Supreme Court has, however, not followed that course, permit me to remind you that of the two outstanding decisions that aroused the wrath of the New Deal the Schechter case destroying the N. R. A. was unanimously decided and the Butler case destroying the processing tax had the two-thirds vote that some men would have put into the Constitution.

In the Schechter case every judge acted on the principle that the purpose to be secured was not a prerogative of the Federal Government. Yet here was a purpose to be accomplished that apparently was wished by an overwhelming majority of the American people. Those within the sound of my voice who were in New York and saw that parade going up Broadway will recall the enthusiasm with which the people apparently had approved this measure. They will remember the blue eagle on our stationery and in the windows of our shops. They will recall how general and hearty seemed to be the approbation for this thing everywhere, yet after the Supreme Court had killed the blue eagle and had buried it in the potter's field, with none so poor to do it reverence, all enthusiasm vanished. No longer are men parading our streets, no longer are unsightly emblems disfiguring our stationery. New Dealers do not even come here with any measure looking to accomplish the same purpose, perhaps because they are satisfied that they were wrong and thankful that the Supreme Court was right.

It is common to urge enactment that has been decided to be of an unconstitutional nature, upon the ground of the general-welfare clause in the Constitution. Mr. Justice Sutherland, in Carter against Carter, decided only last May, held what I believe has been the practically unanimous opinion of the Justices, reaching conclusions with the help of the wisest, most intelligent, most earnest counsel to be secured, that the general-welfare clause does not permit legislation of every kind that can be thought to be for the common good. Mr. Justice Sutherland said:

The Constitutional Convention made no grant of authority to Congress to legislate substantially for the general welfare—

That was also laid down in United States against Butler—and no such authority exists, save as the general welfare may be promoted by the exercise of the powers which are granted.

This was not questioned by the dissenting Justices. The case almost wholly concerned questions as to what the granted powers are.

Further, in a case decided only a few days ago, it is shown that the Court does not seek pretext for nullifying social-justice legislation. Under the decision, delivered on the 4th of this January, in Kuehner against Irving Trust Co., there was upheld unanimously a provision of the Bankruptcy Act of 1934 which limits the claims of landlords for indemnity under covenants of a lease to 3 years' rent. This was upheld as not in violation of the fifth amendment, which reads:

nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

Nevertheless, the President said, again to read his language:

It is not to be assumed that there will be prolonged failure to bring legislative and judicial action into closer harmony.

And he based that upon "a better understanding" of our purpose. As I have said, purpose as such has never been taken into account by our Supreme Court. Our Justices again and again have declared it ought not to be taken into account. Yet the Chief Executive in effect demands that the Court take into account the purpose of legislation.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. Does not the gentleman think that the President's idea might be along the line of either Jefferson's or Hamilton's? Jefferson favored frequent amendment to the Constitution and a thorough overhauling of the Constitution every generation.

Hamilton said they should follow the language of the Constitution, but suited to the needs of the American people. Is that not what the President means when he says the Supreme Court should look to what the best interests of the American people are?

Mr. LUCE. However, the gentleman overlooks the fact—I will just read the sentence again, that it may be clearly understood.

With a better understanding of our purposes and a more intelligent recognition of our needs as a nation, it is not to be assumed that there will be prolonged failure to bring legislative and judicial action into closer harmony.

You will see the meaning is that the courts ought to work in harmony with the executive and legislative branches, and to that alone I am addressing my remarks.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. COX. Might it also mean that Congress should have better regard for the letter of the Constitution? [Applause.]

Mr. LUCE. Such implication was not the one that came to the minds of the people. It is not the one that I drew. As for myself, I was amazed and alarmed when I heard that proposal, for I have never heard more dangerous words spoken within the walls of this Chamber; never heard a doctrine advanced that threatened to do more to undermine the Republic than that which was implied in this language. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Is it not a fact that the decision rendered by the Supreme Court in the famous gold case was a unanimous decision by all members of the Court?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Is it not a fact that if the Attorney General of the United States was to be believed, he made this statement before that Court, that if the Court did not hold that the gold contract was invalid, it would increase the indebtedness of the United States something like $35,000,000,000? And do you not think, having in mind just exactly Jefferson's idea of how the Constitution should be construed, that that Court knew, if it did not hold a contract not a contract, the indebtedness of the United States would almost be doubled, and that was one of the reasons that prompted a unanimous decision on the part of all members of the Court?

Mr. LUCE. I am profoundly grateful to the gentleman for bringing out once more the proposition I wish to lay down, that the Court has no right to consider what will be the effect of legislation.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Well, that is not the question.

Mr. LUCE. That is the question I am talking about, and the only one to which I wish to address myself.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. But is it not a fact that in your own mind you know, and every other American citizen knows, that the Court did keep the needs of the American people in mind when it rendered that gold decision?

Mr. LUCE. If I did, sir, my words would be vain and idle, and I should humbly apologize to the House and I should be ashamed of the Supreme Court of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The gentleman assumes that the remarks of the President were directed at the courts, with respect to the Court being brought into harmony with the Congress. I think the gentleman is correct, because the President did commend Congress, although the Supreme Court had held unconstitutional 12 of its acts, and had no criticism, but all praise for the Congress, and I think we have a right to assume that the remarks were directed at the Court to bring it into harmony with the legislative and executive branches.

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman is wholly, completely, and absolutely right. There is no other deduction whatever that can be drawn from this language, save that he meant to scold the Supreme Court.

Now, look at what would be the results if the doctrine were otherwise; that is to say, if the courts were to consider purposes; if the Court were to bear in mind that in sustaining the constitutionality of an act it would bring $10,000 or $10,000,000 or a thousand million dollars benefit to some, or injury of that same extent to others. See what would follow if that principle were embodied in our form of government. Then the Court, with its nine members, would share in the powers of the Chief Executive in passing upon the merit of measures. Their approval would be like the signing of a bill and their disapproval like the Executive's veto, with the difference that the President's veto can be overruled by a two-thirds vote of Congress, while that of the Court would be final.

So far as the veto is legislative, the Court would make the law. Of course, this could be met by changing the Constitution so as to give the right of appeal from the Court to somebody—to the President or Congress or to the electorate. Whether that should be done is not the instant matter. The matter that does confront us so gravely is the President's declaration that the judicial branch is asked by the people—note that, sir—that the judicial branch is asked by the people to take its part in making democracy successful.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCMILLAN). The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts may have 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCE. The President's declaration that the judicial branch is asked by the people to do its part in making democracy succeed implies that the Court has the duty denied by Justice Holmes and that it has failed to perform such duty. The fact is that it has performed its full duty when it decides what the Constitution means; and it would fail in its duty if it shaped that decision to meet the views of anybody else. [Applause.] Disclosure of the President's opposing idea was the most dangerous and damaging element in what he said. To lead the country to think that a judge may properly take into account the shifting gusts of public opinion is indefensible. We picture Justice as blindfolded. She must not only be blind but deaf; she must not listen to a word spoken outside the four walls of her chamber.

Would any man here discuss a pending case with a judge in the absence of counsel from both sides? Is there a man here who would broach the subject at a dinner table where a judge sat? Who does not know that if he talked about a pending case with a juryman and it were found out, he would be haled before the bench for contempt of court? Once let it be thought that judges should give heed to press or public, to editors or electors, to preachers or politicians, to reformers or reactionaries—that judges should bend judgment and wrench conscience, should be subservient and complaisant, then no man would be safe. Then from the grounds that surround the Capitol there should be removed the only statue we see fit to permit, the statue of John Marshall, fearless defender of the Supreme Court's obligation to protect the public from unconstitutional statutes. Then from the face of the new Supreme Court Building, with the purity of its purposes and practices typified by the whiteness of its walls, we should blot out that pledge to the Nation: "Equal Justice Under Law." [Applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. I do not want to let the matter pass on the assurance of the gentleman from Montana. Whenever the gold-contract decision is brought up on the floor of this House, it should be added that the Supreme Court yielded to the fact that we might welch on our contracts, and yet, though rendering that decision, they cursed the proceedings.

Mr. CONNERY and Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana rose.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 4 minutes.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, did not the President in his message refer to the Supreme Court in terms substantially that he would like to see the Supreme Court give a more enlightened interpretation of the Constitution as the Constitution stands?

Mr. LUCE. The word he used was "intelligent."

Mr. CONNERY. That he would like to see the Supreme Court give an intelligent interpretation of the Constitution.

Mr. LUCE. Yes. Does the gentleman approve such language in an address to our most honored institution?

Mr. CONNERY. In my judgment, the Supreme Court is as human as anybody else.

Mr. LUCE. But was that what was meant by "intelligent"?

Mr. CONNERY. The Court?

Mr. LUCE. The Court.

Mr. CONNERY. Personally I do not think the Court were very intelligent in some of their decisions. [Laughter and applause.] Take, for instance, the language of Justice Stone, a member of the Supreme Court, when he said in one case that the Court were giving their economic opinions and not their opinions on the Constitution.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. MAY. As I understand the learned gentleman's address this afternoon, it is that he bases his remarks on the statement by the President in his annual message to the Congress on the subject of the Court's getting away from the long-existing rule of constitutional interpretation based upon a long line of precedents, getting over to an attitude of being more liberal on the social and general objectives of the Congress. As I understand it, the general-welfare clause is not a mandate to Congress to legislate; that the Court adopts the rule of construing the Constitution as a pattern for the Legislature; and that social or any other objective is not considered in the matter of determining whether it fits into the pattern.

Mr. LUCE. I so understand.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. FADDIS. Is it not true that the Constitution of the United States gives the Congress the power through the general-welfare clause—just as definitely as it gives the Supreme Court any power—to pass upon the constitutionality of an act of Congress?

Mr. LUCE. If the gentleman would read the decisions abstracted in the document to which I referred and would then go to the Library, as I did, and read the decisions in full, he would find that there is no ground whatever, in the opinions of the long line of judges who for 147 years have been interpreting the Constitution—there is no opinion that there is any such power as the gentleman thinks in the general-welfare clause of the Constitution.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit a further interruption, the gentleman misunderstands my point. I am not looking at the Constitution as the Court has formed it by their interpretations; I am looking at the language of the instrument itself.

Mr. LUCE. Possibly the gentleman is more learned than the Court.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. FORD of California. Is there a word in the Constitution of the United States that gives the Court the right to abrogate or declare unconstitutional any law that Congress passes? Furthermore, does not the Constitution vest in the Congress all legislative powers? The only statement in the Constitution that in any wise limits the power of Congress to legislate is the provision giving the veto power to the President. This veto power is specifically given to the President and not to the Supreme Court.

Mr. LUCE. I am, of course, aware that the doctrine the gentleman presents is not novel and is adhered to by sundry persons in various parts of the country; but the great body of opinion has always been that the view entertained by the gentleman is wrong; the great body of opinion as formed by the courts, by the Congress, and by the Nation has been that it is the duty of the Court to declare unconstitutional any statute going beyond the powers granted to Congress in the Constitution.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Throughout all the years that has been the interpretation of the Constitution given by the liberal and reactionary members of the Court, has it not?

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. The gentleman who just previously interrupted said all legislative power was vested in the Congress of the United States. The Constitution does not read that way. The Constitution states, "All legislative power herein granted." All judicial power is vested in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. LUCE. I might add if it were true that all legislative power rested in the Congress, then the provision about the veto power, which distinctly gives the President a share in legislation, is in contradiction.

SUPREME COURT DECISIONS INVOLVING THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF LEGISLATION ENACTED SINCE MARCH 4, 1933

I. In the following cases the Supreme Court has considered the validity of laws passed since March 4, 1933, and held the same unconstitutional in whole or in part:

1. Booth v. United States (291 U. S. 339 (unanimous)): Provision in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act of June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 307, sec. 13), reducing the salary of retired Federal judges who under section 260 of the Judicial Code remained subject to call to judicial service.

2. Lynch v. United States (292 U. S. 571 (unanimous)): Part of section 17 of the Economy Act of March 20, 1933 (48 Stat. 11), repealing all laws granting or pertaining to yearly renewable term insurance.

3. Panama Refining Co. v. Ryan (293 U. S. 388 (one dissent)): Section 9 (c) of the National Industrial Recovery Act of June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 200), dealing with oil regulation.

4. Perry v. United States (294 U. S. 330 (four Justices dissenting from the judgment denying recovery and a fifth concurring in the judgment but dissenting on the constitutional holding)): The gold-clause resolution of June 5, 1933 (48 Stat. 113, sec. 1), so far as applicable to the gold clause in Government obligations (but recovery was denied because plaintiff did not show "damages").

5. Railroad Retirement Board v. the Alton Railroad Co., et al. (295 U. S. 330 (four dissents)): The Railroad Retirement Act of June 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 1283, ch. 868).

6. Schechter Poultry Corporation v. United States (295 U. S. 495 (unanimous)): The code provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act (48 Stat. 195, title I, in part).

7. Louisville Joint Stock Land Bank v. Radford (295 U. S. 555 (unanimous)): The Frazier-Lemke Farm Bankruptcy Act of June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1289, ch. 869).

8. Hopkins Federal Savings & Loan Association v. Cleary (296 U. S. 315 (unanimous)): Section 5 (i) of the Home Owners' Loan Act as amended April 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 646, sec. 6), providing for the conversion of State loan associations into Federal associations upon vote of 51 percent of the votes cast at a legal meeting called for the purpose.

9. United States v. Butler (297 U. S. 1 (three dissents)): The agricultural processing taxes under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of May 12, 1933 (48 Stat. 31).

10. Rickert Rice Mills v. Fontenot (297 U. S. 110 (unanimous)): The Agricultural Adjustment Act amendments of August 24, 1935 (49 Stat. 750, title I, in part).

11. Carter v. Carter Coal Company (298 U. S. 238 (four Justices dissenting in part)): The Guffey Coal Act of August 30, 1935 (49 Stat. 991, ch. 824), regulating mining and distribution of bituminous coal.

12. Ashton v. Cameron County Water Improvement District (298 U. S. 513 (four dissents)); The Municipal Bankruptcy Act of May 24, 1934 (48 Stat. 798), adding chapter 60, sections 78–80 to the Bankruptcy Act and authorizing readjustment of indebtedness by political subdivisions of States.

II. In the following cases the Supreme Court has passed on the validity of acts passed since March 4, 1933, and sustained the legislation:

1. Woodson v. Deutsche, etc., Vormals (292 U. S. 449 (unanimous)): Act of March 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 510), restricting suits against the Alien Property Custodian, the Treasurer of the United States, or the United States for recovery of deductions for administrative expenses made from alien property held by the Custodian—upheld against the argument that the United States may not constitutionally deprive former alien enemies of property rights hitherto vested in them.

2. Norman v. B. & O. Railroad Company (294 U. S. 240 (four dissents)): The Gold Clause Resolution (48 Stat. 113, sec. 1) abrogating gold-clause stipulations as applied to private contracts.

3. Nortz v. United States (294 U. S. 317 (four dissents)): The gold-clause resolution, in its requirement that holders of gold certificates accept therefor legal tender currency of equal face amount.

4. United States v. Wood (no. 34, decided Dec. 7, 1936; Law Ed. Adv. Ops., v. 81, p. 80 (three dissents)): Act of August 22, 1935 (49 Stat. 682, ch. 605), specifically making Government employees, pensioners, etc., in the District of Columbia subject to jury duty.

5. United States v. Curtiss-Wright Export Corporation (no. 98, decided Dec. 21, 1936 (one Justice dissenting)): Joint resolution of May 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 811, ch. 365), authorizing the President to restrict sale of munitions to countries engaged in war in the Chaco, upheld as against the argument that it constituted a delegation of legislative power to the President.

6. Kuehner v. Irving Trust Company (no. 354, decided Jan. 4, 1937 (unanimous)): Part of section 77B, subsection (b) (10) of the Bankruptcy Act enacted June 7, 1934 (48 Stat. 911, 915), which limits claims of landlords for indemnity under covenants in a lease, to 3 years' rent, upheld as not in violation of the fifth amendment.

7. Kentucky Whip and Collar Company v. Illinois Central Railroad Company (no. 138, decided Jan. 4, 1937 (unanimous)): The Ashurst-Sumners Act of July 24, 1935 (49 Stat. 494), prohibiting interstate transportation of convict-made goods intended to be used, etc., in violation of State law, upheld as a regulation of interstate commerce, against the argument that it violated the fifth amendment and constituted a delegation of legislative power.

8. United States v. Hudson (no. 97 (decided Jan. 11, 1937), unanimous): Section 8 of the Silver Purchase Act of June 19, 1934 (48 Stat. 1178, ch. 674), taxing certain transfers of silver within 35 days of passage, upheld, in its retroactive operation, as not in violation of the fifth amendment.

III. In several cases the Supreme Court has specifically refused to pass on the constitutionality of legislation, deciding the cases before them on other grounds, that is:

Wilshire Oil Co. v. United States (295 U. S. 100), where the Court held that a decision of a circuit court of appeals on the validity of the National Industrial Recovery Act was unnecessary, and refused to review the question on certificate.

Moor v. Texas & New Orleans Railroad Co. (297 U. S. 101), the Court dismissed a writ of certiorari to review this refusal of the lower court to grant a mandatory injunction to compel carriage of cotton, on which the tax under the Cotton Control Act had not been paid, where plaintiff claimed the act was unconstitutional.

In a further case the Court held that a decision of a circuit court of appeals holding invalid subsection (b) (5) of section 77B of the Bankruptcy Act, was "premature", and affirmed the judgment on another "entirely adequate ground" without expressing any opinion on the constitutionality of the Bankruptcy Act:

Tennessee Publishing Co. v. American National Bank (299 U. S. 18 (unanimous)).

In Ashwander v. Tennessee Valley Authority (297 U. S. 283), the Court carefully confined its opinion to the particular contract before it, which called for sale of power generated at the Wilson Dam, constructed under the National Defense Act of 1916. "We express no opinion as to the validity * * * of the T. V. A. Act or of the claims made in the pronouncements of the Authority" apart from the particular contract.

IV. Two cases involving the validity of action by the President (Humphrey's Executor v. United States (295 U. S. 602)) and by the Securities Exchange Commission (Jones v. Securities Exchange Commission (298 U. S. 1)) are to be distinguished in that no question of the constitutionality of legislation was involved in the decisions.

W. C. GILBERT.

JANUARY 15, 1937.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. Under a special order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I realize how difficult it is for me to hold the interest of the Members of the House after such a scholarly address as has just been delivered by my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], but I think there is a subject of sufficient importance to warrant my calling it to the attention of the House at this time.

On January 8 the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], introduced House Joint Resolution 96, calling for a 3-year extension of the reciprocal-trade agreements, which expire in June. On Saturday we were informed that the hearings on this resolution would commence on Thursday of this week, and the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee has courteously informed me this morning that the first 2 days of the hearing will be devoted to the proponents of the measure, undoubtedly the representatives of the administration, and that the opposition will be heard a week from today. It is to this fact I desire to call the attention of the House at this time.

Mr. Speaker, it will be difficult to properly present the opposition to this extension owing to the fact that all statistics and opportunity for publicity are in the hands of the administration. This resolution is a simple little thing, calling for an extension of 3 years of a so-called emergency authorization. When the act was originally passed the testimony before our committee called for its adoption largely as an emergency measure. I assume that the emergency today is pretty well over, if we are to believe the representatives of the Democratic Party. Now, they come in and ask for an extension for 3 years, and I wish, therefore, to call the attention of my colleagues and the country to the fact that the opposition to this extension of reciprocal treaty-making authority will be heard by the Ways and Means Committee in their committee room in the House Office Building 1 week from today, January 25.

It was very difficult at the time this bill was first before the Congress to get testimony in opposition. I will not go into the detailed reasons therefor, but they are very apparent. Later on, of course, there will be opportunity to discuss this measure when it comes before the committee and before the House for consideration. While those in favor of the resolution have the entire personnel of the Government to furnish them with arguments and figures, the opponents must depend on the industry of the country to make their case clear before the committee. So I appeal to the Members of the House who represent industrial and agricultural districts to call the attention of their constituents to the importance of this measure in their own interests.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I would prefer not to, but I shall yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. My friend the gentleman from Massachusetts stated they would have to depend on industry. As a matter of fact, let us take agriculture. There are so many imports coming into the country now in the way of agricultural products that it has become a battle of agriculture against these foreign imports and not industry.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes. May I call attention that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILCOX] has proposed an exemption for the agricultural products of Florida from the operation of the reciprocal treaties. If it is fair for the products of Florida to be excluded from the working of the reciprocal treaties and the reduction of tariff rates thereunder, why should not the industries of New England have the same privilege of exemption? Why should we have any reciprocal treaties at all?

Mr. CONNERY. The reason I bring this matter to my colleague's attention is due to the fact that New England is always accused of fighting for the protective tariff, as if it did not affect the rest of the United States, but now that it is getting to pinch the toes of the South and Southwest perhaps we will get some drastic action in reference to this matter.

Mr. TREADWAY. I hope the Representatives of the South and West who are Members of this body and now control it exclusively will bear these things in mind when the extension resolution comes upon this floor for consideration.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does not the gentleman think we should also bear in mind the views of the people as expressed on November 3 last? These reciprocal treaties were an issue in the campaign after the Republican candidate's speech on the subject.

Mr. TREADWAY. Let us not get into a political discussion of that feature. Issues did not cut much of a figure in the election. But this problem is too serious to bring up that sort of argument. If the gentleman wants to argue that, I will be glad to argue it with him; but I want to take this time to discuss reciprocal treaties rather than to argue the issues decided in the election.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman addressed himself to the Republican Members of the House and told them to get their friends here. That is bringing politics into the discussion.

Mr. TREADWAY. The reason I said that is because the administration has its people here all the time and has all the Departments of the Government at its disposal. It has every bit of publicity possible. How many people are employed in these various departments simply to put out publicity and propaganda on behalf of the administration?

Mr. WILCOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. WILCOX. Inasmuch as the gentleman has referred to my position, may I set the gentleman right? The amendment which I offered does not seek to exempt Florida products, but it does seek to establish a tariff that will equalize the difference in the cost of production of all agricultural products.

Mr. TREADWAY. Why, that is the Republican theory exactly and has been since the year 1. Certainly we join with the gentleman and shake hands with him most heartily from New England to Florida. We have always advocated the theory of difference in cost of production. Thank you, sir.

Mr. WILCOX. If the Republican Party takes that position——

Mr. TREADWAY. We have never taken any other.

Mr. WILCOX. I may say to the gentleman I think that position, as I have stated it, is eminently correct.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman should have run on the Republican ticket and should be sitting on this side of the aisle if he believes in that principle.

Mr. WILCOX. But the statement of my position on that economic question does not give the gentleman the privilege of charging me with Republican inclinations.

Mr. TREADWAY. Well, the gentleman entertains Republican doctrines. There is no better Republican doctrine than the one the gentleman has stated.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. Does the gentleman know that the assembly and senate of the State of the gentleman from Florida protested the iniquitous character of these trade agreements?

Mr. TREADWAY. Then the gentleman from Florida is carrying out the wishes of his people.

Mr. CULKIN. And does the gentleman know that agriculture in its organized phase, both North and South, has protested the application of the doctrine of these trade agreements and especially the favored-nation clause?

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask the gentleman if that sort of thing has any kind of effect when the administration gives orders to the majority of this House?

Mr. CULKIN. I think the House should listen, and I think the House will listen.

Mr. TREADWAY. I realize that, but the gentleman knows what the experience has been during the past 4 years.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. I have not had an opportunity to read the resolution introduced by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]. Does it continue the present indefensible method of negotiating these trade agreements by star-chamber proceedings?

Mr. TREADWAY. It is most general in its terms, simply extending for 3 years the present law with respect to the making of these treaties.

Mr. KNUTSON. And it proposes to continue to ignore Congress?

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, absolutely.

Mr. KNUTSON. Well, I shall be against it. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CONNERY. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will permit, I want to say to my colleague that I am sorry he tried to put the gentleman from Florida in the Republican Party——

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, no; we need him.

Mr. CONNERY. I simply want to welcome him as another Democrat like myself, and we will join the Democrats of Massachusetts and Florida to fight this iniquitous law.

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly; and there is no more important fight to the American people than the fight for the protection of American industry and agriculture and the development of the principle of adjusting the difference in cost of production at home and abroad. I understand this is what the gentleman from Florida favors, as well as my colleague from Massachusetts. Therefore, that branch of the Democratic Party which they and their associates so ably represent should vote against the extension of this reciprocal trade agreement law, and I think they will.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. I am interested in the gentleman's invitation to bring on witnesses here in opposition to the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act. There are many of them in Oregon who would like to so testify, because it has done us a tremendous amount of damage, but I would like to ask the gentleman, who is a member of the Ways and Means Committee, frankly, whether he thinks, in view of the political set-up of the Ways and Means Committee, there is really any chance of stopping the extension of the reciprocal trade agreement law?

Mr. TREADWAY. I think that is a very pertinent question and I am very pleased to answer it if I may ask the other gentleman to wait just a moment. I think the question is very worthy of answer, not meaning to imply that they all are not, but I think this is a very important question. We have 7 votes in the Ways and Means Committee, while the majority has 18. This, of itself, answers the question of the gentleman from Oregon in one particular. We cannot expect to get far in our opposition. The gentleman says his people have been injured by these reciprocal-trade agreements——

Mr. MOTT. Our shingle makers have been injured, our dairymen have been injured, our sawmills have been injured, as well as all others who have come in contact with these treaties.

Mr. TREADWAY. I think it is very important, even though we know the verdict in advance, that there should be a record made of the exact situation. I hope the gentleman from Oregon will communicate promptly with his people to see if somebody cannot be sent on here, even from the far State of Oregon, to appear before the Ways and Means Committee a week from today to state the situation, because it is only as we get the people themselves to testify that we can hope, in any way, to make a record in opposition to the dictation of the administration.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MILLARD. Is it not a fact that in other countries they have to report back to their legislative body for its approval, while in this country they do not?

Mr. TREADWAY. While I am always pleased to answer the inquiries of my colleagues on either side of the House, if I had not been interrupted by too many questions I should already have referred to that very feature. I have introduced two privileged resolutions, but by a courteous arrangement with one of the members of the committee, they will not be called up by me until it is convenient. One asks for the precedents, if any, for treaties being made and not confirmed by the United States, and the other resolution calls for information as to which of the treaties thus far entered into have been subject to ratification by the legislative bodies of the foreign countries concerned. In other words, I quote the Secretary of State in saying that one of the arguments in favor of the original legislation was that the emergency should not require these treaties to go to our Senate because other legislative bodies in the countries that were negotiating these treaties had placed authority in the executive branch.

I think the record will show, if that question is answered, that with possibly one or two exceptions not one of those foreign countries was allowed to close these negotiations without confirmation by the legislative body, either before or after the effective date of the agreement.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KNUTSON. Can the gentleman tell the House what necessity there is for the extension of this emergency jurisdiction?

Mr. TREADWAY. I think that question could be well asked of the opposite side. I have never seen in all this great propaganda that has been put forth a statement of the amount of the imports and exports. I will ask the gentleman from Minnesota if he has ever seen any statement of the increase in imports into this country?

Mr. KNUTSON. I will say to the gentleman that if the record of the increase of imports into this country was made public, and made available to the membership of this House, the resolution of the gentleman from North Carolina would not get to first base.

(The time of Mr. TREADWAY having expired, by unanimous consent, he was given 10 minutes more.)

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. What does the gentleman from Minnesota think the hearings are for? The gentleman knows that we will get that information from the Department of Commerce. The gentleman from Minnesota displays an ignorance that I did not think he was capable of. [Laughter.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman intend to bring all that information out at these hearings?

Mr. DOUGHTON. There is no intention of keeping any information out. The gentleman knows that that information can be had from the Commerce Department.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to say to the gentleman from Minnesota that that fine Democratic paper, the New York

Sun, about 3 weeks ago gave the whole story, and it wailed bitterly because we got the worst of the bargain.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to my colleague.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will labor be asked to testify before the committee? Labor is very much interested in the matter.

Mr. TREADWAY. Every organized body ought to appear. I am confident that all interested in the preservation of the industry of this country will be in opposition to this resolution.

Now, if I may continue very briefly, Mr. Speaker, I have been asked once or twice about the features of Resolution No. 96. It is simply a continuation of the present law, and every defect that is in the present law, in the estimation of our country, will be continued in effect when that resolution is extended for 3 years.

What has been the effect of the administration's tariff policy? Our opponents have bragged about the increase in exports. I am going to refer very briefly—because I cannot get very much information on the subject—to the increase of imports. What record we can get is about as follows: Our favorable balance of trade with foreign countries has about almost disappeared. In 1934, before the trade-treaty program came into operation, our exports exceeded our imports by $478,000,000. In 1935 this favorable balance of trade had shrunk to $235,000,000.

Figures for the full year of 1936 are not yet available, but in the 11-month period from January through November, our favorable balance of exports over imports had declined to $49,000,000.

In 1935 our exports increased over 1934 by $149,000,000, or 7 percent, and in the same period our imports increased $392,000,000, or 24 percent. That is a 7-percent increase in our exports and a 24-percent increase in our imports. That tells the story of what the reciprocal trade agreements do to American agriculture, industry, and labor. It shows the tremendous price at which the small increase in foreign trade has been secured. That is the price of this internationalism that we are getting into.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. In a debate recently with a lady exponent of this proposition, she said, "Oh, but I want to call your attention to the fact that this great increase in imports is on noncompetitive articles."

Mr. TREADWAY. Of course the lady was misinformed, because that increase of imports comes right into competition with our industry. Ask the representatives of the shoe industry, for example.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. How does the gentleman account for the general increase in dividends and the wage increases and the general prosperity?

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, now the gentleman is getting into a sore subject with the Democratic Party. What about the decrease in the surpluses of those companies that have declared those extra dividends? The gentleman has barked up the wrong tree once more.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. RICH. When they come to consider the fact of these dividends, why, the corporations were driven to it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; because the Treasury wanted the money.

Mr. RICH. And if we have a bad time again it will bankrupt all the business interests of the country.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman just asked what about the shoe industry. Coming from the section in which are located the greatest shoe factories in the world, I say that I have not received any complaint about it from our shoe manufacturers.

Mr. TREADWAY. I will tell the gentleman why he did not get any complaint, and why we do not get any in our offices here. They are afraid of the administration, they are afraid that the screws are going to be put on, and I can show the gentleman letters to that effect.

Mr. COCHRAN. Nobody out my way was afraid; on the contrary, they are full of confidence as to the future.

Mr. TREADWAY. They are afraid the administration will put them out of business and make things worse for them than they are now.

Mr. COCHRAN. They fear nothing now.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am telling the gentleman what I know.

Mr. COCHRAN. They are making more money than they have in years. Their output has greatly increased.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am telling the gentleman what I know about it. If companies were increasing their output so materially, certainly there would be greater employment and less people on relief. The increased dividends are not the result of increased business but, as has been said, the result of an iniquitous tax bill. When the inevitable rainy day comes there will be no surpluses to tide it over.

Figures for 1935 and 1936 are equally one-sided. In a comparable 11-month period exports increased $164,000,000, or 8 percent, and imports increased $313,000,000, or 16 percent. Thus the imports are double or triple the exports all the time.

Further, the reason why we should not approve these reciprocal treaties is the star-chamber manner in which they are negotiated. Even the administration seems to admit a little mistake in that particular. They say that they are going to liberalize the hearings. Never has even a Member of Congress been able to find out for his people what the subject matters are that are to be brought before this conference. Now they say they are going to announce to the business world in advance what subjects will be brought up. That shows a little defect in the present system, but the jury system will be just the same in the future as now. It will be a stacked jury against American industry—a star-chamber affair. That is what you are up against—a stacked jury. Go down and see who sits around the table when these conferences on trade agreements are being entered into.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. If the gentleman will make as big a bull as he did a moment ago, I yield to him.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. To ask the gentleman if it is his contention that all the commerce going through our ports should go one way?

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, I believe in the wisest kind of reciprocity, not all one-sided, and for the other fellow.

I want to see our side get a little chance. We think they do not under the present system.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Do you not think that the price level is a reflection of good, fair reciprocity?

Mr. TREADWAY. I think you can set up good, fair reciprocity, but it is not done under the Doughton resolution for an extension of the present reciprocal trade treaty legislation.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Does the gentleman believe in the type of reciprocity we had in 1929–33, when both exports and imports were paralyzed? Is that the kind of reciprocity the gentleman favors?

Mr. TREADWAY. No. I favor the kind of reciprocity——

Mr. DOUGHTON. I ask the gentleman that question, Does he favor that kind of reciprocity?

Mr. TREADWAY. I favor reciprocity, but not one-sided reciprocity such as we have now. I do not think the gentleman is propounding any definite question that warrants an answer.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Does the gentleman agree with the type of reciprocity that we had——

Mr. TREADWAY. We can discuss all that when the time comes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman does not wait until I finish the question. [Laughter.]

Does the gentleman favor the type of reciprocity we had in 1929–33? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. I repeat that the gentleman's remarks do not constitute an inquiry which is susceptible of serious reply.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

CONTEMPT PROCEEDINGS AGAINST NEWSPAPER EDITORS AND REPORTERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CURLEY] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, I hope I may be able to hold the attention of the Members for the period that has been allotted to me to discuss a subject that has been before this body previously and which has been revived during the past year.

A year ago this month I introduced in this House a bill to protect newspapers, their editors, and reporters against contempt proceedings for refusal to reveal confidential sources of information in any court of the United States or in the District of Columbia. The subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary held a meeting at which the merit of the proposed legislation was discussed. I was very courteously permitted to present my views and those of a very large number of influential citizens interested in protecting the "freedom of the press" and those of our citizens necessarily engaged in writing for the public information. The bill was not reported out of committee.

IMMUNITY FOR REPORTERS

This is not a new question by any means. As a matter of fact, in the States of New Jersey, Maryland, Kentucky, and Alabama there are similar laws now in operation. One more State—Arkansas—was added to the others just recently when a referendum was submitted to a popular vote in that great Commonwealth which granted immunity to newspaper reporters by the overwhelming vote of 4 to 1. Because of increasing public interest in this country for protection of the constitutional rights of newspaper reporters, I was advised to introduce another bill. This bill is now H. R. 1065.

The universal opinion prevailing to grant immunity to the reporters of news from punishment from contempt was well emphasized by the people of the State of Arkansas. An amendment to the State constitution was drafted by a committee of the Arkansas State Bar Association. The amendment provides for protection from contempt proceedings editors, reporters, journalists, and other news gatherers when they refuse to reveal the confidential sources upon which their written stories are based. This referendum was approved on November 3, 1936, by a vote of 121,300 to 28,174, which means that in the State of Arkansas concrete evidence, in addition to that offered by other States with like statutes on their books, indicates the press will be the guardian of its own liberty and freedom as intended by the Constitution of the United States and expressly provided for in amendments I and V, respectively. Freedom of the press will be amply safeguarded by newspaper reporters who in all cases must be responsible for their correct and fearless publications and presentations of news. To quote from a well-known head of the Associated Press, Mr. Byron Price, who said in an address published a while ago:

> It was the American people who wrote the guaranty of freedom into the Constitution, and their action was based on an assumption that the press would develop as a respectable, trustworthy, and responsible medium for dissemination of information.

LAWYERS AND DOCTORS PROTECTED

My bill is designed to extend existing privileges granted to lawyers, doctors, and clergymen in the State courts to newspaper reporters, editors, publishers, and correspondents who appear in litigation in any court of the United States and in the District of Columbia. The compelling reason in giving the national scope to the bill is the fact that the public will receive greater benefit through a more complete protected circulation of confidential sources of information in the Federal courts by giving a legal status to the privilege. In addition it would set an example, as well as a precedent, for other individual State courts to follow by setting up similar laws on the subject.

Our past experience tells us that newspapers in turning the searchlight on crime and racketeering had as their basis "tips" through confidential sources. The leads for evidence were secretly given and often a "contract" entered into between the one supplying the information and the reporter not to reveal the name of the one giving him the news. Many dangerous criminals have been brought to justice through the same type of newspaper leads, and in a number of cases the news reporter for his cooperation with society has been jailed for his refusal to reveal his valuable secret source of information or was otherwise penalized for contempt.

Mr. Speaker, when New York State's highest court last year denied a newspaperman's appeal from a sentence of contempt of court, imposed for refusing to divulge before a grand jury investigating the "policy racket" the source of certain information used by this newspaperman in a series of published articles, and confirmed a 30-day jail sentence, the public of the United States naturally wondered why this should be so.

I am firmly convinced—and I trust the Members of the House hold with me in the premise—that any newspaperman who cares anything about the honor of his profession would refuse to reveal the sources of the confidential information supplying him with the facts that make exposure possible; and on that thought I was impelled to introduce this bill—H. R. 1065.

NEWSPAPERMAN CHOSE JAIL

The newspaperman's lawyer in arguing the appeal asserted that, having to choose "between legal duty on one hand and professional honor on the other", his client chose the latter. The court of appeals, admitting that "there is no statute covering the subject", nevertheless concluded—

> That the policy of the law is to require the disclosure of all information by witnesses in order that justice may prevail. The tendency is not to extend the classes to whom privilege from disclosure is granted but to restrict that privilege.

I hold that, while this verdict is logical enough, the law being what it is, to compel revelation of a newspaperman's sources of the day's news of sinister combinations of wealth, political power, and ruthless crime is to ask that he sentence his friend to quick and savage assassination. It is to expose the reporter to the same peril.

The Legislatures of Maryland, New Jersey, Kentucky, Alabama, and Arkansas already have placed laws on the statute books protecting newspapermen in just the manner in which this bill will guard them.

SUPREME COURT DECISION

Freedom of the press is a cardinal law of this land. It is a right that cannot be tampered with, as was so clearly pointed out by our Supreme Court in the historic decision handed down on February 10, 1936.

While our Constitution prohibits the States from abridging the freedom of the press, I believe we should strengthen the hand and the pen of our publishers in recognition of the constant able manner in which they work to the defeat of crime. I believe the newspaperman is the strongest of all our law-enforcing agencies and the most dreaded of the lawbreaker.

Mr. Justice Sutherland last year, in reading the decision of the Court, brought to mind many worthwhile repeating historical facts concerning the freedom of the press, excerpts of which will stand constant repeating.

This learned Justice said in part that—

> As early as 1644 John Milton in "an appeal for the liberty of unlicensed printing" assailed an act of Parliament which has just been passed providing for censorship of the press previous to publication. He vigorously defended the right of every man to make public his honest views "without previous censure" and declared the impossibility of finding any man base enough to accept the office of censor and at the same time good enough to be allowed to perform its duties. The act expired by its own terms in 1695. It was never renewed, and the liberty of the press thus became, as pointd out by Wickwar, merely "a right or liberty to publish without a license what formerly could be published with one." But mere exemption from previous censorship was soon recognized as too narrow a view of the liberty of the press.

Mr. Justice Sutherland further on in the opinion and speaking of the early effort to control or censor the press through "taxing knowledge"—as it was then commonly spoken of—tells us:

That the taxes had, and were intended to have, the effect of curtailing the circulation of newspapers, and particularly the cheaper ones, whose readers were generally found among the masses of the people, went almost without question, even on the part of those who defended the act.

And the Justice continues:

It is idle to suppose that so many of the best men of England would for a century of time have waged, as they did, stubborn and often precarious warfare against these taxes if a mere matter of taxation had been involved. The aim of the struggle was not to relieve taxpayers from a burden, but to establish and preserve the right of the English people to full information in respect to the doings of their government.. * * * In the ultimate an informed and enlightened public opinion was the thing at stake * * *.

And in this language:

FETTER OURSELVES

A free press stands as one of the greatest interpreters between the government and the people. To allow it to be fettered is to fetter ourselves.

In direct argument for this bill, H. R. 1065, may I quote here and there from editorials which appeared in many of our journals in comment on the measure?

Since it is a duty of newspapers, among other things, to expose wrongdoing in public office and in other relations generally, it is evident that, unless sources of information can be protected, the establishment of essential facts becomes more difficult.

It is in the interest of good government and public safety that corruption and crime be exposed. A measure which would assist the press in its efforts to do this carries no privilege which could be used to the harm of anybody. It would greatly strengthen the likelihood that evildoers would be more promptly brought to brook and the damage which they might do would be prevented.

The New York Times says:

The records are replete with instances of newspapermen serving jail sentences for contempt rather than betray a cardinal ethic of their profession.

The point of view of Mr. William Randolph Hearst is given in a telegram to me, which reads:

I think your bill is one that is just to newspapermen, but is primarily in the interests of the public. Most of these confidential communications to newspapermen are in the nature of revelations which aid the cause of justice. Obviously the sources of information would be closed if newspapermen were compelled to reveal these sources. In fact, newspapermen do not reveal them. Like Mr. Mooney, they go to jail rather than do so. The question, therefore, merely is whether newspapermen should go to jail for serving the public interests.

And from a Massachusetts paper this editorial comment, in part:

Let it be understood in the beginning that the public officials and all private citizens are thoroughly protected from the efforts of the irresponsibles or vicious through the libel laws so strictly regulating what a newspaper may publish. The character and reputation of every good citizen and honest public official is secure against unwarranted attacks of the press. That is amply insured by law, and there are very few newspapermen who will defy the law, especially when severe penalties have been provided. * * *

The exposés made by newspapers throughout the country always come from some tip given to a trustful newspaper reporter by an under official or institutional employee. That tip results from the continuation of wrong acts, oftentimes injurious to the public, that are abhored by those who are forced by the positions they hold to countenance, and sometimes become a party to, these wrongful acts.

Without the confidence they can impose in a representative of a newspaper, they would never dare to divulge the existence of these wrongs. The man who originates and perpetrates impositions upon others selects the most dependent ones under him to carry out the necessary minor parts of the scheme; he selects those who cannot afford to lose the positions they enjoy, knowing that any attempt to expose the acts would lead to discharge and possibly insinuations to prospective future employers regarding the character of the workers.

There is one rule of honor in modern newspaperdom, confidence must always be observed and respected. One newspaper we know had an order on the bulletin board of the news room notifying every reporter that a breach of confidence resposed in him meant automatic discharge. The rule so strictly was followed that a reporter was willing to be "scooped" rather than break confidence. The result was most satisfactory, for the newspaper was rewarded with many confidences that resulted in exclusive stories.

There is public safety in this confidential relation between newspapermen and those from whom they must of necessity receive suggestion, or "tips" of where to look for stories. It opens vast fields for investigation of many abuses existing in our body politic as well as, all too frequently, in the activities of private enterprises. No newspaper desires to warrantedly injure the reputation of any individual or institution, but, on the other hand, a part of its duty is to expose the machinations of those who seek to profit dishonestly.

In the history of the press in America there have been few, very few, cases where the power of the press has been wrongfully applied, and those were in cases where the newspaper suffered more than the one it sought to expose or injure. Public sentiment and the libel laws are the governors upon the press of the world.

CASES IN EVIDENCE

Shortly before his death last year, Mr. Merlen E. Pew, famed editor of Editor and Publisher, wrote to me on this subject. His letter is so full of sound judgment and argument that I am sure Members of this House will want to hear it. I quote:

The press is not government, does not seek to be government, but it is the chief means of public communication and the basic factor in a government that depends upon an informed public opinion. Censorship is repugnant to the wholesome American mind and the press confidence factor, which your bill deals with most effectively as regard the Federal Courts, is in essence and everyday practice a drastic form of censorship.

Two young men, Jack Durham and Wesley Carty, of Danville, Ky., were employed as city editor and reporter on the Danville Advocate. In pursuit of their occupations, these young men printed a story of a matter under police investigation and the newspapermen were brought before Judge Harlan by City Attorney Huguely and ordered to reveal the source of information upon which their news accounts were based. Regarding this source of information as a professional confidence, the boys refused to respond and were sent to jail as common criminals by Judge Harlan. At their own expense, the boys obtained writs of habeas corpus, but were again brought before the judge and again committed to jail until they would yield the information. This process continued until the boys had been jailed no less than 11 times. They took this punishment bravely, clung to their point that they were bound by confidence which they could not break, except in dishonor, and finally the judge and prosecutor discontinued the persecution and the boys never did reveal the source of their news.

This is only one of hundreds of incidents that might be cited. You will recall the case of three or four members of the staff of the Washington Herald who were imprisoned in the District of Columbia within 10 years at the behest of the district attorney because they would not reveal to a local district judge the origin of a news report which told in specific terms where liquor was being retailed in violation of the prohibition law in the city of Washington, indicating a farcical falure on the part of the local authorities to enforce the Prohibition Act. It was a valuable piece of public information and good journalism. The reporters explained that they had received the information in confidence and that to reveal it would incriminate the person or persons who had been prevailed upon by the reporters to yield the facts. These men were not detectives in the employ of the Government, but rather did represent the general public's legitimate concern with law enforcement. Their real crime, of course, was to expose the failure of the Government in that instance and they were made to pay in the terms of a criminal.

It must be understood in the first place that newspapermen are not actuated by personal curiosity. They do not pry into people's affairs or into the affairs of government through idle meddling. They have no personal concern in these matters ordinarily, but are employed to make proper investigations in the public interest by newspapers that are committed under our system to publish all they can find out of value to the reader citizen. And without an informed public opinion this democracy cannot stand. I submit that a reporter who violates confidences in news relations will forfeit his best asset and render himself useless in his profession. He is bound by the same honor that attaches to confidences that lie between clergymen and parishioner, the lawyer and client, the doctor and patient. Any other position for the reporter is unthinkable. He becomes a sneak and soon loses both professional and personal standing in the community.

I do not think, speaking as an editor of more than 30 years' experience, that there is any element of pride in the newspaper profession which exceeds that of the average newspaperman in the fact that he can be trusted by the persons with whom he does business to write his public reports in honor to yield public advantage without the sacrifice of the personal loyalties which constitute the common decency of life. It is this feeling on the part of a newspaperman that causes the stubborn resistance against judicial attempts to break down our ethical foundation, and newspapermen take this savage punishment with striking fortitude, certainly demonstrating their complete sincerity.

More than 25 years ago the State of Maryland recognized the incongruity of this form of censorship in a democracy and passed an act protecting press confidences. I doubt if it can be shown that the system of justice in the State of Maryland has been impaired by this act, and certainly it must be true that for a quarter of a century Maryland newspapermen have gone about their work free of the intimidation that is implied by a system which can incriminate a man who stands four-square in defense of the ethics of his profession.

It seems to me that your bill covers the problem very neatly. As a newspaperman I heartily endorse your act and urge its favorable consideration by the House Judiciary Committee. It represents, in my view, simple justice long deferred.

So, Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, I hope we are all of one opinion so far as our feelings toward the prevention of crime is concerned. It is my humble opinion, in view of the number of occasions in which reporters have been punished for protecting their professional honor, that the time has arrived when this Government should place upon the Federal statute books H. R. 1065, legislation which will safeguard this very sacred American principle. [Applause.]

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PATMAN). Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] is recognized for 7 minutes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to a very important matter.

When the "lame duck" amendment to the Constitution, and associate legislation was passed, we moved up the time for the inauguration of the President from the 4th of March to the 20th of January. That reduced the time between the election of the electors and the inauguration of the President 4 days of March, all of February, and 11 days of January, 43 days. There are two fixed points, the election of the electors on the first Tuesday of November and the inauguration of the President on the 20th of the January following. When we advanced the time of the inauguration we failed to follow up with a corresponding advance of the election, with the result that there is now clearly not enough time between those points to settle any election contest, election of electors, before the electors must meet if there is to be time to do the other things which we know must be attended to before we are ready to inaugurate the President.

Now, that is a serious matter. When we assumed the responsibility of submitting to the people the amendment which moved up the time when the President takes office from the 4th of March to the 20th of January, we assumed the responsibility of adjusting the election machinery, to that change in date, so that if there should be a contest in any State with regard to the election of the electors, there would be enough time within which to settle that matter before the time when the electors should meet. Now, that is plain.

I make this statement, and an examination will convince you that it is true: There is not a single State in the United States that can speed up its judicial machinery fast enough to settle a serious controversy in regard to an election before the time when the electors must meet. That is a very serious situation. We have no excuse to sit around here and wait for a crisis to develop which governmental experience and common sense warn us is bound to develop sometime. I am therefore offering an amendment which will advance the time for the general election from November to October, 1 month, which will, I hope, receive the serious consideration of the Committee on Election of President and Vice President. This resolution, as I have stated, would move up the time of the election from the first Tuesday in November to the first Tuesday in October. There is no other way to do it, because there are two points which must be considered, the time of the election and the time the President is inaugurated. There is not a lawyer who has examined the law who will not agree that there was no more than the necessary time between the election and the inauguration of the President before the "lame duck" amendment. We moved that time up from the 4th of March to the 20th of January. We did not move up the date of election.

I hope we will share with the able chairman of the Committee on Election of President and Vice President and his associate committeemen the responsibility of making this change. We ought to do it early in this session while the State legislatures are meeting. It is provided in the bill which I am introducing that the law shall not become effective until 1940.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. There was a dispute in 1876. Does the gentleman know of any other dispute about an elector from any State, except the one in 1876?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No. We have been very fortunate about that, but we do know that electors are elected like any other officer, and there might be a dispute about the election of any of them at any time. We have no excuse for not providing sufficient time to dispose of the matter. We are not deciding now whether this should be done; that was decided when we submitted and the States ratified the twentieth amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. There was a controversy a hundred years ago over the election of the President, and it was thrown into the House of Representatives. There is no reason on earth why it should not be carried on for several weeks, and it looks to me as if we are hemmed in there with some limitation.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is true, but that was not a contest as to which candidate for President carried a given State. We know now that issue may arise at any time in a close election and we know now there is no way judicially to settle that matter before the time when the electoral vote must be counted. I refer to a situation where there is a charge of fraud in the election of the elector of the President. We know those charges do arise in connection with the election of public officials. This is the election of public officials.

The horse-sense thing is now to make it possible to settle that dispute orderly and properly in the regular way before the time for these officers to begin their work. With the shortening of the time there are only about 41 or 42 days now between the election and the meeting of the electors. Just think of it! Only forty-odd days between the time the electors are elected and they get on the job. There is not a lawyer in the House who does not know that forty-odd days is not a sufficient length of time to settle an election dispute involving probably an entire State.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. As I understand, the distinguished gentleman from Texas was chairman of the Judiciary Committee when the "lame duck" amendment was passed.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The Judiciary Committee did not handle that amendment.

Mr. LUCAS. Can the gentleman tell me whether or not those who did handle the "lame duck" amendment went into a discussion of the subject matter the gentleman is now considering?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am not advised. The Committee on the Judiciary did not handle that amendment; the committee of my distinguished friend Mr. FLETCHER, of Ohio, handled it. But whether it was discussed or not, all the discussion on earth cannot stretch forty-odd days into sufficient length of time to settle an election dispute in a great State. That is all there is about it; it does not make any difference what was said.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. What about the amendment abolishing the electoral college?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We have not abolished it. That is a constitutional amendment. I am talking about an act of Congress which we ought to enact now. The first Tuesday in October is just as good a time to hold the general election as a month later. In much of the United States October is better than November.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the gentleman anticipate any objection from State legislatures and Governors? Our committee found they were unanimously in opposition to the measure. I am wondering if the gentleman has any additional information from his contacts.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I say to my friend that I can quite appreciate that State legislatures and Governors would be opposed to this proposed change as an independent matter, but they cannot be opposed to providing enough time orderly and properly to settle so important a question as to who has really been elected President of the United States. I do not believe any of them will profess to believe it can be done in 40 days. We have got to do something about it. It is not their responsibility; it is ours; and we should take it, for we have got to make provision for the election of the electors and the settlement of disputes in contests affecting them. That is our job.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. COX. I regard the question of amending the Constitution as most serious business. In view of the rarity of contests over the election of electors arising, does the gentleman think the situation sufficiently serious to justify an amendment to the Constitution?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. This does not involve an amendment to the Constitution; this would be simply an act of Congress moving the date of the national election from the first part of November to the first part of October.

Mr. COX. I did not understand the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes in order that I may answer questions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. As I understand the proposition, if the gentleman's measure passes the House, it would simply mean that State and National elections would be held 30 days prior to the present date.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; the gentleman is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. Has the gentleman given sufficient consideration to the question to advise the House intelligently whether we would have enough time even then?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We would not have any time to spare, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois. I wrote the bill which changes the form of bringing the returns permitting them to be sent by registered mail instead of being brought in person. I think we can rearrange things a little and save perhaps 3, 4, or 5 days at that end, but even moving the date of the election forward a month and what other time we could squeeze in would not give us a day longer than was needed to settle an election contest, and sometime we have got to face it.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. If the gentleman's bill were passed, would it not necessitate legislation in every State regarding the election of their officers?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes. When the States ratified the "lame duck" amendment they did not have anything left but to move up the date of the general election, because they moved up the time when the elected President takes office. In other words, we have two points, the date when the President is inaugurated and the date of the election of the electors. If before the twentieth amendment the time between these points was not more than sufficient—and our people evidently thought that for many decades—then one point cannot be moved closer to the other without moving the other back also; this is just common sense.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. If some of the States refused to conform to this proposed law what would be done?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. They would have to have two elections.

I am calling this to the attention of the House now, because it is our responsibility, and we should not sit idly by until the situation is upon us before we pass legislation to meet it. [Applause.]

THE STABILIZATION FUND

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow it may be in order to consider H. R. 2519 or S. 416, bills to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised; that all points of order against said bills shall be considered as being waived; and that general debate be limited to 2 hours, 1 hour to be controlled by the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures and 1 hour by the ranking minority member of that committee, after which the bill shall be read under the 5-minute rule for the offering of amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I appreciate the fact that a request from the majority leader at this time is pretty nearly law so far as the House is concerned, especially when he has 4 to 1 to back him. That goes a long way in making these requests.

There is just one thing I would like to bring to the attention of the majority leader of the House, and that is it seems to me it is rather rushing the situation to bring two very important measures here before the House so early in the session and without very much consideration by the committee. I doubt if there have been any hearings printed or anything else that might give information to the Members of the House or help them in any way to form their judgment with reference to these two measures. I know that the gentleman could secure a meeting of the Rules Committee this afternoon and pass a rule to bring up this matter tomorrow, but it does seem to me he is rushing the situation, especially considering the fact that the Speaker and several of the leaders on that side have expressed the thought that the emergency has passed and that during the present session we would give careful, judicious consideration to important measures. The valuation of the dollar is, to me, one of the very important measures to come up before the House during the present session. As far as time is concerned, I think that is probably all right.

Mr. RAYBURN. May I say to the minority leader that it is not going to be the policy, as far as I can control it, to unnecessarily or unduly rush matters through the House. In my own experience I can say, in the handling of some very intricate and important bills, like the stock-exchange bill, the Public Utilities Act, and others, that I did not ask for a gag rule. We had ample time for general debate and the bills were read for amendment. A great many bills of importance, and behind which the administration stood so firmly, not only in Democratic but Republican administrations, have been put through without amendment.

So far as I am concerned, I desire the fewest number of so-called gag rules. But the Treasury thinks it is vitally important to American business, on account of certain conditions in Europe, that this bill be passed at the earliest possible moment.

We are giving notice now that it will come up tomorrow. I think sufficient debate is allowed, 1 hour on a side, after which the bill will be read under the 5-minute rule. May I say further that this bill has no new features at all. It is simply an extension of authority already granted until, as I understand it, the 30th of June 1938.

Mr. SNELL. I thank the gentleman for his statement and I hope he will carry out the intention he has expressed to the effect he will not force these measures through rapidly. Is there anything that the Members are entitled to know with reference to whether the President has any advanced ideas he intends to exercise under this extended grant of power?

Mr. RAYBURN. That I do not know. Probably the chairman of the committee, if he is here, can answer the question. If any information is available, he will have it.

Mr. SNELL. I appreciate the fact it would be purely technical if I objected at this time, but I do not intend to object. However, I do want to impress upon the majority leader it is our hope that he will carry out the views he has just expressed here, and also the views which I understand have been expressed by the Speaker, that these very important measures will be considered in the way they are entitled to be considered, as the real emergency must have passed.

Mr. RAYBURN. I may say to the gentleman that frankly I have always thought the more important a bill the more consideration should be given it, and I do not think it is fair consideration to cut off debate unduly.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] asks unanimous consent that on tomorrow it may be in order to consider H. R. 2519 or S. 416, bills to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised; all points of order against the bill to be waived; that general debate on said bills be limited to 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman of the committee and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures; and thereafter the bills shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not understand this matter of waiving all points of order. What is that part of the request?

Mr. RAYBURN. That means all points of order against the bill are waived. I understand there might be an appropriation in it; therefore the gentleman in charge of the bill wants to protect the bill in its entirety.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman think it is a good idea to waive points of order and allow appropriations to be inserted in general legislation bills? Of course, that is the gentleman's responsibility.

Mr. RAYBURN. No; I do not.

Mr. SNELL. I think the gentleman is making a serious mistake in permitting that.

Mr. RAYBURN. I think it is very important that this bill be passed promptly.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman is not going to make further requests of that nature, is he?

Mr. RAYBURN. I hope not.

Mr. SNELL. Hope springs eternal, you know.

Mr. RAYBURN. I mean by the statement that as long as the majority can function in an orderly fashion without gag rules I shall do everything to bring about that condition. Of course, times may arise in which we will probably have to have some gag rules.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman states we will not have gag rules as long as the majority can function. The gentleman means, I presume, that as long as he can get what he wants by unanimous consent, regardless of how ridiculous it may be, he will not ask for a gag rule.

Mr. RAYBURN. It is not the purpose of the majority of the House to put through anything ridiculous at this session. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think this is very important legislation, inasmuch as we are dealing with $2,000,000,000 and with the discretion of the Treasury in its administration. I am going to ask the gentleman if he will not modify the request and provide for 4 hours of debate instead of 2 in order to give us a chance to be heard on it.

Mr. RAYBURN. I would rather not do that, I will say to the gentleman from Idaho; but if the debate goes on and it is apparent that other gentlemen who have information on this subject desire to be heard and the House wants to hear them, I think we could arrange for that on tomorrow.

Mr. PARSONS. If the gentleman will permit, after all, they can engage in the debate under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; there will not be any effort by myself or by the committee to cut off debate under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the importance of rushing this matter through tomorrow instead of day after tomorrow or the next day?

Mr. RAYBURN. I understand a condition has arisen with reference to trade with one country in the Orient which makes it very, very important to American business that this action be taken at an early date.

Mr. CHURCH. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman to please withdraw his objection and let me state why the request of the majority leader comes at this time?

Mr. CHURCH. I withhold my objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. COX. The importance of getting quick action upon this bill has been impressed upon the membership. The Committee on Rules, of course, will assemble and pass out a resolution if this unanimous-consent request is denied. The request is made simply to avoid the necessity of assembling the committee for the purpose of taking action which would mean a continuation of the present session for something like an hour or an hour and a half longer. The gentleman would not save anything by objecting to the request, and I sincerely trust that the gentleman will not object, because he will penalize the Members by holding them in session for an hour or an hour and a half longer.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I may say to the gentleman that we have been going along here for several days without having a great deal to do. We have had a long discussion this morning and we are now getting notice of an important measure to be considered tomorrow, when points of order will be waived, as in a gag rule. I believe that actions speak louder than words. I believe in the promise of the chairman that he will give us more notice later, but I believe this should be a warning with respect to future measures, so that they may not be considered by waiving point of order in gag rules.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I may say it is the intention now to bring up on Thursday of this week the measure extending the powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation until June 30, 1939.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted, as follows:

To Mr. KENNEY, for the week, on account of death of his brother, Mr. John E. Kenney, a lawyer of the city of Worcester, State of Massachusetts.

To Mr. RANDOLPH, on account of official business.

To Mr. MAPES, for today, on account of illness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the majority leader how much time we are going to have in the consideration of the measures extending the life of the organizations that were created during the last few years, especially the R. F. C.?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania submit the request in the form of a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. RICH. No, Mr. Speaker; I am asking the Chair if I may ask the majority leader that question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute. Is there objection,

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the majority leader if he can tell us how much time we are going to have on the measure for the extension of the R. F. C.?

Mr. RAYBURN. A resolution has not been introduced for its consideration as yet, but I think there will be liberal time; at least, as much as we will have on the bill just referred to, and probably more.

Mr. RICH. What does the gentleman mean by "liberal time"?

Mr. RAYBURN. I think 2 hours of debate and reading it under the 5-minute rule would be liberal.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, in the course of my remarks today I requested permission to revise and extend my remarks. It was at an unusual time, and I am not certain whether the request was put, so I now renew the request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, January 19, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

225. A letter from the president of Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator & Railway Co., transmitting their annual report for the year ending December 31, 1936; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

226. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report dated January 12, 1937, from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, on preliminary examination of Bayou Sennette, La.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

227. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report dated January 12, 1937, from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, on preliminary examination of Salters Creek, Newport News, Va., and channel connecting with deep waters in Hampton Roads; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

228. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report dated January 12, 1937, from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, on preliminary examination of St. Marys River, Md.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

229. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of a petition from the Socialist Party of the Philippines, dated November 27, 1936; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

230. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report on the War Finance Corporation (in liquidation) covering the period from January 1, 1936, to December 31, 1936 (H. Doc. No. 126); to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

231. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a deficiency estimate for the legislative establishment, House of Representatives, for the fiscal year 1936, in the sum of $7,500 (H. Doc. No. 127); to the Committee on Appropriations.

232. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of Justice for the fiscal year 1937, amounting to $29,000, for salaries, Department of Justice (H. Doc. No. 128); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

233. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year 1937, $1,225 (H. Doc. No. 129); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

234. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1937 in the amount of $24,000, together with a draft of a proposed provision pertaining to an existing appropriation (H. Doc. No. 130); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

235. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the legislative establishment, House of Representatives, for the fiscal year 1938, amounting to $3,250 (H. Doc. No. 131); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

236. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated January 6, 1937, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and illustrations, on a preliminary examination and survey at or near Put-in-Bay, Ohio, with a view to establishing a harbor, authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved August 30, 1935 (H. Doc. No. 132); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with an illustration.

237. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting an amended draft of a resolution to comply with the provisions of Senate joint resolution dated March 28, 1918 (40 Stat. 499); to the Committee on the Public Lands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. SOMERS of New York: Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. H. R. 2519. A bill to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised; without amendment (Rept. No. 12). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. STEAGALL: Committee on Banking and Currency. H. R. 2301. A bill to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 13). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. JONES: Committee on Agriculture. H. R. 1545. A bill to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1937 and from year to year thereafter, and for other purposes; with amendment (Rept. No. 14). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 717) granting an increase of pension to Mary M. Snyder; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 2818) granting a pension to Anna Dabney; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 1234) granting a pension to Jane Armstrong; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 928) granting a pension to Venia Moody; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDREWS: A bill (H. R. 3123) to authorize the Secretary of War to lease to Old Fort Niagara Association, Inc., portions of the Fort Niagara Military Reservation, N. Y.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BACON: A bill (H. R. 3124) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws by discouraging, preventing, and punishing the crime of lynching; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3125) to amend section 1001 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1932; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3126) to provide for the application of 2-cent rate on first-class mail matter for delivery within the confines of any incorporated city and to contiguous cities; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3127) providing for the examination and survey of Orowoc Creek, Long Island, N. Y.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3128) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3129) to extend the civil-service merit system by placing the position of postmaster in first-, second-, and third-class offices in the competitive classified service; to provide for promotion within the Postal Service to the position of postmaster as a reward for merit; and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3130) to extend the status of veterans of the World War to persons enlisted and serving on United States Shipping Board vessels during the World War in war zones; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3131) to repeal the Silver Purchase Act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BLAND: A bill (H. R. 3132) to provide for a preliminary examination and survey of Garden Creek, Mathews County, Va., and channel connecting with the Chesapeake Bay; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. BLOOM: A bill (H. R. 3133) to promote the general welfare through the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public pregrade education; to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 3134) to impose taxes on fuel oil; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CLUETT: A bill (H. R. 3135) for the exchange of land in Hudson Falls, N. Y., for the purpose of the post-office site; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. COLE of New York: A bill (H. R. 3136) to amend the Federal Corrupt Practices Act, 1925, approved February 28, 1925, and acts amendatory and supplementary thereto; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE

TUESDAY, JANUARY 19, 1937

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in whose hand are the destinies of the universe and of human life: give us in these days of needed courage and gladness such utter confidence in Thee that we may do our work with hearts triumphant in perpetual hope, with open eyes of wonder and the receptive mind of intelligence and with wills in harmony with Thine.

Help us to realize that he who would be monarch of himself, swaying the scepter of his soul, will believe in God, will believe in man, will believe in conscience, will believe in duty, and that while he believes in these no darkness from without can quench the light that is within. We ask it in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

ELLISON D. SMITH, a Senator from the State of South Carolina, appeared in his seat today.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, January 16, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATH TO SENATOR-ELECT FROM IOWA

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, permit me to announce that the Senator-elect from the State of Iowa [Mr. HERRING] is present and is ready to take the oath of office.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The credentials of the Senator-elect from Iowa were presented on the first day of the session. If the Senator-elect will advance to the desk, the oath of office will be administered to him.

Mr. HERRING, escorted by Mr. GILLETTE, advanced to the Vice President's desk, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to him by the Vice President.

COMMITTEE SERVICE

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent to have entered the order which I send to the desk assigning the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING] to committees.

There being no objection, the order was read and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That the Senator from Iowa, Mr. HERRING, be assigned to service on the following committees: Banking and Currency, Finance, Library, and Public Buildings and Grounds.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATION OF CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that during the period of the adjournment of the Congress he was called upon to fill a vacancy on a committee. He thinks the RECORD should show it.

So the Chair formally announces that, during the sine-die adjournment of the Senate, he appointed the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] as a member of the Special Committee on Investigation of Campaign Expenditures, created under Senate Resolution 225, Seventy-fourth Congress, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. LA FOLLETTE.

BOARD OF VISITORS TO THE NAVAL ACADEMY

The VICE PRESIDENT. In accordance with the provisions of the act of August 29, 1916, the Chair appoints Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. BONE, Mr. HALE, and Mr. GIBSON as the members on the part of the Senate of the Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy.

REPORT ON WAR FINANCE CORPORATION (IN LIQUIDATION)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the War Finance Corporation (in liquidation), covering the period from January 1, 1936, to December 31, 1936, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

SIGNING OF PAPERS BY THE ASSISTANT TO THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation fully authorizing the Assistant to the Secretary of the Interior to sign such official papers and documents as the Secretary may direct, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PETITIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Resolution memorializing Congress and the President of the United States to continue a low minimum interest rate on farm loans through the Federal land-bank system

Whereas the financial returns of the farming industry in the State of Minnesota have been such that those engaged in the pursuit of farming have been unable to recover as quickly as other groups because of the long years of depression that farm people suffered previous to other groups experiencing the suffering years of the depression; and

Whereas the farmers are large users of credit and such a large percentage of their income is used in paying interest on farm mortgages, production credit, and other necessary loans;

It is therefore essential that before we can have any general and lasting return in prosperity to agriculture that the interest payments as paid by agriculture should be on the lowest basis possible and in keeping with that paid by other groups of American society: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we urge upon the Congress to pass such legislation and the President of the United States to support the same, providing for the continuance of the low interest rates of the Farm Credit Administration on farm loans and believing that this interest rate should not exceed 3 percent at the present time, as the general money market does not justify a higher rate of interest on term farm loans; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the State of Minnesota is hereby instructed to forward a copy of this resolution to the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to each Representative and Senator in the State of Minnesota and to the President of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Board of Commissioners of the City of Sheffield, Ala., urging the board of directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority to establish its principal office on the United States reservation known as nitrate plant no. 2, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by Local No. 32, Kansas Allied Workers, of Pittsburg, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for a 6-hour workday and a 5-day week without reduction in pay, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 462) to permit the exchange of used parts of certain types of equipment for new or reconditioned parts of the same equipment, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 5) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 62) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a free highway bridge across the Missouri River at or near Atchison, Kans., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 8) thereon.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

Honorable Theodore A. Walters, First Assistant Secretary of the Interior, before the fortieth annual meeting of the American National Livestock Association, which appears in the Appendix.]

POWERS RELATING TO STABILIZATION FUND AND WEIGHT OF DOLLAR

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 416.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 416) to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency, without amendment.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, as stated when the bill was introduced, and reported, I am acting in substitution for the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who is unavoidably absent from the Senate.

The report on the bill, which I assume is on the desk of each Senator, succinctly recites what it is. It is simply an extension of the stabilization fund of $2,000,000,000 and of the authority to the President of the United States further to devalue the dollar.

That in a word states the purposes of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GLASS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Was there any evidence before the committee or any statement made by the Treasury Department indicating the purpose for or the necessity of devaluing the dollar?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, while the session of the committee was executive, I think there could be no possible objection to answering the inquiry of the Senator from Utah to the effect that the Secretary of the Treasury appeared before the committee and gave it as his judgment that it was very desirable to extend this authority to the President in order to be sure that this country would be prepared to meet any devaluation which might be initiated by any foreign country that would result in some disadvantage to our export trade.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, has the Senator from Virginia concluded his statement?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; I have.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I should like to offer an amendment to the stabilization section of the pending bill. I should like to make a very brief statement respecting it before formally offering it.

From January 20, 1934, which is the time when the stabilization act was passed, to June 30, 1939, the time now proposed for its termination, is a period of 5 years and 5 months. During all of this time $2,000,000,000 of the people's money in the stabilization fund will have been solely in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury subject only to the approval of the President. The decisions of the Secretary of the Treasury, according to the language of the original act which is here to be extended, will have been final in all aspects, and—I quote from the act itself—

> Not be subject to review by any other officer of the United States.

I venture the assertion that this is the greatest power over the largest sum of public money for the longest period of time in all history. I venture the further assertion that never was there a precedent in a democracy for such an enormous public enterprise to be locked up forever in the wisdom and discretion of just two men.

We may have the greatest confidence in those two men. Certainly their integrity is unimpeachable. But that is beside the point. This is—or is supposed to be—a government of laws and not of men. The responsibility of Congress for the public purse is primary and continuous. Two billion dollars is still a tremendous sum of money. In any other connection we would not dream of permitting such a sum, or any sum, to be spent in secret, audited in secret, and terminated in secret. It would be unthinkable. It would ravish every sensibility of representative government. We cannot wholly escape these implications in the pending problem.

I freely concede that the character of this fund necessarily is different from almost any other fund, that it necessarily serves a secret function from day to day, and that it would defeat the purposes of the act itself to billboard its contemporary operations. But I am unable to understand why, at some point in the proceeding, there should not be the same accountability to Congress as is the essential habit in respect to every other public dollar. I am unable to understand why the shroud must be perpetually impenetrable; why the people may never know what has been done in their name with their own money.

In ordinary appropriations Congress can fairly well prescribe in advance the nature and scope and even the details of public expenditure. This is our protection. Not so with this $2,000,000,000. We can only authorize the Secretary of the Treasury—

> To deal in gold and foreign exchange and such other instruments of credit and securities as he may deem necessary—

To do what? To stabilize—

> the exchange value of the dollar.

Anything may happen under that authority. It is as infinite as time and as wide as space. This afternoon we are asked summarily to extend this prodigious grant of money and power for 2½ years, knowing little or nothing of what has been done with it to date. Yet we are dealing with the main artery of the public credit. We must deal almost wholly on faith. Perhaps this infirmity is inherent in a so-called stabilization fund, whose virtue, if any, is probably in its mystery. Probably, too, it is necessary in the world of interlocking finance that we should continue to arm ourselves with this sort of a weapon with which to meet similar weapons elsewhere. But, Mr. President, I respectfully submit that the least we can do is to change the law so that we shall become finally informed. The least we can do is to make certain an ultimate accounting which will permit an ultimate accountability. Anything less is an affront to democracy.

In his recent reorganization message, the President listed five major objectives to which he gave unequivocal endorsement. The fifth objective reads in part as follows:

> Establish accountability of the Executive to the Congress by providing a genuine independent postaudit of all fiscal transactions.

Where is the "accountability" in this pending statute? Where is the "genuine, independent postaudit"? Where is there any of our checks and balances? Where is the prudent regard for our Congressional responsibilities? Why should there be complaint if, in some small degree, this omission be rectified?

The objective, defined by the President himself, is not only missing, it is literally denied by the stabilization-fund law in its present and pending form. I respectfully submit that this is our first yet probably our greatest opportunity to follow this particular Presidential recommendation. In addition, this course is urged in the present instance by every element of vigilance and by the minimum of congressional responsibility for public money.

I think I am entitled to say, in conclusion, that I have discussed the matter with the Secretary of the Treasury in person and that he does not object to the amendment.

Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. Personally I should prefer to go much further, and to require an audit and report today, before the powers are extended; but it seems to me it is a minimum of congressional responsibility to demand at least a final accounting when the powers herein granted are finally terminated. I should prefer a different course. I should prefer to suspend all action until, here and now, we are appropriately advised respecting the uses to which this enormous power has been put. I am amazed that Congress should be asked to act upon so vital a matter in the almost total absence of disclosure of the record. For myself, I cannot proceed in such a fashion. But surely, at the very least, the Senate will not oppose the minimum, ultimate precautions which I now propose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 9, after the word "terminated" and before the period, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That upon the termination of the fund, the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit to Congress a complete audit and report upon its operations from the time of its establishment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator from Michigan, or, if he does not have the information, of the Senator from Virginia, whether, in the conversation referred to—if it was not private—the Senator ascertained what losses, if any, or gains, if any, had resulted from the operation of the stabilization fund since the establishment of the fund.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I have no information regarding the bill itself except the report of the committee, which, of course, yields nothing by way of information. My inquiry of the Secretary related solely to the question of this ultimate accounting; and I am happy to say he did not object to the fundamental idea that there ought to be an ultimate accounting.

Mr. GLASS and Mr. BYRNES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah has the floor. Does he yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. KING. If the Senator from Virginia will answer the question, I shall be very glad to have him do so.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Secretary of the Treasury appeared before the committee and gave us, up to date, the net result of the operation of the stabilization fund. I may state in general terms that there has been no loss to the Government in the administration of the fund, but rather a profit. It may be by some deemed considerable and by others inconsequential. At any rate, there was no loss.

I may say further that the Secretary of the Treasury had with him the Director of the Budget and the actuaries who have charge of the bookkeeping details of the operation of this fund, and offered to the committee to submit those details if the committee desired to hear them, and stated very definitely that any Member of the Congress was at liberty to come to the Treasury and inspect the bookkeeping operations and the detailed administration of the fund.

The Senator from Michigan has stated in substance what I would state—that it is not desirable to give general publicity to the operations of the Treasury with respect to this fund; that that would very seriously interfere with, if it would not invalidate, the administration of the fund. That is just the situation; but while I am on my feet I desire to make the comment that if the Secretary of the Treasury was willing to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan, he should have said so to the committee, and should not have waited until we presented a report here and had an amendment offered with the statement that the Secretary of the Treasury is in favor of the amendment. In my judgment, the Secretary should have treated the committee with more respect than that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, the bill as presented to the committee and as now reported was, as I understand, prepared in the Treasury Department by the Treasury officials.

Mr. GLASS. It was written by them; exactly.

Mr. BARKLEY. And in the language which they desired.

Mr. GLASS. Exactly.

So far as I am individually concerned—I cannot speak for the committee—I have no objection to the amendment, because I think what it proposes to require would essentially ensue anyhow; but the Secretary of the Treasury ought to tell the committee what he wants when they are considering an important bill like this, and not tell individual Senators what he is willing to do.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from Michigan in regard to a quotation. There was some confusion in the Chamber, and I did not understand whether the quotation referred to is in this bill, or whether it is in the law that the bill undertakes to amend, in regard to any other officer of the Government having the power or right to review the action of the Secretary.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It is in section 10 of the original act.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator read it again?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes. I am reading from page 6 of the printed text. The fund—

Shall be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States in a stabilization fund * * * under the exclusive control of the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, whose decisions shall be final and not be subject to review by any other officer of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. That has been in the law all the time?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. In the Senator's judgment, would that preclude the Supreme Court from passing on the constitutionality of this act?

Mr. VANDENBERG. There is enough speculation in the stabilization fund without asking me to enter the realm of speculation upon the Supreme Court.

Mr. NORRIS. Was that speculation in the law when the Supreme Court acted on the law before?

Mr. VANDENBERG. If they acted upon it, it was, because it was and is in the law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word about this amendment. I do not care how the Senate votes on it. I think this is probably what may happen:

Nobody can tell whether the condition of our foreign trade or our international situation in 1939 will or will not require further extension of the authority given to the President in this bill. When that time arrives, if it should be found necessary to pass another measure extending the provisions of the act, we should have to repeal the provision of this measure which would be incorporated in it by the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, because, if we had further to extend the act, it would not be any wiser then than it is now to reveal to the public what had happened with respect to this fund. For that reason I do not see that the amendment would do any good and it might possibly do harm.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if it should be thought desirable to extend the act, we should very likely repeal this provision at the same time.

Mr. BARKLEY. It would be necessary to repeal it at the same time; so why not wait until the question is finally determined, and then provide at the time for any sort of audit that Congress may wish? Nobody desires to keep secret the transactions; but there may be objection, and serious harm may occur, if the transactions are revealed pending the life of the authority and the fund.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

Mr. MCNARY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], and in his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I reannounce the absences suggested in my previous statement. To that statement I add the information that the Senators from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS and Mr. PEPPER] are detained as a reception committee for the delegation from their State attending the inaugural ceremonies. If present, they would vote "nay."

I also announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY] is detained from the Senate by illness, and that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MCGILL] is detained because of a severe cold.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES] the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are unavoidably detained.

Mr. McNARY. My colleague the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] is absent on official business. The senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], who would vote "yea" if present and voting, is also absent on official business.

My colleague [Mr. STEIWER] is paired on this question with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea", and I am advised that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] would vote "nay."

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] is necessarily detained. He is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. If present and voting, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] would vote "yea", and I am advised that the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] would vote "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], and allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 43, as follows:

YEAS—32

Adams	Capper	King	Norris
Austin	Copeland	La Follette	Nye
Bailey	Davis	Lodge	Russell
Borah	Frazier	Logan	Schwellenbach
Bridges	Gerry	Lonergan	Smith

NOT VOTING—20

Andrews	Glass	Pepper	Truman
Caraway	Holt	Radcliffe	Van Nuys
Clark	Hughes	Shipstead	Wagner
Donahey	Johnson, Calif.	Steiwer	Walsh
Gibson	McGill	Townsend	Wheeler

So Mr. VANDENBERG's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMEMORATIVE COINS—THREE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF NORFOLK LAND GRANT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The calendar under rule VIII is in order. The Chair understands there is on the calendar only one bill remaining, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 4) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the original Norfolk, Va., land grant and the two hundredth anniversary of the establishment of the city of Norfolk, Va., as a borough.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I understand this bill is on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is on the calendar.

Mr. ROBINSON. There are numerous precedents for the proposed legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with an amendment, in section 1, on page 2, line 3, after the word "Treasury", to insert a comma and the words "but the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the necessary dies and other preparations for this coinage", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the original Norfolk, Va., land grant and the two hundredth anniversary of the establishment of the city of Norfolk, Va., as a borough there shall be coined at a mint of the United States to be designated by the Director of the Mint not to exceed 20,000 silver 50-cent pieces of standard size, weight, and composition and of a special appropriate design to be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, but the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the necessary dies and other preparations for this coinage.

SEC. 2. The coins herein authorized shall bear the date 1936, irrespective of the year in which they are minted or issued, shall be legal tender in any payment to the amount of their face value, and shall be issued only upon the request of the Norfolk Advertising Board, Inc., affiliated with the Norfolk Association of Commerce upon payment by it of the par value of such coins, but not less than 5,000 such coins shall be issued to it at any one time and no such coins shall be issued after the expiration of 1 year after the date of enactment of this act. Such coins may be disposed of at par or at a premium by such association and the net proceeds shall be used by it in defraying the expenses incidental and appropriate to the commemoration of such event.

SEC. 3. All laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same; regulating and guarding the process of coinage; providing for the purchase of material and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of coins; for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting; for the security of the coins; or for any other purposes, whether such laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein authorized.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the calendar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS ON INAUGURATION DAY

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is necessary that the Senate meet tomorrow, but it is not expected that business will be transacted. The order of procedure is that Senators shall assemble in this Chamber and proceed to the inaugural platform immediately upon assembling. In all probability there will be no suggestion of the absence of a quorum. This statement is made in order that Senators may have notice now of what may be expected.

Following the inaugural ceremonies, if the order that I am about to submit to the Senate shall be adopted, the Senate automatically will stand adjourned until Friday noon. There is no business on the calendar. Many committees will be in session. For these reasons the adjournment will be until Friday noon instead of Thursday noon.

Mr. President, with that statement I ask for the adoption of the order, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be read.

The order was read and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, by unanimous consent, That when the Senate concludes its business today it take a recess until 11:45 o'clock a. m. tomorrow; that upon convening at that hour the Senate proceed to the east front of the Capitol for the purpose of attending the inaugural ceremonies of the President and Vice President of the United States; and that upon the conclusion of the ceremonies the Senate stand adjourned until Friday noon.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. ASHURST (for Mr. McGILL), from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Oscar Henry Doyle, of South Carolina, to be United States attorney, western district of South Carolina, vice Charles C. Wyche, appointed United States district judge.

Mr. NEELY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Claud N. Sapp, of South Carolina, to be United States attorney, eastern district of South Carolina. (Mr. Sapp is now serving under an appointment by the court.)

Mr. VAN NUYS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Charles C. Wyche, of South Carolina, to be United States district judge, western district of South Carolina, vice Henry H. Watkins, retired.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the following nominations:

Charles Edison, of New Jersey, to be Assistant Secretary of the Navy; and Admiral William D. Leahy to be Chief of Naval Operations in the Department of the Navy, with the rank of admiral, for a term of 4 years from the 2d day of January 1937.

Mr. WALSH also, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Brig. Gen. Thomas Holcomb to be the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps for a period of 4 years from the 1st day of December 1936; Col. James J. Meads to be a brigadier general in the Marine Corps from the 1st day of December 1936; and also the nomination of sundry other officers and citizens for appointment in the Marine Corps.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of Capts. Wilson Brown and Walter S. Anderson to be rear admirals in the Navy from the 1st day of July 1936; and also the nominations of sundry other officers and citizens for appointment in the Navy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Chair understands, there is no further executive business pending before the Senate.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. Pursuant to the order heretofore entered, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 11:45 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 51 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, January 20, 1937, at 11:45 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JANUARY 19, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed is the man that feareth the Lord, that delighteth greatly in His commandments; hold us close to Thee, our Father. We acknowledge our imperfections and pray that we may be strong and falter not in the presence of temptation. May the Christ spirit be the ruling passion of our daily conduct, that the strong may help the weak, the wise the foolish, the rich the poor, the good the bad, and that peace and good will may extend and bless our people everywhere. Let Thy merciful providence, O God, attend our fellow citizens as they come hither to pay tribute to our most distinguished President and our Vice President and those institutions which are the glory of a free and a liberty-loving people. Remember the avenues of our country through which the public mind is going and direct all in authority that they may deal justly and wisely with all problems. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

Pursuant to the provisions of House Resolution 60, Seventy-fifth Congress, the Speaker appointed as members of the Select Committee on Government Organization the following Members of the House: Mr. BUCHANAN (chairman), Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. WARREN, Mr. VINSON of Kentucky, Mr. ROBINSON of Utah, Mr. TABER, and Mr. GIFFORD.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, is the Speaker going to make an announcement in regard to tomorrow?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will make an announcement later. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 6]

Allen, Del.	Dingell	Kee	Romjue
Allen, La.	Dowell	Keller	Sadowski
Arnold	Duncan	Kenney	Schuetz
Biermann	Ferguson	Kniffin	Steagall
Buckley, N. Y.	Fernandez	Lambertson	Stubbs
Caldwell	Fitzpatrick	Lanzetta	Taylor, Colo.
Cannon, Wis.	Goodwin	Lord	Taylor, S. C.
Cartwright	Green	Mapes	Tinkham
Champion	Griswold	Meeks	Weaver
Chandler	Hendricks	Mills	Wood
Chapman	Higgins	Montague	Woodruff
Cravens	Honeyman	Nichols	Zimmerman
Crosser	Jarrett	Randolph

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOLAND). Three hundred and eighty-one Members have answered to their names—a quorum is present.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

INAUGURATION CEREMONIES

The SPEAKER. The Joint Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies was appointed during the last session of Congress. I have had many inquiries by Members with reference to the proceedings tomorrow. Under unanimous consent, when we adjourn today the House will stand adjourned until Thursday next. So there will be no official session of the House tomorrow.

But in the absence of the chairman of the House Joint Committee on Inauguration, who is unavoidably absent today and for the information of all Members, I think it necessary to make a statement with reference to the formation of the procession of the Members of the House to attend the ceremonies tomorrow morning.

I have been requested to announce to the House that all Members who expect to go out on the official platform will assemble here in the Chamber of the House at 11:40 o'clock tomorrow morning. I have been requested to state that in order to get by the police, including the marines, it will be absolutely necessary for each Member to display the official ticket in order to get his seat on the platform. That is an entirely reasonable regulation. If a Member does not have his ticket it may be difficult for him to get his seat, for there will be no opportunity to join the procession after it leaves the House.

I am further requested to announce that no children will be allowed upon the platform and there will be no seats except for Members actually holding tickets for their own seats.

That, the Chair thinks, covers the announcement that he was requested to make.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday morning next, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk, I be permitted to address the House for half an hour.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. As stated yesterday, I think it is the purpose to have under consideration on Thursday the bill extending the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. If the gentleman would, I would much prefer that he make his request for Friday.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, I change the request to Friday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that on Friday next, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, he be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in two particulars, one on the free-port bill and the other on the legislation of the coming session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

STABILIZATION FUND EXTENSION

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2519) to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would permit, I should like to make an arrangement in respect to a division of the time in general debate.

The SPEAKER. That was arranged under the special agreement entered into under unanimous consent. Under that arrangement, the gentleman from New York, in charge of the bill, and the ranking minority member are each entitled to control one-half of the time.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2519.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2519, with Mr. HILL of Alabama in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HILL of Alabama, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2519) to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 416. An act to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 416) to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is the Senate bill identical with the House bill which we have been considering in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. It is identical, I may say to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed by the Parliamentarian that the Senate bill is identical with the House bill. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] will recall that by unanimous consent permission was given to consider the Senate bill, in the event the Senate bill came over here, under the same circumstances as the House bill. This is merely a matter of expedition in the passage of the bill.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SOMERS] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 416.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 416, with Mr. HILL of Alabama in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes. I wish to commend the fair and clear manner in which the chairman of the committee has presented the available facts here today. He has made an exhaustive study of the subject matter and his remarks have proven his capability to handle such an important piece of legislation. The most regrettable incident in this legislation is the lack of legislative courtesy of the majority in bringing omnibus bills into this House for consideration. During the past 2, even 3 and 4 years, many measures were enacted under the pressure that an emergency existed. On several occasions five or six or seven wholly unrelated subjects were placed in one bill and passed here in this body, thus depriving the membership of the right to express their approval or disapproval of the different subjects that were incorporated in these measures. That practice in legislation is not only unfortunate, it is unsound. It says to the Members of the House on both sides of the aisle, "We do not have confidence in your judgment on a single measure, but we must bring them in here and tie you up so that you must follow the administration on all these measures, even though you might elect to vote differently on two or three separate sections in the bill." There is no reason today why these two highly important subjects should be incorporated in this one bill, and a motion will be offered to have a separate vote on these two proposals. These two acts have been in force 2 years by virtue of legislative sanction and 1 year additional through Executive proclamation. The first section, that in regard to the stabilization fund, insofar as I am informed, has brought no formidable opposition. The creation of that fund in our country was one of the defensive actions, rightly so created, because we learned that some of the major nations of the world had in secret provided tremendous sums of money to protect their exchange and their international financial operations. At this time it is reported that Great Britain has $2,000,000,000 in such a fund, France approximately $600,000,000, and it is to be assumed that the other nations have comparable sums or sums in proportion to their ability or their proportion of foreign trade.

Practically all the thought in relation to the stabilization fund has been directed to the international phase, or exchange, and I must confess that over hearings of many years in this committee it was apparent that few people in our country very clearly understood or had had much experience in exchange. So all of this thought was directed toward the international phase of the subject, or exchange, whereas we know that our internal or domestic trade amounts to 93 percent, and we should be far more concerned about the 90 or 93 percent than about the 7 or 10 percent that goes out into the world, but because of the financial coalitions abroad, necessarily we were obliged to create this fund, and the Secretary of the Treasury reported to the committee that no part of this fund was invested in foreign securities. Whether the distinction should be drawn that it was not invested in foreign exchange, I took it that no part of this fund had been so invested; but primarily it was a domestic question, and whether or not it has been extensively used to sustain Federal securities or obligations in the past has not been commented upon here, and possibly might be somewhat distantly connected with the present consideration, but that was one of the prime objectives in the creation of this fund, and its continuance can be effected without cost to the Treasury. It is virtually a statement on the part of our Government that we do not propose to have any foreign nations or group of nations effect a coalition or pursue a course of action that will detrimentally interfere with exchange or the price that we are to receive for our exports.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I want to get some information. During the chairman's discussion of the bill two thoughts were brought out: First, that we need not pay any attention to the imports, so primarily this is for the benefit of the exporters. Secondly, that our Secretary of the Treasury was purchasing paper francs with American gold. Then the answer would be that the purpose of this fund is to aid the sale of American manufactured articles to foreign countries, with the use of money furnished by America at the expense of agriculture, because we are not selling any agricultural products abroad. Is that correct?

Mr. THURSTON. Permit me to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I do not have any information that any portion of this fund is being used in the manner indicated, or as it was reported on the floor of the House a few moments ago, so I cannot reply to that interrogation.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Has it not been the understanding at all times that the very efficacy of this $2,000,000,000 fund must depend upon its secrecy?

Mr. THURSTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlemen yield?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand, it is the purpose of this bill to continue the power which was originally given to the President. Section 2 apparently goes further. Will the gentleman, in a short, brief way, tell us the additional power given to the President over the power granted in existing law?

Mr. THURSTON. To recur to the first section, in order to reply to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] this $2,000,000,000 in this fund is earmarked from the so-called profits in the revaluation of gold in our Treasury, whereby the footings of the Treasury were increased $2,800,000,000 as a result of the passage of this act. The $2,000,000,000 is earmarked from that fund. Necessarily, if those in charge of that fund in our country were to make known to the world their operations in the past, it might bring about some unpleasant situation of an international character. I think we are all agreed that that would be a very unhappy demand to make in this respect.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman may not be able to answer this, but how can anybody come on this floor and tell us how this money is being used, if its very efficiency depends on secrecy?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THURSTON] has again expired.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

As I said before, it surely would be very unwise to make an open disclosure of the operation of this fund.

Now, to reply to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], those in charge of this measure say that absolutely the only change that is contemplated in the language is to extend the operation of the gold clause for a period of 2 years and 5 months, from January 30, 1937, to the end of the fiscal year, June 30, 1939. No other change whatever is contemplated, and a reading of the amendment will disclose that the option giving Presidential authority to proclaim an extension of an additional year has been omitted.

Mr. MICHENER. It seemed to me section 2 could have been drawn with much less language, if there was no purpose to give any additional power. I wanted to be sure about it.

Mr. THURSTON. I interrogated the witnesses appearing before the committee on that very precise subject. It was definitely reported that no additional powers were asked, just an extension of time.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Referring to the statement made to the effect that the Secretary of the Treasury purchased United States Government direct obligations, has he authority to engage in open-market operations similar to the Federal Reserve Board in the use of this fund, or could those activities be construed as open-market operations?

Mr. THURSTON. The limitations on those in charge of this fund are very nominal. I take it that this Board could operate either in the domestic or foreign market.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield for a question.

Mr. RICH. When they charged off the $2,000,000,000 on account of the devaluation of the gold they deducted that from the Federal statement, did they not?

Mr. THURSTON. I do not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. RICH. When they devalued the gold dollar there was about $2,000,000,000 made by that act?

Mr. THURSTON. Two billion eight hundred million dollars.

Mr. RICH. They took that amount from the Treasury statement?

Mr. THURSTON. It was added to the resources of the Treasury.

Mr. RICH. In other words, the deficit was $34,464,484,000 on January 14. If they had not deducted that from the Treasury statement it would have been $36,000,000,000 plus?

Mr. THURSTON. It would have been $2,800,000,000 more than the sum you first mentioned.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. In reply to that, I think it is worth while putting in the RECORD here the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury over the radio relating to this fund:

> We have another cash drawer in the Treasury in addition to the drawer which carries our working balance. This is called the gold drawer. We do not propose here to subtract this $2,800,000,000 from the net increase of the debt, thereby reducing it to $1,600,000,000, and the reason we do not subtract this is for the reason this $2,800,000,000 is under lock and key.
> Most of it by authority of Congress is segregated in the so-called stabilization fund and for the present we intend to keep it there.

I call attention to the fact, however, that ultimately this will be reported and used to pay the debt of the country, but now it is where even we can get no information about it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. Yes; for a brief question.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Of the original $2,800,000,000, is it a fact that $800,000,000 has been applied to the national debt?

Mr. THURSTON. I cannot say that application has been made; I am not informed in that respect.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Iowa will yield, the gentleman from Indiana said $2,800,000,000. He means, does he not, $2,000,000,000?

Mr. PETTENGILL. No; we are talking about two different things. I am talking about the profit made on the devaluation of the gold, which was $2,800,000,000. Of this sum,

$2,000,000,000 was put in the stabilization fund. I am asking what happened to the remaining $800,000,000?

Mr. THURSTON. I cannot say whether that money has definitely been credited against the public debt, or whether it is still being carried in the general funds of the Treasury.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. THURSTON. Yes.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Has only $200,000,000 of the original $2,000,000,000 set aside in the fund been used in stabilization operations?

Mr. THURSTON. That is all that has been used up to the present time.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Then the question arises: Is it necessary to have a fund so large as $2,000,000,000 when we have used only $200,000,000, or one-tenth of the amount? Is it not practicable to apply to the public debt the $1,800,000,000 which is not being used? This would enable us to stop paying interest on that amount.

Mr. THURSTON. The gentleman makes a very practical suggestion, and it might be that it would be well received by the Treasury of the United States. I shall have to allow him, however, the privilege of pursuing his suggestion.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Was any reason assigned why the President had not exercised the power granted him of issuing $3,000,000,000 in paper money?

Mr. THURSTON. Paper did not get into the committee room, I may say to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Was any information given to the gentleman's committee as to why the President had not exercised this power?

Mr. THURSTON. None whatever, sir.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Was any information given the gentleman's committee why it was necessary to continue this power to the President to issue $3,000,000,000 of paper money?

Mr. THURSTON. I think I can answer that in a few words by saying that it was suggested that the President thought it highly desirable.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. THURSTON. Yes.

Mr. RICH. We have $11,306,000,000 in gold in the Treasury according to the statement of January 14.

Mr. THURSTON. Yes; half the visible gold of the world, which amounts to about $22,000,000,000.

Mr. RICH. The President still has the power to reduce the value of the dollar about 10 percent. He could make another billion dollars' profit by so doing and charge that off the public debt, could he not?

Mr. THURSTON. Yes; and that is a favorite way used by treasuries throughout the world in adding to their financial statements; revalue their gold, silver, and even their currency.

Mr. Chairman, whether this power is to be continued 2 additional years, plus 5 months, is a matter I wish to discuss quite briefly. Congress will again assemble here at the seat of Government in January of the next year; so if this subject is as important at that time as it is now, it would, of course, receive preferential consideration from the leadership of this body. Continuously in the press we read that the Congress has constantly surrendered its powers to the executive branch, so I expect to offer an amendment to strike out the figures 1939 and substitute the figures 1938, so that if this measure passes this body, this power would be extended from January 30 to June 30, 5 months, then 1 additional year, or a year and 5 months instead of 2 years and 5 months as is proposed.

May I inquire: Has there been any objection to the continuance of the policy in these acts? I call the Members' attention to resolutions adopted by the National Agricultural Conference just a year and 2 days ago when this body representing all the great farm organizations of the country met in Washington. This conference made these suggestions:

That the desire and objective of the National Agricultural Conference is that our monetary system be so revised and currency and credit so managed as to establish and maintain the dollar with a constant purchasing power, preserving the equity of contracts between debtor and creditor, and avoiding the dangers and losses that are inevitably involved in excessive and uncontrolled inflation or deflation. To accomplish this, be it further

Resolved, That there be established a "monetary authority" (by whatever name called).

That this monetary authority be, as largely as possible, nonpartisan and nonpolitical.

That their tenure of office be of such length as to protect this body from sudden change.

That the members, through pensions or otherwise, be adequately provided for throughout life.

That this "authority" be directed by definite mandate from Congress, under that section of the Constitution which directs Congress to "coin money and regulate the value thereof", to establish and maintain a unit of value (the dollar) with a constant purchasing power, a monetary currency regulated on an index of basic commodities on their world price, considering gold and silver as commodities, and dealing with them in terms of their market value.

That Congress vest in this "authority" the power to control price adjustments through monetary action by means of (a) repricing of gold, (b) regulating the value of the dollar, (c) declaring the gold content of the dollar, (d) regulating the issuance and volume of currency, (e) and such other powers over money and credit as Congress may see fit to give to it for the accomplishment of the congressional mandate, always reserving, however, to Congress at designated periods the right of review and direction of the operation under this mandate.

It was the consensus of opinion of this great clearinghouse of public thought throughout the country that such a body should be created to give specific attention to this subject rather than to leave it, as the present law does, to the Executive, which, of course, means political control. I felt, therefore, that it was my duty to call your attention to the fact that in this country, not only in agriculture but in industry and finance, there is a feeling that steps should be taken to definitely outline a sound financial policy. It will be my purpose to shorten the period suggested without at all affecting the current operation of the act for almost a year and a half in order that Congress may retain some of its powers. We may want to reconsider or again act upon this subject before the two and a half years shall have expired. I appeal to you to support the prerogatives, the rights, of the Congress and the plain mandate of the Constitution in regard to the legislative branch of the Government, and I assert that no good reason exists why we should continue both these acts two and a half years when their extension for a shorter period will not work any injustice to our Nation, and the adoption of a shorter period will be one step to reestablish Congress before the people of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK].

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Chairman, there are certain collateral issues involved in this legislation which few of us have had the training to fully understand. There are many aspects of it, however, that are easily within the comprehension of all of us.

This is the first of a series of bills which will be brought in here to perpetuate temporary powers given in an emergency. When any Government agency or bureau gets temporary authority, it seeks eternal life for that authority. If it secures any new powers, it attempts to make them greater and extend them. We are going to have many such bills proposed during this session, and if we are to stop disorderly and undemocratic government and return to the kind of government the people of this country are entitled to have, the time to begin is this afternoon.

There is not much dispute among the committee members as to the desirability of a stabilization fund. There is, however, a very serious disagreement as to the manner of its administration. Those of you who were here 3 years ago will recall that there was very strong opposition to giving one man the vast power this act gives the Secretary of the Treasury by putting $2,000,000,000 entirely within his control, accountable to no one and cloaked with absolute secrecy. It was urged by prominent men on both sides of the aisle here and in the Senate, notably by one whom we all respect, the senior Senator from Virginia, that the stabilization fund should be administered by a committee of five, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Governor of the Federal Reserve, the Comptroller of the Currency, and two men not connected with the Government but who were recognized as experts in international finance. It is obvious for many reasons that such a course should have been followed then and should be followed now.

No one can doubt that it is dangerous to allow one man to have undisputed and uncontrolled authority over such a huge sum of public funds.

He may be unwise. He may be incompetent. He may be dishonest. The man may be too timid or he may be too bold, and I refer to no particular individual. We ought to have a committee administer this fund. I think that should be plain to anyone.

Ordinary good sense requires that the stabilization fund should be used in cooperation, or at least in liaison, with the Federal Reserve. Under the present arrangement the open-market operations of the latter might easily create a situation in which the Federal Reserve was working unwittingly to checkmate the purposes of the stabilization fund.

I feel that the Congress and the public are entitled to know what this money has been used for, what it has accomplished, how much of it has been invested, and how it has been invested. If it is embarrassing to the Secretary of the Treasury to give us details, let him give us a general report. We are entitled to have that.

A few days ago the Secretary of the Treasury and some of his assistants appeared before the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures and chatted informally with reference to this measure. He declined to tell us how much was invested at the present time. He did not inform us how much had ever been used at one time, nor how much capital his experience shows to be necessary. If $2,000,000,000 is more than the requirement, let us turn some of it back, reduce the national debt, and save interest.

I cannot understand the need for such unseemly haste in pressing this bill for passage. But history repeats itself. It will be recalled that 3 years ago the President sent a message to Congress asking for these powers. That was on the 15th of January. On the 18th of January the committee reported the bill to the House, and on the 20th the bill was passed. We are doing about the same thing this year. The Secretary of the Treasury appeared before the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures on Friday and asked for this legislation. On Monday it was reported to the House and on Tuesday we are considering and deciding the matter. No reason has been suggested why all this haste is necessary.

The powers granted to the Secretary of the Treasury under the law, which you are now seeking to extend, do not expire until January 30. As I previously stated, we on the minority side feel it is proper that the Secretary of the Treasury be armed with a vast stabilization fund in order to protect our foreign exchange, to protect our exporters and importers, to promote foreign business, and as a defense against any attack some foreign countries might attempt upon American interests with their stabilization funds. We do criticize, however, the manner in which it is administered.

I hope that the chairman of our committee, whom we all respect, will confer with the Treasury Department and bring in some legislation which will be permanent and which will give the people of the United States certain safeguards in the administration of this fund, and as much publicity as may be safely given. There is safety in numbers and there is safety in publicity.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I believe all of the minority members of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures are opposed to the second part of this bill, involving additional power to devalue the dollar, lodged in the President's hands and held over the people of this country as a constant threat. It is a disturbing influence, and no good reason has been given to us why it should be continued.

The stabilization fund itself is an adeqaute defense against any sudden attack upon our own credit by a foreign nation. No situation can arise over night which would make it necessary to devalue the dollar another 9 cents. As I look at the question, it is simply this: Shall the President have the right to coin money and regulate the value thereof in the future, or shall that constitutional function be returned to the Congress?

If the administration deems it wise to further devalue the dollar, let the President state his reasons and request the appropriate legislation. He is certain to get it from this Congress promptly. In the meantime the stabilization fund affords ample protection.

I believe the people of this country hope and expect that the American form of government will be reestablished in the Seventy-fifth Congress; that Congress will resume its function as a legislative body and discharge its constitutional responsibilities.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee I would address myself wholly to the second section. That section will furnish to economic history two or three sentences of a chapter that will perhaps be the most interesting the science of economics will ever have produced. I may say that I have been familiar with this topic from its early stages here. In May of 1933 I had occasion to take the floor and discuss the first of the legislation for devaluating the dollar. Let me quote words I used then:

> Your action today, if it be completed, will lessen confidence. It will postpone the return of recovery by months, if not by years.

I charge today that the action then taken has delayed the return of happiness, comfort, and prosperity to the American people by the years I predicted as possible.

I arraign the monetary policy of this administration because of the damage it has done to the welfare of the Nation, because of the suffering it has brought to millions of our people, because of the hardships it has entailed on all the country, and because it is to continue uncertainty.

The law you are amending, like sundry other of the New Deal laws based on emergency need, gave the President power to end its life when he might declare the emergency ended. The President has made no such declaration in the case of any temporary law, as far as I am informed. If he thinks the depression is over, why does he not use his power so to proclaim? In asking 2 years more for this law, can it be that he thinks we have before us 2 years more of distress?

Depressions ordinarily have run their course in 3 or 4 years. You now find yourself in the eighth year of this depression—the eighth year—and still nearly 9,000,000 American citizens, able-bodied and willing to work, are said to lack employment; 9,000,000 of our citizens are kept from making a livelihood, from putting bread into the mouths of their wives and children; and in point of recovery we stand fifteenth among the nations of the world.

For other proof that we are not even yet out of the woods, almost three-quarters of a decade after the crash in Austria started the world down hill, note the appeal of the President to our businessmen that they renew enterprise, employ more men, invest their capital in constructive enterprise. Is he whistling to keep up the wind? Does he not know that every employer in the land would hire more men could he have reasonable prospect of selling his product at a profit? Such hope is the reason why men engage in producing. They do not need appeal, they need confidence as to the immediate future.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho rose.

Mr. LUCE. I do not yield. The subject is too important for me to be diverted from my thought.

I told the House more than 3 years ago that repudiation of the Government's pledge to keep its promises would destroy confidence on the part of the people. From that day to this you have seen confidence wavering and trembling and afraid.

The reason averred in May of 1933 for giving to the President power to devalue the dollar was that it would raise prices. The theory was that if the producer received more for his products he would have more to spend, and that thus activity would return all along the line. From what followed we have learned once more that such influences as lessening the value of gold in exchange or the issuing of paper money, resulting in what we call inflation, do not always work rapidly. In fact, unless the inflation is rapid and excessive, the effect of increasing the volume of money, we have now proved by experience, is rarely felt in less than a year—usually it takes 2 years. Professor Warren was brought down here from Cornell, and Professor Rogers from Yale to work the price-raising device by paying big prices for gold. The evident fact is that the thing did not work with the desired speed and so it was abandoned—one of the most expensive and ineffective experiments in all economic history.

To be sure, prices did rise; but it was largely for other reasons, and slowly. Even now they have reached but halfway to the desired and promised point. Official figures prove that.

On the other hand, what increase has been achieved, has shown itself in disastrous increase of the cost of living, which has gone up faster than wholesale prices.

This burden you have put upon all the people, and what have you reaped from it? You have helped some of the people, but you have hurt all the rest. You have brought the loss of the necessities of life to the very poor. You have made it more difficult for the wage earner to make both ends meet. You have added to the burdens of all those to whom you did not extend special privilege.

It was said that if you gave the power to the President to devalue the dollar, wages would increase proportionately; that the income of the consumer would rise; and that so no harm would be done, while many classes of the people would profit, especially the farmers of the West and the South. Who will rise here and tell me that income has generally risen in proportion to the increase of the cost of living?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I would prefer not to be interrupted, if I may.

Who will tell me that the income of the people has risen in proportion to the cost of living? Who will tell me that any beneficial thing has clearly come to the greater part of us from this?

What is our present situation and what the prospect? Did you know that there is not a nation on the face of the earth that today lacks an irredeemable paper currency? Our currency is worth nothing but the good faith of the country behind it. Ah, you say that is enough. I have heard that said again and again. My memory goes back to the days before recovery from the depression of 1873. I was a boy in the State of Maine, and I recall how a closely contested election eventually put into power a greenback candidate, a man who, in his day, was one of the thousands and millions in this country who demanded an irredeemable paper currency. There were cannon in front of the statehouse before he was seated, if indistinct memory serves me right. As a boy I hoped they would go off. I did not care whom they hit, but I wanted them to go off.

Again, I remember the Populist movement in 1892. I remember how then the demand was for irredeemable paper money; I remember the attempts that have been made in this House in recent years to that end; and now, strange to relate, the whole world has irredeemable paper money. With some relatively unimportant exceptions, you cannot exchange your paper for gold. You have sterilized gold. You have made that great hoard now being transported to Kentucky of no more importance in the money system than were it copper or brass or any other of the metals, and this is true of all the gold of the world.

Never before in the history of mankind has the peril thereof been escaped so long. Sooner or later the penalty is going to be paid. Sooner or later there will be such an experience as that of France with the assignat, as that of Germany or any other country where the Parliament or the monarch has undertaken to make gold valueless as an instrument of exchange.

I do not know whether I am doing right in calling attention to this fact. It will be only a spark sometime that will start a conflagration. I pray my words may not be the spark, and yet I cannot help telling you of my hope that wise men will remember that history repeats itself, that human nature does not change, and that the element of fear sleeps in every human heart. I pray we may yet escape repeating the old, old story of what happens when you have an irredeemable paper currency.

There is no need to extend the power of the President in this particular any further. There is no need to keep the sword of Damocles hanging over the head of business. There is no need of delaying the hope of business that it may engage in enterprise with some certainty of profit. You get no advantage out of prolonging uncertainty. You continue the danger. [Applause.]

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, how much time is remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has 21 minutes and the gentleman from New York has 19 minutes.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to attempt a discussion of this measure this afternoon. I do not know now that I am prepared intelligently to discuss it. I would, indeed, be presumptuous if I should attempt in any way to measure my feeble ability with the learning, information, and great ability of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] who has just addressed the House.

But when I hear prophecy recalled and recounted, when I hear the assertions that they have proved true in the past in the face of facts and figures to the contrary, I am not willing to keep my seat and allow the statement to go unchallenged.

At the time when the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts made the remarks which he referred to, when he says that he predicted dire disaster upon this country by the predicted advance in the cost of supplies to the consumer, I am reminded of the simple fact that at that time the farmer's wheat was 25 cents a bushel and rotting in the field, while today by the use of the gold-stabilization fund in the hands of the President of the United States it is selling at $1.14 a bushel.

I am reminded of the fact that at the time the gentleman was making dire predictions of disaster because of the devaluation of the gold dollar that the corn in the farmer's field, in the shock, was worth 10 cents per bushel. In the States of Kansas, Nebraska, and in Iowa, the State of the distinguished minority leader on the committee, corn was being burned for fuel, while the coal mines in my district and the States of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, and West Virginia were shut down for want of sales. More than 10,000,000 able-bodied men were without employment and their families in dire distress.

I am also reminded of the fact that at the time of the gentleman's dire prediction of disaster to this country in the devaluation of the gold dollar that 14 great Southern States with their staple crop of cotton was mortgaged to the limit; their homes were being sold by the thousands to satisfy the mortgage liens upon them; while today cotton has traveled all the way from 5 to 12 cents a pound by reason of the devaluation of the gold dollar in securing a foreign market for exportable surplus cotton.

The gentleman tells the House that it is going to be dangerous to put stabilization in the hands of a single man. Can we not visualize the difficulty that 435 Members of this House would have in trying to handle this question? We are engaged in a great international poker game for a market for our exportable surpluses; and England, the big European boss, has a trump of more than $2,000,000,000 in hand; France, $600,000,000; Switzerland, $300,000,000; and, of course, we are not going to continue in any game without a full hand. It may be we have had to use only $200,000,000 of this fund, but as trade increases we will need more of it, and, undoubtedly, the mere knowledge that this vast sum is always available has a controlling effect in our negotiation of trade agreements. It is our surplus that we can resort to as occasion may require. Many distinguished gentlemen on the other side of the aisle have talked with much feeling about our tax measure that takes the surpluses of domestic corporations, and yet they urge that our Government should have no available surplus.

I may say that I have some objection to this bill. I have the objection that I would like to see it more maturely considered, and I have an objection to the broad and unlimited powers granted to a single man in this country; but I say this: If such powers are to be granted and extended to any man in the White House, so far as I am concerned, and without partisanship, if they are to be so handled, I would rather see them handled by a Democrat than by a Republican. [Applause.]

The swan song and loud lamentations of my distinguished and venerable friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] about loss of confidence of the American people in this administration seems to me to be rather illogical in the face of the fact that at the last November election the President was reelected by the greatest popular vote in all our history and swept into office by the electoral votes of 46 out of 48 States. As a result of that same lack of confidence, over which the distinguished gentleman weeps so bitterly, and of that same election there remain today but 88 Republicans on the other side of the aisle as a mighty testimonial of the popular will. Compare that with the dark days of 1933 after 12 years of rule by the party of confidence, and then weigh the argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts and it will be found wanting. [Applause.]

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, in February of last year I made rather lengthy remarks on the floor of the House on the subject of The Watering of the Currency. At that time I think I suggested, as did the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], that because of devaluation cotton did go from something like 6 cents to 11 cents a pound, and because of devaluation and other laws it went to the consumer to a price of 22 cents. It was because the processing tax and the N. R. A. costs were added.

It was suggested today that in one of his replies the Secretary of the Treasury said that we have about $2,800,000,000 under lock and key in a separate drawer, "and we are not going to use it to reduce our debt for awhile anyway." Mr. Chairman, I presume it is still there in a separate drawer, together with possible French francs that he may have recently bought. And it is evident, is it not, that he can help rig the market on our own securities? If you, representing a corporation, should buy your securities in a day or two before you want to issue more, so as to support the market, you know what would happen to you as an officer of that corporation, do you not, under the Federal Securities Act? But our Government is supposed to be doing it, and, as three of the Justices of the Supreme Court have said, he has taken "those ill-gotten gains of $2,800,000,000 profit" and has put it into that separate drawer, and we, as Congressmen, are not supposed to know anything about it.

We have to dig if we want to find anything about our Treasury Department, and I have been doing a little digging lately. I was not surprised to read in the RECORD that they had been digging in another branch of the Government. I find that the R. F. C., for instance, had given away some $1,800,000,000, but the notes representing that gift are still carried on the books of the Treasury as assets, and the R. F. C. is still paying a slight interest upon them, and the public is told that we have $17,000,000,000 worth of assets, $12,000,000,000 of foreign debt—of doubtful value—and $5,000,000,000 of seemingly recoverable assets. When you look into it and read the President's speech before election on our recoverable assets, we may express some amazement. I invite attention to these matters. Read the speech made last Friday, which appears in the RECORD, and let us wake up to the manipulation of these funds.

I am willing to vote for this stabilization fund to be continued, but it ought to be cut in half. It ought to be limited for its proper uses. Congress should closer define those uses. We ought to be ashamed to rig the market on our own securities. As far as further deflation of the dollar is concerned, it is wrong to have that sword of Damocles still held over the head of our people for another 2 years. Cotton being about the only big exportable article was the principal big thing helped by deflation. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], with all the gold buried in his own State, might be expected to come in often and devalue again and again so that foreign countries could buy our dollars cheaper to pay for the cotton they purchase. The chairman says, "Never mind about the importer, let him take his medicine." However, his own Government is trying to increase imports and the importer should be considered nearly as much as the exporter.

The integrity of every life-insurance policy and every savings-bank balance hangs in the balance. Because other countries had already devalued so much, we did not get the advantages we probably hoped to get. I wrote a dozen of the money experts in the country and asked what effect devaluation had had in the 1 year, and I put it in the RECORD on that day in February. I wrote the Secretary of the Treasury and asked if he could say if there was any reflection of devaluation in the rise in prices, and whether any credit should be given to devaluation and he wrote me that it was probably very little. However, cotton is the important exportable product, and devaluation helped the price of cotton. But now that the most important nations seek stabilization and have even entered into an agreement that we will support the franc, there seems no need to go further off the gold standard.

Mr. SOMERS of New York rose.

Mr. GIFFORD. I have not much time.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. I know the gentleman has not much time and I shall grant him a minute more but I would ask him this question. When we buy French francs, are we buying gold?

Mr. GIFFORD. I cannot answer that question, but we are putting up gold to buy them, and those French francs are apparently going into that secret drawer.

You say you have private information that there have been gains on these transactions. I say $2,000,000,000 is too much. One billion ought to be enough. I think the gentleman really probably agrees with me. You have in that box, as far as we know, according to the Treasury statement, $2,800,000,000, but not carried as assets; but the notes of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that are not worth anything are carried as such. That seems to be the Treasury's method of reporting to the people these days. Perhaps we can get information. I think we may go to the members of the committee and might learn what the Secretary of the Treasury told the members of that committee; but the public must not know. It was public policy to proclaim when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation loaned money to banks that information brought trouble enough, but you insisted that the people know all about the transactions of its own Government.

Oh, a request has come from the White House. We must act in 2 hours on a matter which you say, Mr. Chairman, is the most important matter we have before us this session.

I have studied this problem, in my own weak way. Of course, I do not know as much about it as the gentleman from New York, but I have given it much attention. I know that very important issues are involved, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] said. The integrity of $22,000,000,000 in our life-insurance companies, $10,000,000,000 in savings banks are involved. The dollar, which may be again jeopardized if the President sees fit, and in his own good time and at his pleasure. I would predict if he did again devalue by 10 percent, the effect would be far greater than the former devaluation of 40 percent, because at that time he was largely meeting the conditions that already prevailed.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Massachusetts 2 additional minutes.

Mr. GIFFORD. So when you hold that threat over the value of money, what will continue to be the situation? Big business has had to divorce itself from the banks and carry on its own financing. Investors will not know what the value of the dollar may be and will continue to hesitate in their commitments.

It is a shame to allow only 1 hour of debate on a side. It is deplorable that we cannot review conditions and consider what the effect of devaluation has been. Why did not your committee open its doors to those importers who have been stung? Why did you not open your doors and let those people who had actually suffered, men who know what they are talking about in regard to finance, come before your committee? Oh, no; the Secretary of the Treasury, who is simply, as he says, the loyal servant of his President, seems to have been the only one necessary to come before your committee to give you information. It seems not wise that the people be heard.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Is the gentleman serious when he asks me to open the committee room to importers, so that they may obtain information which would bleed the American people?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I listened with much interest to my colleague from New York [Mr. SOMERS], who made a very fair and clear explanation of the bill this afternoon. It may be he somewhat exaggerated its importance when he told the House that the passage of this bill will affect the price of polar bear meat up in the vicinity of the North Pole or elephant tusks and ivory at the Equator. If he is correct, then we should have been allowed more ample debate in this greatest deliberative body in the world to consider such an important piece of legislation.

I imagine every Member on my side of the House is somewhat embarrassed by this omnibus bill, because you have combined entirely different propositions in one bill. Most of us realize the importance of continuing the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund. If the fund is necessary, of course, it must be secret. It is self-evident that the House of Representatives and the Senate cannot control such a fund. We all deplore the fact that it must be secret, because by its very nature it is undemocratic and un-American, but we know that we cannot operate it ourselves. No committee of this House can operate it. As a matter of fact, it is not $2,000,000,000. It is $200,000,000 that is now in process of being used and manipulated to maintain our exchange values. We only do it because we have to play in a poker game. We have to have enough money to ante up, to play our hand, and, above all, not so much to play our hand as to call the bluff of the foreign nations, and by calling that bluff we are able to stabilize our own currency in the interest of all our people.

We do not want a stabilization fund. We are forced to have it because England started the game and others followed suit.

Although I think this stabilization fund is undemocratic, and un-American, and secretive, and all that, I believe it is necessary. We are forced to have it against our will, and as long as we must have it, I take the word of the chairman of the committee [Mr. SOMERS of New York] that it is handled honestly. As far as this is concerned, the man who is responsible for it is a constituent of mine, the Secretary of the Treasury, who lives at Hopewell Junction, N. Y., where he is a voter and a bona-fide constituent. I know he is an honest man, and no one in this country could impugn his integrity. [Applause.]

We now come to the question of delegation of power. That is an old hobby of mine. I do not believe we have any right to continue to delegate away and surrender our constitutional powers to the President of the United States. I think the time has come not to delegate more of our constitutional powers but to take them back and restore them to the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

What does the Constitution say? The Constitution of the United States, article I, section VIII, clause 5, provides that Congress shall have the right to coin money and regulate the value thereof and of foreign coins. This is the power that is specifically granted to Congress; and it is a fact that in this bill we are surrendering and delegating away our own constitutional power to the Chief Executive. The President tells us the depression is over; if it is over where is the emergency? Why are we called on now to surrender this power for 2½ years? It would be bad enough to surrender it for a year and a half, although that would be within the life of this Congress, but to surrender it for 2½ years when there is no emergency, is not right and there is no justification for it. I think the Republicans, at least, as a body should oppose delegating more power to the President. [Applause.]

We Republicans have had a lot of fun upbraiding Democrats for not carrying out the provisions of their own party platform in the past. What does the Republican platform say about this identical bill? It reads as follows:

> We will restore to the Congress the authority lodged with it by the Constitution to coin money and regulate the value thereof by repealing the laws delegating this authority to the Executive.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. THURSTON. The Democratic platform contains essentially the same provision.

Mr. FISH. I am not responsible for the Democratic platform. They never live up to it anyway. [Laughter.] We Republicans, however, should uphold our own platform, and I hope the Republicans will not delegate the power to regulate the value of money to the President in this bill. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY].

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, about the only thing that would impel me to arise and interrupt the quiet of this Chamber today would be my sense of humor and my memory of events of the past.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened to a number of speeches, particularly those of the two gentlemen from Massachusetts and the gentleman from New York. They were so reminiscent of the Republican campaign speeches we heard over the radio that I could not contain myself; but, like my friend from Kentucky, I had to arise. During the campaign through which we just passed the Republican orators used all the words in the dictionary which denote catastrophe, chaos, disaster, and all manner of dire consequences, words just used by these three gentlemen on the Republican side. We all, of course, know the answer of the American people to the Republican campaign of fear and intimidation. Twenty-seven million votes is scarcely a sign that the American people took any of those words seriously any more than we Democrats upon this side should now take seriously the predictions of disaster we have heard this afternoon from the charter members of the Republican society of the "prophets of doom."

Speaking seriously, there is nobody in this House who objects to delegating power to another branch of the Government more than I do, but when we have to delegate power to fight a condition I am glad, as a Democrat, that we can delegate it to a competent Executive instead of an incompetent one, such as the Republican Executive who headed this Government when our country was brought into the greatest depression of history.

Objection was raised to the fact that debate on this bill was limited to an hour a side. During the last 4 years the Republican Party has had a good many hours within which to suggest, if they could, better ways to bring this country out of the depression than those followed by our President. I nor no one else heard any suggestions of a better method of doing things, though we continue to hear the same prophecies of disaster that we heard in the campaign. We on the Democratic side, of course, are going to give to those prophecies of disaster the same reply as that given to them by the American people on the 3d of last November and pass this bill to continue a policy that works. [Applause.]

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, certain fundamental questions are involved in this legislation to which we should give more consideration than is possible in the time set aside for the discussion of this bill. I hope, however, that during this session of Congress an opportunity will present itself for a lengthy debate of the questions which are so pertinent to our economic life.

In the first place, the President is continuing to adhere to fallacious theories concerning the relationship between the dollar value of gold and the commodity price index. The dollar value of gold has no relationship whatsoever to the domestic commodity price index unless the money of the country is redeemable in gold; and the Warren-Pearson theory that the commodity price index follows the dollar price of gold has been so completely repudiated by every leading economist of the Nation that it seems somewhat ironical that we in our limited capacities on these subjects should still be adhering to the idea that devaluation has anything to do with the commodity price index. The danger lies in the fact that the Chief Executive still believes that the dollar price of gold has some relationship to our commodity price index. In this respect the index of business turnover, consumption, and production stands at about 93 with 1929 taken as 100. Bank credit is only about 50 percent normal.

The President, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System believe that they need these powers to stop inflation. A study of the charts, however, will reveal that any exercise of these powers will affect only 50 percent of the credit base of inflation. The other 50 percent of our credit is dependent for its stability upon the soundness of our monetary policies; it is dependent upon the policies which we as a Congress write into the law. It does not make any difference what the value of an ounce of gold is as long as it is of some stable value. I was very much interested in the remarks of the gentleman from New York wherein he said that France and Great Britain came to us asking assistance and that it was necessary to lend that assistance in order to stabilize the currencies of the world.

He said that so long as this exchange war continued there would be need for this legislation. The United States must take the offensive in this war because at the present time, as called to your attention by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], there is not a redeemable currency in the world. They have always looked to us for leadership in this particular, and our contribution to world monetary and exchange stability should be to tie our dollar to something and do it quick in order that they may be able to use our currency as a base for stabilization. They are looking to us for leadership in the movement for stability. Why did Great Britain and France come to us for assistance and enter into these monetary treaties? Merely because we had by this fallacious gold policy of ours forced France off the gold standard and the whole gold bloc over there had to follow suit. Now they are praying for the return of some of this gold in order that they may have some base upon which to build international stabilization. [Applause.]

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, may I call attention of the majority party to the Democratic platform of 1932:

> We advocate sound currency be preserved at all hazards and an international monetary conference called on the invitation of our Government to consider the rehabilitation of silver and related questions.

Also may I call attention to the platform of the majority party of 1936:

> We approve the objective of a permanently sound currency, so stabilized as to permit of more wide fluctuation in value—

And so forth.

The Democratic Party has stated in the platforms of 1932 and 1936 that it is in favor of a sound currency, yet they want to give to the President of the United States power to devalue the dollar 10 percent additionally and extend this power for two and a half years. Rather than delegate the powers that the Constitution gave to this Congress we should retain the power to ourselves.

May I call attention to the statement of the Federal Treasury as of January 14, which shows that we are in debt at the present time over $34,000,000,000. Why does the Secretary of the Treasury carry in the banks of this country $1,895,000,000 to use for inflationary purposes if he is not afraid of the monetary system of this country? I hold in my hand 100 German marks of the Kaiser Wilhelm day; it is worthless today. If you keep on with the juggling of our dollar, the increasing of our national debt, it will be only a few years till the dollar will be as worthless as the German mark of 1916. Let us have a sound currency and a stable Government, one in which we all have confidence. Fulfill your party platform pledge to the American people.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (c) of section 10 of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934, approved January 30, 1934, is amended to read as follows:
> "(c) All the powers conferred by this section shall expire June 30, 1939, unless the President shall sooner declare the existing emergency ended and the operation of the stabilization fund terminated."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. SNELL: Page 1, line 9, after the word "terminated", insert "Provided, That upon the termination of the fund the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit to Congress a complete audit and report upon its operations from the time of its establishment."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, it does not seem to me that any Member should oppose this amendment. I am reliably informed that the Secretary of the Treasury has no opposition to an amendment of this kind. Of course, there are a great many of us who feel that we should have reports from time to time with reference to the various funds carried in these two items. But, on the other hand, the chairman of the committee told us this morning that on account of certain reasons he could not divulge to the House and to the country everything that was stated by the Secretary of the Treasury. There is one thing certain, and that is after the whole thing is over, the reason given by the chairman would not be effective, and there would be no reason why we should not have the information we think we should have now to intelligently pass on this legislation.

I also feel it is entirely in accord with the statement made by the President that all such funds be audited and a full and complete report made to the Congress and the country regarding them. I feel that the country and the Members of the House are entitled to this information, and there is no reasonable excuse for not having such an audit and report made at the termination of the authority. I believe the welfare of the Nation demands such a report and audit, and I trust there will not be any opposition to this amendment.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. Chairman, I oppose the amendment just offered not so much on account of its merit, but because it is the intention of the committee to consider a separate bill asking for an accounting at the termination of this authority.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. I yield to my colleague from New York.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman is not opposed to this amendment on merit, why is it not better to insert it in the bill at this time when we have the subject matter before us for consideration?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. I am going to tell the gentleman why I do not think it is advisable at the moment. The committee will hold hearings in reference to that matter and allow all the time necessary. It has been requested of the committee that this bill be passed as quickly as possible. To amend the bill at the present time would delay the passage of the legislation, and, therefore, I am forced to call to my aid all of my Democratic friends to vote down the amendment after assuring the gentleman that his amendment will receive consideration in due time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. I yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Are we to draw the inference from the gentleman's remarks that this subject is to be touched on in the President's inaugural address?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. I could not say with any exactness.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is it imperative that this bill be passed today?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. What I might say to the gentleman in answer to that question would be only a guess, and I would not want to mislead him.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SNELL) there were—ayes 59, noes 93.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The second sentence added to paragraph (b) (2) of section 43, title III, of the act approved May 12, 1933, by section 12 of said Gold Reserve Act of 1934 is amended to read as follows: "The powers of the President specified in this paragraph shall be deemed to be separate, distinct, and continuing powers, and may be exercised by him, from time to time, severally or together, whenever and as the expressed objects of this section, in his judgment, may require; except that such powers shall expire June 30, 1939, unless the President shall sooner declare the existing emergency ended."

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. THURSTON: Section 2, line 10, strike out the figures "1939" and substitute therefor the figures "1938."

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in offering this amendment was somewhat explained in my remarks of a few moments ago. Instead of Congress delegating this authority for 2 years and 5 months, the period would be shortened by my amendment to 1 year and 5 months. We will assemble here again next January, and we will then have ample opportunity to reenact or extend or modify this legislation if the situation at that time warrants such congressional action.

None of us can foresee just what the situation may be at that time, and should not the Congress, the body that is first mentioned in the Constitution of the United States, retain this authority so it can exercise its power in this respect at a later date if the exigency should require further consideration of this subject?

Not only is this precise phase of the matter before us, but I know there is a feeling throughout the country that the Congress should reassert itself in our national life, and particularly with respect to the legislative functions that have been specifically placed upon our membership.

So I plead with the members of the majority who, of course, hold command of this situation by a 4-to-1 vote, to give careful consideration to this appeal, because no one on the floor of this House will assert that any serious injury will follow if this body for at least a short period holds this power where it belongs—in the legislative branch of our Government.

A vote for this amendment is a vote to reaffirm the power of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I think all will agree that an extension of 1 year is inadequate. Consequently, I am opposing this amendment. We all realize that conditions outside of the United States, over which we have no control whatever, are not going to clear to the extent that at the end of the year this legislation will not be necessary. Therefore I simply ask what is the sense of passing something temporarily when we know we will have to come back another year and pass the same thing again? We might as well do the job now, once and for all.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. I yield.

Mr. RICH. We are passing this not for 1 year but for 2½ years, and the gentleman might not come back to change this legislation. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THURSTON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I think the membership of the House ought to understand what the progressive Republican view is on this subject. The Constitution of the United States provides that the power to issue money and regulate the value thereof shall remain in the Congress of the United States. We have never repealed that provision and we have never modified it. It is still the law of the land, and yet this same Congress, in 1863, attempted to abrogate the provisions of the Constitution and passed a National Bank Act, and the national banks have been issuing money ever since, contrary to the Constitution; and we finished the job in 1913 by passing the Federal Reserve Act, which took the power further out of the hands of Congress.

Now, I am in favor of bringing this power back to the people and lodging it in the Congress of the United States, but there is no use of trying to reestablish that theory by passing any resolution in any Republican convention to the effect that they want to take this power now away from the President of the United States. This power today is lodged with the private banking interests of the country, and the only thing that protects us from the private greed of the bankers of America is this power which we have given the President of the United States, and I am in favor of continuing that power. It is not right to put every commodity on the basis of gold without any change. Gold has changed 2,000 percent in its value since the human family started out, and do we want our wheat and our cattle all measured in terms of gold without any change? No. Give the President of the United States through this Congress the power to change the relative value of gold, with respect to the rest of our products and commodities, and then you are putting the power to regulate the value of money back in the hands of the people, where it belongs. This Congress can constitutionally delegate authority to the President to carry out its direction to devalue the dollar further if necessary. The Republican convention at Cleveland went on record to take this power away from the President, but they did not say, nor did they intend to say, that they would take this power away from the private banking interests of the country. Those who vote for this bill are voting with the people to control their money; those who vote against it are voting to continue the reign of the private banking control of the value of our money. That is the issue before us now.

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, there is a difference in the effect of this legislation which this act is to amend and continue, a difference in effect externally and abroad, and effect internally and within our own country.

There is a difference in the effect of the revaluation of gold under the basis of our money today and the revaluation of our money.

Under the revaluation of gold the dollar externally or abroad was devalued to 59 cents, while at the same time here in our own country, internally, the dollar measured by the 1926 value level has remained calling for 123 cents worth or value of labor and labor products.

The value of money is always relative to labor, labor products, and commodity values, under which the devaluation of the dollar appreciates the value of labor and the products of labor, or, in other words, raises prices—the money measure of values.

The revaluation or devaluation of money largely affects debts and contract obligations stipulated for payment in money. Revaluation of money upward lowers prices, the money value, and makes debts and money contracts call for more labor and commodities.

On the other hand, the devaluation of money raises prices, the money measure of values, and makes debts and money contracts payable with less property, commodities, and labor, or, in effect, lightens the debt burden.

Revaluation of money upward, lowering prices and money values and making lighter the debt burdens, or restoring the money basis upon which contracted, is referred to disparingly by some schools of monetary science as "inflation", while the devaluation of money, raising prices, the money value of labor and products, and piling higher the burden of debts, is styled or called "currency reform."

It must be realized and understood that the relative value of money is not fixed by the number of cents in the dollar or by the number of grains of gold or silver designated to be coined in the dollar. This is not what determines money values.

Price is the money value of labor and commodities in contrast with the economic value which always may or always remain unchanged, regardless of the law of supply and demand, like the value of wheat as food to sustain the body.

The value or relative value of money is determined under the law of supply and demand by the number of dollars in circulation, the amount of money available for the exchange of labor, services, and the products of labor.

The relative value of money is determined under the law of supply and demand the same as the relative value of wheat or the relative value of corn or labor products. If we decrease the supply of wheat, all other conditions remaining the same, the price value of wheat is reduced. Or if we decrease or limit the wheat crop and reduce the amount of the wheat supply, all other conditions remaining unchanged, the relative value of wheat is raised to a higher level.

The relative value of money is controlled by the same law of supply and demand and the value of money rises and falls and the price level falls and rises as the number of dollars in circulation, or the amount of money available for exchange is increased in amount.

The effect of the devaluation of the dollar, under the existing Gold Revaluation Act, upon debts and money contract obligations was to make foreign debts and money obligations due from foreigners and foreign governments to our citizens and our Government payable at 59 cents upon the dollar.

But the law left our domestic debtor under the 1926 price level standard to give up 123 cents on the dollar to pay his domestic debts and mortgages, as, regardless of the gold contents of the dollar, with the obligations of the Government behind it, its relative value remained unchanged.

I am not complaining of the devaluation which enabled foreigners and foreign governments to pay their debts at 59 cents on the dollar, because this was about the value which they had contracted for to pay under the values and the price level at the time contracted, as only on this basis can the foreign debt be collected.

The same reason that farmers and home owners have not been able to pay their mortgages and have suffered delinquency and foreclosure is the same reason that foreigners and foreign governments have not been able to pay their debts to us.

I am only insisting that our own farmers and our own home owners owing mortgages be given the benefit of the same devaluation of money, which means an appreciation of prices of money values, and the right to pay their debts and mortgages upon the same money basis, or money values, as foreigners and foreign governments are given, and save themselves from the embarrassment of insolvency or the humiliation of foreclosure sale of their farms and homes. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section 2. This section carries the delegation of power to the President to continue the depreciation of the dollar to 59 cents or on down to 50 cents, as he decides. Furthermore, it includes the $3,000,000,000 Thomas proposal giving the President the power to issue $3,000,000,000 of fiat money. A number of Republicans have spoken today and given the impression that the Republican Party is united against depreciating the dollar to 59 cents. I do not know that I would have any great objection, if the Congress would take back the power from the President to regulate the value of money and then itself establish a 59.3-cent dollar. That is what Congress should do now. Of course, I know this bill is going through. The only possible protest that I can make is to move to strike out the entire section, because I am opposed to delegating that power to the President. It is bad enough to leave it at 59.3 cents, but to give him the power to depreciate it still further merely increases the loss of confidence in America and makes for more uncertainty and confusion.

In spite of what some Republican Members said, who took upon themselves to proclaim as a policy of the Republican Party opposition to a depreciation of the currency, our party platform reads as follows:

> We oppose further devaluation of the dollar.

It does not say that we want to put back the dollar to 100 cents where it was before. We do not say that we want to go back on the gold standard. We say that we are opposed to further devaluation. This section gives the President power to devalue the dollar to 50 cents. It also gives the President power to issue greenback money, and surrenders our constitutional power to regulate the value of money. If you Republicans are against further devaluation, against inflation, or if you are against delegating power to the President to regulate the value of money, then support this amendment to strike out the entire section in accordance with the express wording of our party platform.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I assume that what the Republican platform means in that respect is that we favor a stabilized currency in order that the business of this Nation may know from day to day and month to month and year to year what our money is going to be worth, and for that reason the Republican Party has always taken, and I hope will continue to take, offense at these movements which create and maintain this uncertainty with respect to the value of our currency.

On the question of the delegation of authority, I call the attention of the Committee to the fact that during the last 3 years we have passed legislation appropriating money and turning this money over to the executive branch of the Government without any strings attached to it whatsoever, in the stupendous sum of $14,350,000,000. That is un-American. It is undemocratic. No Democrat who follows the principles of his party would ever submit to turning over $2,000,000,000 to the Secretary of the Treasury without at least having him report to this legislative body, the direct representatives of the people, the use to which he has put that money. No Democrat who follows the principles of Jackson or Jefferson would ever vote to give to any Executive, no matter how much confidence he might have in his ability and integrity, the stupendous sum of $14,350,000,000 in the space of 3 years. You men have taken the floor here and have tried to justify your stand in being rubber stamps, as we have been called by the people——

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Not now—and you deplore the fact that the people of this country are condemning your stand in Congress because you have delegated so much authority to the Executive, and yet you claim that you stand for democratic principles. There is nothing democratic in turning $2,000,000,000 over to any individual and, with a wave of the hand, saying, "We do not care what you have done with it; you do not have to account to the people for something over $200,000,000 of the people's money." That is not democracy. That is a condition which may exist under Stalin in Russia, Mussolini in Italy, or Hitler in Germany, but there is no place for such a policy under the American flag. [Applause.]

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I desire to address myself only to the constitutional question involved in this bill. Outside of the constitutional question I do not profess to be very well versed on the merits of the bill, nor do I believe, for that matter, that anyone in the House is particularly well prepared to discuss the merits of the bill. The reason for that is that the committee, out of which the bill came, has never given any really serious study to its provisions and has never made any real report upon it to the House.

Now, it may be that we need a stabilization fund. I dare say we do, and I would have no objection to continuing the stabilization fund if that were all this bill provided for. Whether the amount of the stabilization fund as provided in this bill is too great I do not know, and I venture to say no one else among the general membership of the House knows, because the committee, so far as we are aware, has never given study to that point, or, if it has, it certainly has never reported its findings to us.

But regardless of the question of the propriety of continuing the stabilization fund, I think Members of the House of Representatives should pause at this point and consider what they are doing in this bill from a constitutional viewpoint. What is it we are asked to do by enactment of this bill? We are not asked merely to continue the stabilization fund. Most of us would readily agree to that if that were all the bill provided. The important and the objectionable thing we are asked to do here is to surrender to the President the right to issue money and to regulate the value thereof.

This bill provides that the President in his own discretion may determine upon and regulate the value of money without even consulting the Congress. It provides that he may reduce the gold content of the dollar down to 50 percent whenever he may so desire.

Understand, I am not objecting here to reducing the gold content of the dollar. Perhaps it ought to be reduced. But if that is so then the Congress should reduce it by law. The Congress has no right to give the President discretionary authority to reduce it by decree or proclamation. That is a direct surrender of legislative power by the Congress to the President, which the Constitution forbids.

The Constitution provides, in so many plain words, that the power to coin money and to regulate the value thereof shall be vested in the Congress of the United States and in no one else. In passing this measure we directly violate not only the spirit but the very letter of the Constitution when we provide that the President, in his discretion, shall have the power to regulate the value of money. No one can challenge that statement. No one can honestly contend otherwise. Therefore, this act is forbidden by the Constitution; and, if there were any way by which the constitutional question could be raised in court, which unfortunately there is not, the Supreme Court would necessarily be obliged to hold the act unconstitutional.

So, entirely aside from its merits, I call upon the Members of this House to pause and consider what they are doing in passing this measure. They are doing that which is forbidden by the Constitution. They are surrendering to the Executive legislative authority which the Constitution has denied him. They are abandoning legislative responsibility which the Constitution imposes upon them, and them alone. I trust the motion of the gentleman from New York to strike out this unconstitutional provision of the bill may prevail.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The pro-forma amendments were withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] to strike out section 2.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SNELL) there were—ayes 52 and noes 107.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on this section and all amendments has been closed.

Mr. GIFFORD. But I moved to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. Such a motion must be in writing.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the same do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HILL of Alabama, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 416) to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised, directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time and was read the third time.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FISH moves to recommit the bill to the committee with instructions to that committee to strike out section 2, and report the same back forthwith.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] to recommit the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 74, nays 313, not voting 47, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. BANKHEAD, and he answered "nay."

Mr. HARRINGTON and Mr. ALESHIRE changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. HIGGINS, is unavoidably absent on account of official business. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. MILLS, is unavoidably absent on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and the previous order already made for that day, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUCE, Mr. WHITE of Idaho, and Mr. VOORHIS asked and were given permission to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD an address of the Honorable John Dickinson, Assistant Attorney General of the United States, entitled "The Enforcement of the Antitrust Law", delivered before the Council for Federal Progress at the Federal Auditorium, Washington, D. C., on December 10, 1936.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that 10 days' leave of absence be granted to my colleague the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MILLS], who is ill in a hospital.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again state to Members that it is not necessary to make these requests from the floor; they may be filed with the Clerk on the right of the Chair.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after the reading of the Journal, the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, and orders previously entered, that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] may address the House for 15 minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I must, because I have already objected to a similar request from our side of the aisle, I hope the gentleman will not insist on his request.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I modify my request and ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] may address the House on Friday for 15 minutes after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and previous orders.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we are hoping to be able to call up the crop loan bill next Thursday or Friday. I hope too many of these requests will not be made. How much time has now been spoken for?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed by the Parliamentary Clerk that 1 hour of official orders has been provided.

Mr. JONES. I will not object under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

REPORT FROM COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules may have until 12 o'clock tomorrow night to file a report.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman advise us on what subject the report is to be filed?

Mr. RAYBURN. I think the Rules Committee may be called upon to report a rule making in order a bill for the extension of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and a rule making in order, possibly on Friday, the crop loan bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in view of the remark by the majority leader that this rule has to do with the extension of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, I think it well to announce the fact that this bill also includes provision for the extension of the Commodity Credit Corporation, the Electric Farm and Home Authority, and the Export and Import Bank.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; the things coming under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It had been generally understood, however, that the bill had nothing to do with any other agency but the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I merely take this opportunity to correct that impression and to state that it includes four agencies.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman is quite correct about that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas.

There was no objection.

INAUGURAL CEREMONIES

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, several Members have asked me to request the Speaker to make his announcement with reference to the meeting of Members in this Hall tomorrow morning. Some of the Members were not here this morning when the Speaker made his announcement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is glad to repeat the suggestion he made this morning at the request of the Joint Committee on Inaugural and in the absence of the House chairman of that committee. Members have made a good many inquiries about the formation of the procession tomorrow on the part of the Members of the House to go out onto the inaugural platform to the ceremonies to be held there.

Under the arrangements made by the joint committee, and at the suggestion of the chairman and the Sergeants at Arms of the Senate and House, who will jointly have control over this matter, it is requested that all Members of the House who desire to attend the ceremonies meet in the Hall of the House of Representatives not later than 11:40 a. m. tomorrow morning. There will be no session of the House tomorrow, and it will be very difficult for Members who do not form in the Hall of the House to get into the procession, because very strict orders are to be given not to allow any person to pass over the ropes or between the guards.

It is also requested that no children be brought to attend on the platform, as there is available only one ticket for each Member, and considerable confusion would be created if Members attempted to bring their children.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, in further explanation, may I say that in the past the House Members went to the Senate Chamber. That procedure will not be followed this time. There have been a great many Members ask me as to the procedure. There will be no business transacted in the Senate Chamber.

STABILIZATION FUND

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Speaker may sign the bill (S. 416) to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised, even though the House is not in session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DREW, January 21 and 22, on account of important business in his district.

To Mr. MILLS, for 5 days, on account of illness.

To Mr. MAPES, for 1 day, on account of illness.

JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on January 18, 1937, present to the President, for his approval, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 106. Joint resolution to exempt from the tax on admissions amounts paid for admission tickets sold by authority of the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect in January 1937.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.), in accordance with its previous order, the House adjourned until Thursday, January 21, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

238. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the legislative establishment, Architect of the Capitol, fiscal year 1938, in the sum of $1,672,000 (H. Doc. No. 133); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

239. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated January 14, 1937, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination of Shelton Harbor, Wash., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved August 30, 1935; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

240. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated January 14, 1937, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination of Southampton Bay, Calif., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved August 30, 1935; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

241. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report of leases or portions of leases extended beyond the original 20-year periods by reason of the inclusion of said leases or portions of leases in the approved unit plans listed; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

242. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting copy of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office dated January 8, 1937, transmitting report of the withdrawals and restorations contemplated by the statute; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. ROMJUE: Petition of representatives of Young Men's Christian Associations in the States of Colorado, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Wyoming, calling upon the Members of the United States Senate and the National House of Representatives to lend their support to those measures affecting the peace of the world which are certain to be presented during the Seventy-fifth Congress; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 20, 1937

(Legislative day of Tuesday, Jan. 19, 1937)

The Senate met at 11:45 o'clock a. m. on the expiration of the recess.

INAUGURATION OF THE PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Today being the 20th of January, the day prescribed by the twentieth amendment to the Constitution of the United States for the inauguration of the President and Vice President, the clerk will read the order adopted by the Senate yesterday.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Ordered, by unanimous consent, That when the Senate concludes its business today it take a recess until 11:45 o'clock a. m. tomorrow; that upon convening at that hour the Senate proceed to the east front of the Capitol for the purpose of attending the inaugural ceremonies of the President and Vice President of the United States; and that upon the conclusion of the ceremonies the Senate stand adjourned until Friday noon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that there is nothing for the Senate to do except to carry out the order which has just been read. The Chair is informed that the House of Representatives will first proceed to the inaugural platform, and the Senate will then follow. It is understood, therefore, that the Senate will form in the center aisle, as usual, at 11:50 a. m., and will then proceed through the corridors to the platform.

The Chair may suggest to the Senate that the seats occupied by the Senate and the House of Representatives have no cover over them, and it is advisable for Senators to take with them their overcoats and hats.

At 11 o'clock and 50 minutes a. m., the Senate, headed by the President pro tempore [KEY PITTMAN, a Senator from the State of Nevada] and the Secretary [Edwin A. Halsey] proceeded to the inaugural platform at the east front of the Capitol and took the space assigned them on the left of the place reserved for the President-elect.

The House of Representatives, headed by the Speaker [WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD], and the Clerk [South Trimble] had preceded the Senate to the platform and taken the space assigned them on the right of the place reserved for the President-elect.

The Governors of the States were escorted to the places assigned them on the right of the inaugural platform.

The Chief of Staff of the Army, the Chief of Naval Operations, the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps, and the Commandant of the Coast Guard, and their aides, were escorted to the places assigned them on the right of the inaugural platform.

The diplomatic corps were escorted to the places assigned them on the left of the inaugural platform.

The members of the President's Cabinet were escorted to the places assigned them on the left of the inaugural platform.

The Chief Justice of the United States and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, headed by the Marshal [Frank Key Green] and the Clerk [Charles Elmore Cropley], were escorted to the inaugural platform and took the places assigned them, the Chief Justice being seated immediately to the right and the Associate Justices being seated on the left of the place reserved for the President-elect.

The Vice President-elect of the United States [John N. Garner, of Texas] was escorted to the inaugural platform by the Joint Committee on Arrangements, consisting of Senator MATTHEW M. NEELY, chairman, Senator JOSEPH T. ROBINSON, Senator FREDERICK HALE, Representative JOHN J. O'CONNOR, Representative ROBERT L. DOUGHTON, and Representative BERTRAND H. SNELL, the Joint Committee being headed by the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate [Chesley W. Jurney] and the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives [Kenneth Romney].

The Vice President-elect was seated immediately to the left of the place reserved for the President-elect.

The President-elect of the United States [Franklin Delano Roosevelt, of New York] was escorted to the inaugural platform by the Joint Committee on Arrangements.

The Chaplain of the Senate, the Reverend ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God and heavenly Father, Ruler and Guardian of the World; sanctify to the Nation the meaning of this hour that Thy people with one heart and mind may acknowledge their fealty to Thee.

Be with the President and the Vice President, as under Thee they renew their solemn pledges of devotion to their country's weal in the high and holy offices to which again they have been called; let the blessings of Thy bounteous goodness be upon them, upon the Congress, upon the Judiciary, and upon all who bear rule in our land.

In particular we beseech Thee for our President that, casting all his care upon Thee, he may feel underneath Thine everlasting arms. Touch Thou his lips that he may speak, in words of unshorn truth and never wearying kindness, Thy message for the healing of the nations, and hasten the day when men shall rise above all lesser things to those glorious heights where love shall weave a holy bond of peace enduring till earth's shadows vanish in the Light of Light. Amen.

JOSEPH T. ROBINSON, a Senator from the State of Arkansas, administered to the Vice President-elect the oath of office prescribed by law, as follows:

Do you solemnly swear that you will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies foreign and domestic; that you will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that you take this obligation freely without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion, and that you will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which you are about to enter: So help you God?

The VICE PRESIDENT-ELECT. I do.

The Chief Justice of the United States [Charles Evans Hughes] administered to the President-elect the oath of office prescribed by the Constitution as follows:

You, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, do solemnly swear that you will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States and will, to the best of your ability, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States: So help you God?

The PRESIDENT-ELECT. I, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States and will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States: So help me God.

Thereupon the President of the United States delivered the following inaugural address:

MY FELLOW COUNTRYMEN:

When 4 years ago we met to inaugurate a President, the Republic, single-minded in anxiety, stood in spirit here. We dedicated ourselves to the fulfillment of a vision—to speed the time when there would be for all the people that security and peace essential to the pursuit of happiness. We of the Republic pledged ourselves to drive from the temple of our ancient faith those who had profaned it; to end by action, tireless and unafraid, the stagnation and despair of that day. We did those first things first.

Our covenant with ourselves did not stop there. Instinctively we recognized a deeper need—the need to find through government the instrument of our united purpose to solve for the individual the ever-rising problems of a complex civilization. Repeated attempts at their solution without the aid of government had left us baffled and bewildered. For, without that aid, we had been unable to create those moral controls over the services of science which are necessary to make science a useful servant instead of a ruthless master of mankind. To do this we knew that we must find practical controls over blind economic forces and blindly selfish men.

We of the Republic sensed the truth that democratic government has innate capacity to protect its people against disasters once considered inevitable, to solve problems once considered unsolvable. We would not admit that we could not find a way to master economic epidemics just as, after centuries of fatalistic suffering, we had found a way to master epidemics of disease. We refused to leave the problems of our common welfare to be solved by the winds of chance and the hurricanes of disaster.

In this we Americans were discovering no wholly new truth; we were writing a new chapter in our book of self-government.

This year marks the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Constitutional Convention which made us a nation. At that Convention our forefathers found the way out of the chaos which followed the Revolutionary War; they created a strong government with powers of united action sufficient then and now to solve problems utterly beyond individual or local solution. A century and a half ago they established the Federal Government in order to promote the general welfare and secure the blessings of liberty to the American people.

Today we invoke those same powers of government to achieve the same objectives.

Four years of new experience have not belied our historic instinct. They hold out the clear hope that government within communities, government within the separate States, and government of the United States can do the things the times require, without yielding its democracy. Our tasks in the last 4 years did not force democracy to take a holiday.

Nearly all of us recognize that as intricacies of human relationships increase, so power to govern them also must increase—power to stop evil; power to do good. The essential democracy of our nation and the safety of our people depend not upon the absence of power but upon lodging it with those whom the people can change or continue at stated intervals through an honest and free system of elections. The Constitution of 1787 did not make our democracy impotent.

In fact, in these last 4 years, we have made the exercise of all power more democratic; for we have begun to bring private autocratic powers into their proper subordination to the public's government. The legend that they were invincible—above and beyond the processes of a democracy—has been shattered. They have been challenged and beaten.

Our progress out of the depression is obvious. But that is not all that you and I mean by the new order of things. Our pledge was not merely to do a patchwork job with second-hand materials. By using the new materials of social justice we have undertaken to erect on the old foundations a more enduring structure for the better use of future generations.

In that purpose we have been helped by achievements of mind and spirit. Old truths have been relearned; untruths have been unlearned. We have always known that heedless self-interest was bad morals; we know now that it is bad economics. Out of the collapse of a prosperity whose builders boasted their practicality has come the conviction that in the long run economic morality pays. We are beginning to wipe out the line that divides the practical from the ideal; and in so doing we are fashioning an instrument of unimagined power for the establishment of a morally better world.

This new understanding undermines the old admiration of worldly success as such. We are beginning to abandon our tolerance of the abuse of power by those who betray for profit the elementary decencies of life.

In this process evil things formerly accepted will not be so easily condoned. Hard-headedness will not so easily excuse hard-heartedness. We are moving toward an era of good feeling. But we realize that there can be no era of good feeling save among men of good will.

For these reasons I am justified in believing that the greatest change we have witnessed has been the change in the moral climate of America.

Among men of good-will science and democracy together offer an ever-richer life and ever-larger satisfaction to the individual. With this change in our moral climate and our rediscovered ability to improve our economic order, we have set our feet upon the road of enduring progress.

Shall we pause now and turn our back upon the road that lies ahead? Shall we call this the promised land? Or, shall we continue on our way? For "each age is a dream that is dying, or one that is coming to birth."

Many voices are heard as we face a great decision. Comfort says, "Tarry a while." Opportunism says, "This is a good spot." Timidity asks, "How difficult is the road ahead?"

True, we have come far from the days of stagnation and despair. Vitality has been preserved. Courage and confidence have been restored. Mental and moral horizons have been extended.

But our present gains were won under the pressure of more than ordinary circumstance. Advance became imperative under the goad of fear and suffering. The times were on the side of progress.

To hold to progress today, however, is more difficult. Dulled conscience, irresponsibility and ruthless self-interest already reappear. Such symptoms of prosperity may become portents of disaster! Prosperity already tests the persistence of our progressive purpose.

Let us ask again: Have we reached the goal of our vision of that fourth day of March 1933? Have we found our happy valley?

I see a great nation, upon a great continent, blessed with a great wealth of natural resources. Its hundred and thirty million people are at peace among themselves; they are making their country a good neighbor among the nations. I see a United States which can demonstrate that, under democratic methods of government, national wealth can be translated into a spreading volume of human comforts hitherto unknown, and the lowest standard of living can be raised far above the level of mere subsistence.

But here is the challenge to our democracy: In this nation I see tens of millions of its citizens—a substantial part of its whole population—who at this very moment are denied the greater part of what the very lowest standards of today call the necessities of life.

I see millions of families trying to live on incomes so meager that the pall of family disaster hangs over them day by day.

I see millions whose daily lives in city and on farm continue under conditions labelled indecent by a so-called polite society half a century ago.

I see millions denied education, recreation and the opportunity to better their lot and the lot of their children.

I see millions lacking the means to buy the products of farm and factory and by their poverty denying work and productiveness to many other millions.

I see one-third of a nation ill-housed, ill-clad, ill-nourished.

It is not in despair that I paint you that picture. I paint it for you in hope—because the nation, seeing and understanding the injustice in it, proposes to paint it out. We are determined to make every American citizen the subject of his country's interest and concern; and we will never regard any faithful law-abiding group within our borders as superfluous. The test of our progress is not whether we add more to the abundance of those who have much; it is whether we provide enough for those who have too little.

If I know aught of the spirit and purpose of our nation, we will not listen to Comfort, Opportunism, and Timidity. We will carry on.

Overwhelmingly, we of the Republic are men and women of good will; men and women who have more than warm hearts of dedication; men and women who have cool heads and willing hands of practical purpose as well. They will insist that every agency of popular government use effective instruments to carry out their will.

Government is competent when all who compose it work as trustees for the whole people. It can make constant progress when it keeps abreast of all the facts. It can obtain justified support and legitimate criticism when the people receive true information of all that government does.

If I know aught of the will of our people, they will demand that these conditions of effective government shall be created and maintained. They will demand a nation uncorrupted by cancers of injustice and, therefore, strong among the nations in its example of the will to peace.

Today we reconsecrate our country to long cherished ideals in a suddenly changed civilization. In every land there are always at work forces that drive men apart and forces that draw men together. In our personal ambitions we are individualists. But in our seeking for economic and political progress as a nation, we all go up, or else we all go down, as one people.

To maintain a democracy of effort requires a vast amount of patience in dealing with differing methods, a vast amount of humility. But out of the confusion of many voices rises an understanding of dominant public need. Then political leadership can voice common ideals, and aid in their realization.

In taking again the oath of office as President of the United States, I assume the solemn obligation of leading the American people forward along the road over which they have chosen to advance.

While this duty rests upon me I shall do my utmost to speak their purpose and to do their will, seeking Divine guidance to help us each and every one to give light to them that sit in darkness and to guide our feet into the way of peace.

Rt. Rev. Monsignor John A. Ryan, D. D., of the Catholic University, Washington, D. C., pronounced the following benediction:

Almighty God, Ruler of nations, we beseech Thee to bless the people of the United States. Keep them at peace among themselves and in concord with all other peoples. Cause justice and charity to flourish among them that they may all be enabled to live as persons created in Thine own image and likeness.

Do Thou bless abundantly our Chief Magistrate. Inspire his leadership. Grant him, O God of infinite wisdom and power, the light and the strength to carry through the great work that he has so well begun, and to pursue untiringly his magnificent vision of social peace and social justice. Through Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The President and Vice President of the United States, escorted by the Joint Committee on Arrangements, retired from the platform, followed by the Senate and House of Representatives, the Chief Justice of the United States, and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, and the other distinguished guests who had been invited to witness the ceremonies.

ADJOURNMENT TO FRIDAY

After the conclusion of the inaugural ceremonies (at 12 o'clock and 55 minutes, p. m.) the Senate, without returning to its Chamber, under the order entered on January 19 instant stood in adjournment until Friday, January 22, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 21, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Strong Son of God, Immortal Love, all that human nature has yearned for or thought to find is truly found in Thee; forever let our prayers go up and Thy blessings come down. May our President, Speaker, and the Congress have it deep in their breasts that the highest attainment of any nation or any man is to be one with Thee. Graciously bless them. Jealously proud of our country, may these Thy servants be quick to perceive, clear of judgment, wise in counsel, and always a friend of the friendless; with unfaltering courage may we move forward to serve and to sacrifice. Still the tumults, O Lord, of warring factions, wherever they are. Bind together all citizens of whatever race or religion, and with a common faith and zeal may they hasten the day when "man to man shall brother be" the world over. In Jesus' name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, January 19, 1937, was read and approved.

COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Rules Committee may have until midnight tonight to file a report from that source.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

CHILD LABOR

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, on January 13 I introduced House Resolution 62, which is a privileged resolution. My resolution was as follows:

That the Secretary of Labor is hereby directed to transmit forthwith to the House of Representatives all such information as may be available in the Department of Labor showing (a) the number of children (1) under the age of 16, (2) between the ages of 16 and 17, and (3) between the ages of 17 and 18, who during the calendar years 1935 and 1936 were gainfully employed or received their first regular employment certificates, and (b) the average hourly and average weekly earnings, and the average daily and average weekly hours, of such children in respect of their employment during such years in each State.

On Tuesday the chairman and members of the Committee on Labor very graciously granted me a hearing and at that time showed me data from the Department of Labor which gave some of the information I desired. The Department of Labor did not have all the information that I wished. But the chairman of the Labor Committee and Mr. WELCH, the ranking minority member assured me that the chairman of the Committee, Mr. CONNERY, would later ask that all available information be inserted in the RECORD in order that it might be readily available to Members of the House.

This is satisfactory to me, and I therefore shall not call up the resolution. Instead, today I am introducing a resolution asking for a census of employed children of the ages of 18, 17, 16, and under, and the minimum wage in the different States. It seems obvious that this information will be very valuable in our effort to abolish child labor.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman from Massachusetts yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Very gladly.

Mr. CONNERY. As the gentlewoman knows, under instructions from our Committee on Labor, I asked the Department of Labor to send up the information which the gentlewoman from Massachusetts desired. They sent up some information with reference to a census which they had taken within the last few years and also what they had found out under the N. R. A. situation. It was not all the information that the gentlewoman from Massachusetts desired.

My committee also instructed me to ask the Secretary of Labor to give me a digest of the information already received and when this digest is received by the committee I shall ask unanimous consent to put it in the RECORD.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. That is very satisfactory, and I think the gentleman will agree that we all want a complete census. It seems amazing that they have so little on the subject at the Department of Labor. Later I shall ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD information concerning the number of States that have protective child-labor laws.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, as ranking minority member of the Committee on Labor I desire to commend the distinguished Representative from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] for having brought to the attention of Congress and the Committee on Labor this most important matter. It is regrettable there is not later data on this subject than 1930. I sincerely hope the Congresswoman will introduce a bill calling for a census and that the Congress will immediately pass it. It is very important at this time, due to the fact that the question of ratifying the proposed child-labor amendment is before a number of the States. I believe every Member of the House is desirous of immediate ratification of the child-labor amendment, which will serve a great humanitarian purpose.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain data regarding ratification by the 25 States that have ratified the child-labor amendment, as well as to certain data with respect to the States that have not ratified it, which was sent to me by the legislative reference service of the Library of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

CHILD-LABOR AMENDMENT

Number of States which have ratified the Federal child-labor amendment	25
Number of States in which the amendment has been rejected by one or both houses	21
States which have taken no definite action (bills have been introduced in these States, but have not come to a vote in the legislature, having been killed or having died in committee)	2

Ratification by 36 of the 48 States is necessary under the Constitution before the amendment becomes a part of the Constitution.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Committee on Labor will be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution (H. Res. 62), and the resolution will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOYLAN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein an address by Commissioner George Henry Payne, of the Federal Communications Commission.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am perfectly willing that occasionally an address of Mr. George Henry Payne should appear in the RECORD, but to have one in every single week seems to me to be going beyond the limit.

Mr. BOYLAN of New York. I may say to the distinguished gentleman that many weeks have elapsed since an address by this distinguished progressive Republican has appeared in the RECORD.

Mr. SNELL. I object to the name, anyway. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOYLAN of New York. In fact, I may say that none has appeared since last June. So the gentleman realizes that many weeks have elapsed.

Mr. SNELL. Is this the first one this year?

Mr. BOYLAN of New York. The first one.

Mr. SNELL. I was under the impression it was about the third one this year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RESETTLEMENT ADMINISTRATION FUNDS

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I am reliably informed this morning that the resettlement funds will be depleted on February 1 to the extent that grants to human beings in my district will cease on that day.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Nebraska rise?

Mr. STEFAN. To propound a question to the majority leader as to when we may expect a deficiency bill to take care of this problem.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEFAN. I am reliably informed that the resettlement fund will be depleted on February 1, and unless it is extended, human suffering in my district will ensue. I want to ask the majority leader when we can expect the deficiency bill to pass this House?

Mr. RAYBURN. In my last conversation with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations he said he thought that he would be able to report the deficiency bill by the middle of the coming week.

Mr. STEFAN. Will that take care of an additional fund for the farmers?

Mr. RAYBURN. What the bill will contain I do not know.

Mr. STEFAN. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that human suffering will ensue unless there is a further and immediate appropriation. I have received many telegrams and letters stating that that will occur on account of the crop failure. Unless we do something now in the way of passing emergency legislation continuing the grant after February 1 there will be great suffering.

Farmers in my district were taken from W. P. A. grants and relief and placed on R. A. grants. Now they are forced to cut down their livestock to units of 12 or they cannot borrow to buy feed for this livestock. We lost all our crops. There is no feed. Farmers have no money. Blizzards have been raging; subzero weather exists. Livestock is starving; human beings are suffering. R. A. now informs us that funds will be depleted on February 1. Government red tape and delays necessitate emergency action before this livestock starves and these farmers are forced from farms to towns to seek food and relief. Let us act now and bring forth this relief which has been promised by this administration to the needy people in my district.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I now ask that the special order giving the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] 30 minutes tomorrow may be transferred and that he may address the House now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas that the time granted the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] tomorrow be vacated and that he may be permitted to address the House now?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, I was not in the Chamber when the House assembled; what is the order of today?

Mr. RAYBURN. If this request is granted, the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] will have 15 minutes. I also have the consent of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], who had 15 minutes tomorrow, to transfer that to today, as we have no other program.

Mr. MICHENER. And it is not the purpose of the gentleman to take up the R. F. C. bill today?

Mr. RAYBURN. No.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Texas prefer his request as to the time of Mr. HOFFMAN at this time? Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas with reference to the time of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I make the same request in reference to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana is recognized for 15 minutes.

THE SUPREME COURT

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I am not unmindful of the forum in which I speak. Neither am I unmindful of the importance of the subjects that I am going to refer to during my remarks.

I intended to speak tomorrow, and I might have then presented more finished remarks than I will proffer at this time.

I realize, Members, that I am speaking in the Chamber in which the greatest speakers and greatest statesmen, both living and dead, have spoken. To a certain extent it overwhelms me when I realize my inadequacy to touch upon the subjects that I am going to advert to in this forum.

We listened here the other day to the distinguished gentleman from the State of Massachusetts, who delivered one of the most partisan attacks upon our Chief Executive that I ever listened to. His vicious partisanship was equaled only by the sarcasm with which he uttered the words. I am referring to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD], when he said that Mr. Roosevelt had uttered words of hatred the like of which he had never known—or words to that effect—when the President said to certain people of the American Nation, "He was glad of their opposition; that he was not only their equal but was their master." The gentleman from Massachusetts said he did not know to whom the President referred. He asked various persons, "Did he refer to you, or did he refer to me?" I am going to take the gentleman into the secret confidence of the average American voter in the United States and tell him to whom the President referred. The President referred to the same powers, to the same men, if you please, who secured the election of the administrations which governed this country for 12 long years preceding the election of our great President Roosevelt. They are the parties to whom he referred, and who brought this country to almost a state of civil war, when court orders in such old, staid States as Iowa were being defied, when millions of people were traveling the streets without food, when the banks throughout the country were closed. The people to whom the President referred, the people who brought about that condition, were the Mellons, the Mills, the Rockefellers, the du Ponts, the international bankers. It was those people of whom he said that he was their master; and with the help of God and the cooperation of a Democratic Senate and a Democratic House, he is their master. The time has come, Members, when the people of this country are no longer going to be slaves to money, but money will be the slave of the American people. We have bended the knee and genuflected to those powers enough, and it is time that a man rose, as President Roosevelt did, above such.

Again, I refer to some arguments made here the other day by another distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] and I am going to be fair about the thing, because I have tried lawsuits for 30 years, and I know it is easy to put a misinterpretation upon a record. I know it is easy perhaps in the heat of debate to misquote a man, but I call your attention to his language, as stated in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. You will recall considerable argument about the use of the word "intelligent." You remember the construction of the Constitution was under consideration and you remember the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] got up and said:

> Mr. Speaker, did not the President in his message refer to the Supreme Court in terms substantially that he would like to see the Supreme Court give a more enlightened interpretation of the Constitution as the Constitution stands.

What was the answer of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE]? It was as follows:

> The word he used was "intelligent."

And the only construction that could be placed upon that language was that the President of the United States hoped that the Supreme Court would give a more intelligent construction to the Constitution—words which the President never uttered, and that is one reason why I asked the privilege of immediately replying for 3 or 4 minutes and could not get the time. Here are the words of the President taken from his speech:

> With a better understanding of our purposes, and a more intelligent recognition of our needs as a Nation, it is not to be assumed that there will be prolonged failure to bring legislative and judicial action into closer harmony.

The President said, expressly and impliedly, that if we knew of the conditions of the country it would not be assumed that there would longer be discord between the legislative and judicial branches. Supposing you were to analyze that sentence on the board here. The phrase "with a more intelligent recognition of our needs as a Nation" simply modifies the sentence that "it is not to be assumed" that this condition will go on. There is a vast difference. The President was referring to a state of facts—a fact condition—whereas the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts said, in effect, that he, the President, wanted a more intelligent construction of the Constitution. If those words were used as Mr. LUCE would indicate, it would mean that in the mind of the President the Supreme Court was ignorant of the purposes of our Constitution. You recall, my friends, that I said to him that public needs had to do with the decisions of the courts, and then he said:

> If I did say that, my words would be vain and idle and I should humbly apologize to the House and I should be ashamed of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Why, all he has to do is to read the language of the men who have spoken on that subject, some long since dead. A government such as ours derives its powers from the people. In other words, the power comes from the people to the government, whereas in a monarchial form of government the power goes from the government down to the people, and whatever rights the people have they must wring from the government. Whatever rights the Government has in this country it must wring from the American people, because the people are supreme. It was that thought, Members, that caused Mr. Justice Holmes, now passed to his reward, to utter as far back as 1910, in the case of Noble State Bank against Haskell, Two Hundred and Nineteenth United States Reports, page 111, these words:

> It may be said in a general way that the police power extends to all great public needs. It may be put forth in aid of what is sanctioned by usage or held by the prevailing morality or strong and preponderant opinion to be greatly and immediately necessary to public welfare.

It is just as our great President said, if you will only read the preamble to the Constitution and article I of the Constitution you will realize that the purpose of the Constitution is to protect and provide for the general welfare, and every single act passed upon by the Supreme Court and held to be unconstitutional was for the benefit of labor, for the benefit of the farmer, and of the common people of this country, and when this Congress passed those laws it was providing for the general welfare of the country.

The preamble and article I, section 1, and paragraph 1 of section 8 read as follows:

> We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.
> ART. I, SEC. 1. All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.
> SEC. 8. The Congress shall have the power—
> To lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

Under those authorities the dissenters in their opinions realized that Congress had spoken for the general welfare of the people. They realized that the first section of the Constitution gave the Congress that power; realized that it is reiterated in section 8 of article I of the Constitution, where it provides that Congress is given the power to provide for the general welfare of this country.

What more express language could be used than is used by our own Constitution? Those are the words in the Constitution that prompted the words coming from the lips of Mr. Justice Holmes.

I continue quoting from the opinion referred to:

> Among matters of that sort probably few would doubt that both usage and preponderant opinion give their sanction to enforcing the primary conditions of successful commerce.

Again, in 1926 or 1927, in a dissenting opinion, if you please, the same Justice used these words:

> The truth seems to be that, subject to compensation when compensation is due, the legislature may forbid or restrict any business when it has a sufficient force of public opinion behind it. * * * Wine has been thought good for man from the time of the Apostles until recent years. But when public opinion changed it did not need the eighteenth amendment, notwithstanding the fourteenth, to enable a State to say that the business should end (Tyson & Brother v. Banton, 273 U. S. 418–466; Justice Holmes dissenting).

Public need, public necessity, when it is clear and unmistakable, when the welfare of the American people demand it to be enacted into law for their benefit and for the benefit of future generations, then Congress has the power, under that provision of the Constitution, to enact such laws as in the judgment of Congress will provide for the common welfare of the people of this country.

Remember this, we have these words falling from the lips of Mr. Justice Hughes. No more distinguished jurist ever sat on the bench of any civilized country than the man of whom I am speaking when he uttered these words:

> A constitution is what judges say it is.

In other words, in the final analysis, the courts are men. Men become lawyers; lawyers become judges. They take to the bench the same emotions, the same prejudices, and the same feelings that they experienced when they were just plain men. Of course, they submerge them as much as possible, but in the end, everything being equal, they unconsciously, though honestly, do their duty in accordance with the school in which they are trained.

There are judges who find their way on the bench from the offices of corporations, and whose training has been along the line of big business and corporation law. On the other hand, we find judges coming to the bench from the common people of the country, men whose clientele were the common man, injured employees of the railways, injured employees of the mining companies. We have men of that type on the bench. Each one carries with him the feelings and prejudices he received in the school in which he was trained in his practice.

Realizing this, realizing that we are still human beings upon the bench, because I have had that experience, in every appellate court in the United States we find an odd number, so that a decision is always possible. It is realized that men will dissent. We have only to go back to the first time this Congress tried to legislate upon the child-labor question in this country, to prevent poor little children being worked in the sweat shops of the United States, to find such an example. There we found the Supreme Court, by a divided Court, if you please, holding that law unconstitutional.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield.

Mr. FORD of California. I would like to ask the gentleman if he can see any difference in the Supreme Court upholding the laws outlawing the sale, possession, or use of narcotics?

Wherein do these laws differ from a child-labor law?

Is it the police power of the Federal Government?

Do narcotics contribute more to moral and intellectual delinquency than child labor?

Narcotics do, it is admitted, dull the senses, deplete the physical fiber, destroy moral character, and render the victim generally unfit for the duties of civilized society. But is it not also possible to show that subjecting a child to the physical strain of intensive labor, depriving him of educational and recreational opportunities, has the identical effect?

In view of this, is it not fair and logical to assume that the Supreme Court, through the exercise of "judicial nullification", is supporting and making possible the existence of a practice in this Nation that is socially unsound, ethically reprehensible, and economically undesirable?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. No difference.

Mr. FORD of California. Because child labor does the same thing.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Exactly. In that connection I want to call attention to the language used by the dissenters of the Supreme Court when that child-labor law was before it, when they uttered these words—I am speaking of the dissenters:

> It is enough that in the opinion of Congress the transportation encourages evil.

It was enough for the dissenters, those men who had been trained in a different school, who had probably rubbed shoulders with the common people of the country, to know that Congress recognized the evil in the transportation and banned it as far as they were concerned.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DRIVER). The time of the gentleman from Montana has expired.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Montana may have 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, bear in mind the Constitution of the United States was never designed to be a strait jacket in which the American people, for generations to come, would have to lie like a corpse. Read the language used by Edmund Randolph in placing the first draft of the Constitution before the Convention for consideration, which was quoted by our distinguished President in his message to Congress delivered on January 6, 1937. Read the language of Randolph, where he said he did not want the first basic draft of the Constitution to be specific; he wanted it to be general, so that people hereafter could find relief in almost any event that might happen.

Now, what are the events that have happened? We have the so-called machine age, throwing out of employment thousands and millions of workers. We have overproduction by our farmers. We have all that sort of thing. What had to be met? We had to meet overproduction by curtailing production through the machinery of the A. A. A., which was set up, and which the Supreme Court, by a divided opinion, held unconstitutional. The N. R. A. was held unconstitutional. It was for the purpose of speading employment during this machine age. In other words, labor conditions had to be relieved. The farmers had to be helped. The small man, who had heretofore been forgotten, had to be helped. Every one of those laws went along that line. Those were the needs that the American people required to be met. Remember this: A government fails whenever it does not meet the needs and necessities of the people of a country.

Remember, your Constitution is not a strait jacket to be operated under. Remember, the preamble states that it is for the benefit and the welfare of the people. Remember, section 8 of article I of the Constitution reiterates the statement and states that Congress has the power to legislate for the welfare of the people; and, remember, we have the enlightened and the immortal words, if you please, of that distinguished man who has gone to his reward, Justice Holmes, heretofore quoted.

Reverting to the language used by the President when he said:

> It is not to be assumed that there will be prolonged failure to bring legislative and judicial action in closer harmony.

I call your attention to what this great man said yesterday, with bared head, defying the elements, here in front of the Capitol:

> I see millions of families trying to live on incomes so meager that the pall of family disaster hangs over them day by day.

I see millions whose daily lives in city and on farm continue under conditions labeled indecent by a so-called polite society half a century ago.

I see millions denied education, recreation, and the opportunity to better their lot and the lot of their children.

I see millions lacking the means to buy the products of farm and factory and by their poverty denying work and productiveness to many other millions.

I see one-third of a nation ill housed, ill clad, ill nourished.

Having in his mind a picture of this condition prevailing, he asked in an appealing tone that there be closer harmony, if you please, between this body and the members of the Supreme Court.

I ask you gentlemen on either side of the aisle: With this condition existing in this country, with the poor people suffering as they are, I ask you, in the name of God, is there anybody in this audience, either Member of the House or visitor in the gallery, who wants to see discord between the three coordinate branches of our Government? Are not the conditions such as to require a cohesive and unanimous move on the part of all branches of the Government to alleviate their sufferings? When the President asked for harmony, did he not ask only that which works to the benefit of the people? He asked for harmony between the coordinate branches of our Government to the end that the conditions he recited in the storm and from the Capitol steps yesterday might be alleviated.

Did he go beyond what he should have? Mr. Speaker, I would not have asked to say a word in his defense had he been fairly quoted here the other day, for this great man does not need any poor words of mine to defend him; but when he is unfairly and unjustly accused and attacked, in his absence, from no motive other than that of partisanship, if you please—when that comes—I, for one, will not sit in silence, either in this Chamber or any other place I may happen to be, and not raise my voice in protest. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the gentleman from Michigan, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I take no issue with the gentleman from Montana in the remarks which he makes in defense of the President, but the gentleman and myself are as wide apart as the poles in our thinking with respect to the power of Congress. I respect, however, the opinion of the gentleman, because I am certain that he is in earnest.

Mr. Speaker, with every decision of the Court running counter to popular public demand, the Court is attacked as a reactionary body exercising powers not granted to it.

Present complaint against the Court grows out of its having voided certain New Deal legislation, N. R. A., Guffey Coal Act, and A. A. A. on the ground of these measures being unconstitutional.

While less virulent, present complaint is a renewal of the attack that raged at the beginning of the nineteenth century, during the expiring days of the Federalist Party.

The bitter contest between the Republican and Federalist Parties was the outgrowth of conflicts of theories of government, the Republican cause being skillfully manipulated and controlled by Mr. Jefferson, the most gifted and brilliant politician that the country has yet produced.

In his attack upon Federalism and the Supreme Court, Mr. Jefferson took advantage of the fact that most of the people were, and had been since the beginning of the Revolution, antagonistic to all courts and bitterly hostile to all lawyers. The Supreme Court was the last stronghold of the Federalist Party. It had been made up by appointments given by Federalist Presidents, and was admittedly antagonistic to Republican claims for political control of all the departments of Government.

Mr. Jefferson was an ambitious man, craving popularity and power, and knew how to reward his friends and punish his enemies. He distrusted executive authority, legislative power, and the judiciary when held by his political adversaries.

The conflict between the Republican and Federalist Parties revolved around the doctrines of State rights and nationalism, the one putting emphasis upon liberty and the other upon security.

The controversy ultimately turned into one between the legislative and executive departments, both dominated and controlled by Mr. Jefferson on the one hand and the judiciary on the other. Republicanism demanded a docile and weak court, while Federalism insisted upon a strong and independent court.

The question of the right of the Supreme Court to hold unconstitutional acts of Congress had been the subject matter of bitter controversy long prior to the decision of the Court in Marbury against Madison. The whole question was fully and brilliantly debated in both Senate and House in 1802 over the proposal to repeal the Federal Judiciary Act of 1801. In this debate all of the arguments used by Chief Justice Marshall in holding that the Supreme Court had the power to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional were fully set forth. The only original thought contributed by the Chief Justice to the decision was that of seizing upon the idea of holding section 13 of the judiciary law of 1789 unconstitutional. In making this ruling the Court disregarded the fact that the Court and the country had previously accepted the law as constitutional and the Court had actually acted under the authority of section 13 of the law. This act of the Chief Justice unquestionably stamped him as a bitter partisan, but at the same time proved that he was likewise a skillful politician. The Chief Justice would never have made this ruling except for the political exigencies of the case. He knew that he had been marked for political destruction. He knew that should he put the decision upon other grounds that he would be immediately impeached by Congress. Holding section 13 of the law of 1789 unconstitutional, he was avoiding raising conflict as between the Court and the Executive in the pending case, and yet he was being put in position to declare the independence of the Court and to assert its power to review acts of Congress. But irrespective of the politics in the case and of the motive that actuated contending parties, it is unquestionably true that the Court, on the main question, reached the right conclusion and saved the Government from probable disruption. Certainly this one decision established the independence of the Court, and contributed to world judicature a new principle in government; that is, the power of the courts to review acts of the legislative departments.

If the Government was divided into separate and independent departments for the purpose of the one exercising a check upon the other, then the Court must have the power to say what is the law. It is, of course, contended that this gives the Supreme Court the power of government and makes the judiciary a political oligarchy, but this is not true, for Congress holds the power of impeachment, and in this wise exercises a check upon the Court.

It is well known that Congress is actuated by different motives to those that actuate the Court and that Congress is not qualified to the same degree to judge the law as the Court. In Congress, party spirit finds play. Partisanship influences conduct. Personal likes and dislikes may influence Members, but with the Court they are supposed to know neither friend nor foe, rich nor poor, but are charged solely with the duty of finding and declaring the law.

Mr. CREAL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CREAL. As partisanship does not influence it in any manner, does the gentleman think, with reference to the Tilden-Hayes contest, in which that Court divided 4 to 4 politically, that that had no part in the decision?

Mr. COX. I do not think the gentleman's inquiry entirely pertinent, and beg leave not to be diverted from the course of my remarks at this time.

I believe in majority control—that is democracy—and I believe in democracy; yet, at the same time, there should be some power somewhere to check majority excesses, for a majority of 50,000,000 people may be only a majority of 1. We must guard against the possibility of letting our excesses debauch the thing we so much adore.

In Madison against Marbury, Marshall met the demands of a passionate and exacting majority with an affirmative opinion of constructive judicial statesmanship.

It is true that there is nothing in the Constitution giving expressed power to the Supreme Court to void laws of Congress on the ground of unconstitutionality, but is it not a necessarily implied power?

Is not an act of Congress a law; and if so, should not the Court be the judge of that law?

Is an act of Congress on a level with the Constitution? If so, the Congress can nullify and, in effect, amend the Constitution at will.

Does the power in the courts to declare an act of Congress void make them lawgivers as well as law expounders?

Where have the courts, in modern times, assumed to act as lawgivers? Did they do so in the Schechter case? Was N. R. A. unconstitutional; and if so, should it have stood?

Is it the complaint that the courts are reactionary or too conservative? What is to be said of Justice Brandeis and other so-called liberalists of the Court? Are they, in fact, reactionary? And did they exercise an undelegated power in concurring in N. R. A., and did they themselves in such action violate the Constitution?

Congress is a political body, and in its acts gives expression to public will or public opinion. Congress is amenable to public demands. Should there be a check upon Congress, and if such a check rests upon it to prevent an invasion of the Constitution, who shall impose the restraint if not the Supreme Court?

Who should decide between the Constitution and the laws if not the Court?

What protection has the minority against the intoxication of power and the fury of party rage except it be found in the courts?

In the Constitutional Convention, Madison said that "no man would be so daring as to place a veto on a law that has passed with the assent of the Legislature", but later in the debate he modified this opinion and declared that "a law violating a Constitution established by the people themselves would be considered by the judges null and void."

George Mason, in the Convention, said that the judiciary could declare an unconstitutional law void. There was, of course, a contrary opinion expressed in the Convention; but, as stated above, no direct resolution was ever offered to the effect that the judiciary should be given power to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, while President Jefferson led the fight against the Supreme Court, he had previously stated in the year before the National Convention was framed that the Virginia Legislature had passed unconstitutional laws. He said:

> I have not heard that in the other States they have ever infringed their constitution; * * * as the judges would consider any law as void which was contrary to the constitution.

If Congress, or any other department of Government, can ignore the limitation of the Constitution, then all distinction between government of limited and unlimited power is done away with.

If two acts of Congress conflict, which is to control and who is to say which should control, if not the courts?

If the Constitution is superior to any ordinary act of Congress, but if the courts are without power to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional, then of what value is the superiority of the Constitution, and in what cases will its authority hold?

The doctrine that Marshall announced in Madison against Marbury—that is, the supremacy of written constitution over legislative acts—have been accepted by all courts, both State and Federal, and fearlessly applied in every instance where such conflicts have arisen during the past 135 years.

To those who insist that the Supreme Court has not the competency to invalidate acts of Congress on the grounds of their unconstitutionality, let me ask what is their opinion of the practice in their own State governments, of their own State supreme courts, invalidating acts of their own State legislatures upon the ground of their unconstitutionality?

The doctrine has been so well settled and so universally accepted that it would seem a waste of time to question its soundness and binding force upon the country at this late date.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to the flexibility of the Constitution and the argument developed by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR], permit me to direct attention to the language of the Supreme Court as used in the case of South Carolina v. United States (199 U. S. 437). In that case the Court said:

> The Constitution is a written instrument, and, as such, its meaning does not alter. That which is meant when adopted, it means now. Being a grant of power to a Government, its language is general, and, as changes come in social and political life, it embraces in its grasp all new conditions which are within the scope of the powers in terms conferred.

In other words, while the powers granted do not change, they apply from generation to generation to all things to which they are in their nature applicable.

Continuing, the Court said:

> This in no manner abridges the fact of its changeless nature and meaning. Those things which are within its grant of power, as those grants were understood when made, are still within them, and those things not within them remain still excluded.

Mr. Speaker, in advocating certain reforms we must look beyond the particular end sought to be achieved and see what destructive consequences must inevitably result in other directions from such change.

All great and important events in history have turned to the advantage of democracy, and we all, of course, believe in this form of government. The discovery of America itself, the invention of firearms, and all such matters have been turned to the advantage of democracy.

Mr. Speaker, are grown up, civilized people to be educated precisely as children by rewards and punishment? Can we not afford to appeal to the senses? Must everything be treated mortal and nothing immortal? Are we all stomach and no soul? Are we all for ease and none for liberty? All living in somebody else's world and none in our own?

The Federal Government operates within certain limitations and I am happy that it does. I do not want to see these barriers pushed back too far. To do so will destroy our dual system of government, and I do not want it destroyed. It will make life, liberty, and property less secure and revolution easier.

Mr. Speaker, I did not expect to address the House at this time. My remarks have not been so formed and my thoughts have not been so connected as to give you the full benefit of my thinking on this all-important subject.

I do pray, however, that the membership of this great body may be brought to the point where they will deal with such fundamental and important questions as the changing of the fundamental law of this land in the light of their informed judgment on the question and that they will not permit their passion or their prejudice to influence them in their expression of opinion on so vital and important a question and one which profoundly affects the very life of our Nation. [Applause.]

I know that when we arrive on this floor that we are all subject to the influence of popular demand—to the influence of what the people throughout the country are expecting of us. But can we not at some time bring ourselves to the point where we are willing to speak our honest convictions on public questions? [Applause.]

Let not the fear of popular ill-will establish its empire over the conscience of men and stifle the impulse for expression of honest opinion. Let men bring their politics under the approval of their informed judgment and in accord with their true character, and with this done we will have laws that are expressive of human needs and the demands of justice.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a special order for today, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

THE AUTOMOBILE STRIKE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, yesterday was a gloomy day. The sky was overcast. Rain fell in torrents and chilled the enthusiasm of thousands who came to witness the inauguration of our President and to listen to his message. Nature did her worst to make all uncomfortable. But her worst, or her best, was in great measure counteracted and overcome by our President's pleasing personality and charming smile. Thousands cheered his showmanship and responded enthusiastically to his courageous, if somewhat dangerous, defiance of the elements. Far rather would most of us have seen him protect himself from the inclemency of the day, from the danger of illness, seen him conserve his strength to meet the strenuous days to come.

Yesterday our attention was called to the return of prosperity, claimed to be the crowning accomplishment of this administration. On many occasions during the last session of Congress and throughout the campaign administration leaders have proudly pointed to and loudly acclaimed the return of prosperity—the end of the depression.

Yesterday, among other things, the President said:

> I see millions of families trying to live on incomes so meager that the pall of family disaster hangs over them day by day.
> I see millions whose daily lives in city and on farms continue under conditions labeled "indecent" by a so-called polite society half a century ago.
> I see millions denied education, recreation, and the opportunity to better their lot. * * * Millions lacking the means to buy the products of farm and factory * * *; and I see one-third of a nation ill-housed, ill-clad, ill-nourished.

A depressing, discouraging picture, painted by one who has been in complete charge of the legislative and executive branches of our Government for the past 4 years; the words of one whose slightest wish has been sufficient to enact any legislation deemed by him to be desirable; the words of one to whom the Congress gave $4,880,000,000 to relieve the conditions to which he referred; the words of one who was given almost unlimited power to regulate and to order the daily lives of us all.

Briefly the President yesterday painted the same picture that he outlined in his campaign in 1932, throughout his administration, and during his last campaign. The central thought was and always has been that this country of ours was on the road to destruction; that without his intervention nothing would save it from disaster; that only through him could a revolution be prevented.

The people accepted his preachments in 1932. Through their representatives they gave him unlimited funds, unlimited authority; through his appointees, his N. R. A., his A. A. A., and all down the long alphabetical list of agencies, spending the taxpayers' money without let or hindrance, his remedy was applied; and yesterday, knowing, as we do, that his administration has spent $2 for every $1 it received, he still saw millions of families in distress and other millions denied an American standard of living.

We know he prescribed himself and the New Deal as the remedy for our illness of 1932. We know that he and his assistants have been in constant attendance; and yesterday, as our physician, he gave us his calm, considered judgment of our present condition. The prognosis was distinctly bad.

If the President's picture of our country be true and we are in the condition described by him, then upon whose shoulders rests the responsibility for the situation as it confronts us today? Nowhere can that responsibility be justly placed but at his door.

Conceding, as all will, that there is suffering, that there is injustice, that the wealth of our country is not distributed in equal portions to all, yet I am one of those who still believes in this land of ours, in this Government of ours.

I am one of those who, having read the history of our country from its birth down to the present moment, one of those who, having earned the food which I have eaten and the clothes which I have worn by manual labor, still believes that working conditions and wages are better, and the opportunity to acquire property, education, to have all those things which make life worth living, is greater than in any other land. Still do I believe that this is the land of opportunity, that this is the country where a greater degree of justice and fair dealing prevails than under any other government in all the world.

We have more of the right of free speech, freedom of religious worship, freedom of action, than any other people.

Oh, I remember the charges made during the campaign of 1932, during the last administration, during the campaign of 1936. I have not forgotten the appeals to passion, to prejudice, and to hatred. I have not forgotten the bitter words of criticism so often aimed at "economic royalists", "entrenched greed", and all those engaged in business and in industry.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman also recall that during his campaign of 4 years ago he pledged that, if elected, such conditions could not continue in this country?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I recall that; and I remember he said at that time that the emergency which confronted us was "today's problem", and that we must not borrow to meet the deficits which were being piled up.

Yet we did borrow to meet those deficits and others which he created; and if his statement of yesterday be correct, our national condition is still a depressing one.

I have not forgotten the charges made against the Hearst newspapers, for which I hold no brief, nor the charges against the Du Ponts, whose greatest offense seems to have been that they switched their campaign contributions from the Democratic to the Republican Party.

And I am glad to note that this bitterness was apparently only for campaign purposes and to recall, if memory serves correctly, that son-in-law Boettiger is now in the employ of "the wicked editor Hearst" and that "a Du Pont" will soon be welcomed as a member of the White House household.

Please do not misunderstand me. So far as I know, no one on this side contends, or ever has contended for one moment, that if the assembly line in General Motors, or in any other industry, so speeds up production as to unduly affect a man's earning capacity or to impair his efficiency or to deprive him of the ability to devote a reasonable amount of time to recreation and his family, such condition should be permitted to exist.

There is no question but that, under the police power granted by the Constitution, conditions, whether of hours of labor or insufficient wages, which injuriously affect the health, the well-being, of the man who labors can be outlawed by State or Nation.

We should, however, in legislating as to hours of labor, as to a minimum wage, remember that the manufactured product must be sold. If a minimum wage and maximum hours are to be established in one industry, as, for instance, in the motor industry, we all know that the price of the product must go up and that that product cannot be sold unless there is a corresponding increase in the price of the farmer's product, unless there be furnished a consumers' market.

The whole theory, if my understanding be correct, is that the Government can, by law, so control wages, hours of labor, volume of production in both industry and agriculture as to make a balanced whole. No doubt those who believe in this theory are sincere; their motives cannot be questioned and the issue is not, and should not be, a partisan one. If it prevails, if the Government is going to fix minimum wages and maximum hours of labor in the factory, what are we going to have? To me came appeals within the week from farmers in my district, an agricultural district, and they want an 8-hour day—something new. Why are they not entitled to it, if the other fellows are going to get it? We all know it is impossible. It cannot be done unless we change our whole scheme. Then what will the condition be? We will have the Government—and that seems to be the theory—fixing wages and hours and conditions of labor, not only in one industry but in every industry—production on the farm as well as production in the factory. That would be fine if it would work, and it is not for me to say that it would not work. Over on the Democratic side here is a gentleman whose judgment to me always seems good, except when he is expressing an opinion on partisan questions, and this is not a partisan question.

It was on January 14, on the floor of this House, that the distinguished gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Rules Committee [Mr. O'CONNOR], gave a complete answer to this theory when he said:

> Very few people entertain the hope that government, whether it is local, State, or Federal, will ever be as efficient as private business. It seems hopeless to get what we know as real efficiency in government. All we can do is improve it from time to time.
> The facts are that the cost of government has increased by more than all the cost of relief by at least a billion dollars.

There is the answer to the theory held by some that the Government should own and operate, or at least operate if not own, all business, and fix and order our daily lives in all their details. So in Michigan these workers in the factories—and the President says every man should have the opportunity to work, and he is right, to earn something for himself and for his family—these men were as satisfied as any group of workers ever were, the vast majority of them, but Mr. Lewis, ever since he got out of the American Federation of Labor, has been pursuing a course which, if successful, will establish him as a dictator.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may be permitted to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. It would seem that the outlook, as it actually exists, is not as dark as painted by the President yesterday. It would seem to be equally true that the remedy for whatever trouble now confronts us is not the substitution of Government ownership and Government management in the place and stead of private, individual efforts.

The remedy is rather through deliberate, progressive legislation having for its purpose the establishment of justice to all, the protecion of the worker, and also—and without fail—the protection of the man who furnishes the opportunity to work.

The President yesterday truly said that—

> The test of American progress is not whether we add more to the abundance of those who have made much; it is whether we provide enough for those who have too little.

Measured by that test, the past administration has been a complete and a total failure, for it is conceded that "the rich have grown richer and the poor poorer", and no one disputes that the burden laid upon the taxpayers has been increased manyfold; that, as in the days of King George, he has "sent hither a multitude of officeholders to eat out our substance."

Again, the President was correct when he said that National, State, and municipal government must be so administered as to make it possible to have "a Nation uncorrupted by cancers of injustice."

And here we come to a condition which confronts us today, to a question which must be answered, which must be solved, and that correctly and now, not at some future time.

Shall we have within this country of ours a malignant, growing cancer, which is corrupting our national life, which is undermining our Government, which is stealing from the citizen his right to work, to labor, to obtain for himself and his family those things which the President says are so necessary to our national existence?

It has been said that the miners' union contributed something like a half-million dollars to the Democratic campaign fund and that the manufacturing industries contributed vast sums to the Republican campaign fund. Presumably these funds were contributed for lawful purposes and were so used.

What industry would have expected from the winning by candidates who received its support I do not know, and I care not. What the miners' union expects from the present administration, to the success of which it contributed so overwhelmingly, can only be judged by the statements of some of its spokesmen and by their actions.

To me it is unthinkable that our President would knowingly use his great power, his personal popularity, to defeat the very objects which he says he has in mind.

I call to mind that statement of his, made in September 1932:

> But remember well that attitude and method, the way we do things, is nearly always the measure of our sincerity.

Today and in the future, his action in this crisis will be judged, not by what he has said, not by what he said yesterday, today, or tomorrow, but by what he does. We shall learn, either directly or indirectly, whether he intends to support the constitutional right to own property, to work.

Millions of our citizens are waiting, watching, anxiously, prayerfully, to see what he intends to do in this present crisis, praying that he have divine guidance so that his decision may be in accord with justice.

Admitting, for the sake of argument, that in the motor industry there are workers who do not have all of this world's goods that they would like to possess or should have, the fact nevertheless remains that that industry pays a higher wage and furnishes better working conditions than any other industry of comparable size. And, if conditions are not what they should be, then there should be a determination of the facts by an impartial and disinterested board or group.

A second error never corrects the first. The right to strike, to refuse to work, is not questioned. But that right is not involved in the present controversy.

It has been said, and denied, that the vast majority of the General Motors employees desires to work. The overwhelming evidence seems to bear out that contention. Nevertheless, in the factories in Michigan, in the beginning, a small percentage of the workers, "sitting down" in those factories, threw out of employment their fellow workers.

When the strikers "sat down" in the plants at Flint, what happened? There is, there can be, no claim that they had either legal or moral right to the possession of these factories. They had jobs there. By their own voluntary acts, they gave up those jobs, as they had the right to do.

But this was not the end. They took possession and said that no one else should work in those factories and today, as a result of that policy, hundreds of thousands of people are out of work; the loss in wages is mounting by the million day after day, and the burden of supporting these idle workers, who would, if they had their way, be working, today falls upon the innocent taxpayer.

When these men "sat down" in this plant in Flint, what did the Governor of Michigan do? Did he say that the law which would remove them as trespassers should be enforced? He did not. He called out the National Guard of the State of Michigan to protect them in their illegal possession of others' property.

He called out the National Guard, the inevitable result of which was to prevent the vast majority of workers from resuming their jobs and, had it not been for the National Guard, beyond question, those who desired to work and who were greatly in the majority, would have thrown the "sit-down" strikers out of the plant.

And so we find the executive branch of the State government, the troops of the State, protecting those who hold possession of property which does not belong to them, preventing workers who desire to work from taking their rightful places in the factory—a strange, strange situation.

And what is the demand on the part of these strikers? It is this: That the C. I. O. shall be recognized as the only agency for collective bargaining. In other words, that, if a man is to have a job in a factory his contract of employment may not be made with the factory owner or manager, but it must be made through the officials of the C. I. O.

The demand of the C. I. O. is that it, and it alone, shall be the sole agency for collective bargaining and that General Motors cannot, and shall not, bargain with any other group, organized or unorganized, great or small. A more un-American, undemocratic, unfair proposition it would be difficult to state.

This is a new conception of power and authority in this country of ours, and it first came to public notice when John L. Lewis staged his fight against the American Federation of Labor. What is the battle all about? Stripped of camouflage, it is this: Shall the C. I. O., headed by Lewis, control the labor of the United States? Shall the rights of the American Federation of Labor and of unorganized labor be disregarded? All those who refuse to bend the knee to the C. I. O. be deprived of employment? That is the issue.

The President the other day called our attention to the attitude of the Supreme Court and, if I recall the words correctly, hoped that we would have a more understanding interpretation of the Constitution by that body.

The interpretation of the Constitution and of our laws is for the Supreme Court, not for the executive or the legislative branch. If evils exist which can be remedied by legislation, that is our responsibility.

The enforcement of the laws guaranteed under the Constitution is for the executive branch of the Government.

Surely our President believes that every man should have the right to labor, to support himself and his family. Certainly our President's advisers know that unless these trespassers, these few who are assuming to act for the many, who are denying that right of every American to which the President has attached so much importance, namely, the right to work, are removed from these factories, that unless these factories are permitted to reopen, distress and want will come in ever-increasing ratio to an ever-larger group throughout our country.

His advisers know that in the State of Michigan anarchy exists, that due process of the courts has been suspended, that rights guaranteed under State and Federal Constitution are being denied to honest, peaceable, law-abiding citizens; that is, the right to work.

If this condition continues it can only end in rioting and bloodshed.

The laws are upon the statute books. There is no excuse for their nonenforcement, and a fearless word from the Chief Executive of the Nation to the chief executive of the State of Michigan will restore law and order and, upon its restoration, can then begin negotiations which all hope will end, if not in permanent, at least in temporary, peace.

The President, or at least his advisers, must know, if the newspaper reports be correct—and there is no reason to doubt them—that out of the State of Ohio, from Toledo and surrounding towns, into Michigan went hundreds of workers, men who belong to the C. I. O., not the American Federation of Labor, the members of the C. I. O., all determined to close these factories in Michigan.

What did they do? A few strikers in one plant sat down and said that the plant should not run. These men from Ohio came up there, surrounded the factory, and established a picket line. Peaceful picketing! What is it? Stand on the corner and argue? No. In Michigan, pickets join arm in arm and go around the factory in a circle, and when you try to break through you cannot get through, because that cordon is tighter than any football line you ever saw.

And if an attempt is made by a worker or a group of workers who desire to continue at their jobs to break through the picket line, a fight is on. It is these fights that the Governor of Michigan has said, in substance, shall not take place, and the result, the only result, of such action on his part is to leave the striking C. I. O. members in absolute control of the situation. They may picket; they may form a solid line around the factory; they may sit in the factory unlawfully, illegally, and they are protected from those officers of the law who would serve civil or criminal process to put them out. The result is that the action of the Governor is giving direct aid to the C. I. O., increasing unemployment, adding to the cost of relief.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. This morning I received a letter from a worker in one of the General Motors plants in my district, and in that letter he makes this short statement regarding the opportunity to work:

> The men now working in the plant are very much opposed to the way things are going on. Most of them have lived here some time and own or are buying their homes.
> The largest number of them are well satisfied with conditions, especially since they received the raise that went through about 2 months ago.
> A few are inclined to be more radical, but their number is so small that there is nothing to worry about.

I think that coincides with what the gentleman is saying.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is that from Flint or Pontiac?

Mr. DONDERO. Pontiac, Mich.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The same condition exists in Flint and in a dozen places in the smaller towns in Michigan. Men who want to work are deprived of the right and the opportunity to work.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman has given considerable thought to this question. I would like to propound this question: What does the gentleman think would be the ultimate consequence if public opinion in the State of Michigan finally resolves back of the activities of those who are sitting down, striking, holding the plant?

Mr. HOFFMAN. What would be the effect?

Mr. CRAWFORD. What would be the ultimate effect of public opinion in Michigan throwing its strength and support back of those who are holding the plant through the sit-down strike?

Mr. HOFFMAN. In my judgment public opinion in Michigan will never sanction the illegal holding of property, the denial of the right to work. If public opinion ever does back the C. I. O. to the extent that the present conditions continue, then, of course, the C. I. O. and its sympathizers remain in possession of the factories; not a wheel can turn and industry is at a standstill unless it pays the wages and adopts the hours of labor fixed by the C. I. O.

In that event all the owner will have to do is to provide the plant, the equipment, the money to run it, and sell the finished product, and the C. I. O. will take the income. That is the inevitable result, and, of course, that result means that, in the end, the factories will close or the Government must provide the funds to operate them.

In behalf of the hundreds of thousands of innocent workers and families dependent upon the motor industry, in behalf of those workers within the ranks of that industry who desire to work, who are members of the American Federation of Labor, the President should end this intolerable situation, and there is no doubt but that, should he advise John L. Lewis that law and order must prevail, peace would be immediately restored.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for permission to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after the reading of the Journal and disposition of business on the Speaker's table, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BERNARD] may have permission to extend his own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, in order that my position and attitude in this Congress shall be known from the beginning, I propose to support all sound and sane liberal legislation in the interests of the people, whether it emanates from the White House or from the majority side of the House of Representatives, and to oppose all unsound, socialistic, and unconstitutional legislation.

I believe in popular government, in our free institutions, and in our three separate and independent branches of government. I do not quite understand the attacks that are being made upon the Supreme Court of the United States and upon its powers and membership. For a long time past, the radicals, Communists, and Socialists have been telling the American people that the Constitution is a scrap of paper, representing wealth, reaction, and Wall Street, and aiming their most virulent darts at the Supreme Court and the membership of our highest tribunal. As one who is alined with the liberal element within the Republican Party, I believe that the Constitution is the greatest charter of human liberty ever conceived by the mind of man. It is what makes for our rights and liberties as free, sovereign, and independent American citizens. It is the barrier against autocracies and dictatorships of the Old World, whether they be of the left or the right. It is the civil bible of America, according to Al Smith, and represents the rights and liberties of the minorities, racial and religious.

We have been accustomed to these attacks of the radicals, Communists, and Socialists against the Supreme Court, seeking to undermine and destroy the Constitution. The Constitution is the palladium of our liberties, and yet now we find the President of the United States joining with this chorus and virtually lecturing the membership of the United States Supreme Court and saying to them, "You must read the context of the Constitution with an enlightened point of view, not from the point of view upon which you took the office and swore to preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution, and to interpret it on the basis of its provisions, but you must look at the election returns before reaching a decision."

You might as well say to the referee of a football game, "Instead of abiding by the rules of the game, appeal the decision to those in the grandstand"; or to an umpire in a baseball game, when a player is sliding to second base and is called out, and then "change the decision and call him safe in accordance with the volume of boos and noise among the spectators."

I yield to no man in this House, whether he be Progressive, Democrat, Farmer-Labor, or what not, in my faith in popular government and in free institutions and the will of the people; but we have taken an oath of office ourselves to preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States against its enemies, from within and from without. Is it the contention of the radical element in this House, or of the Democratic Party, that the right to review acts of Congress shall be taken away from the Supreme Court? If that is the issue, let us bring it out here, as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] so well said. Let us debate this question in the open, if it takes today or all of next week. Let us understand the issue. Are the members of the Democratic Party saying that we must take this power away from the Supreme Court and let Congress legislate without review by the Supreme Court or check or balance of any kind? If we did that, we would have the right and power to change our form of government by a majority rule of the Congress. We could legislate the President out of office. We could set up fascism in this country overnight if the people's rights and liberties were not protected by the Supreme Court.

I raise this issue now because it has been thrown upon the floor of the House of Representatives, not by those who have spoken here, but by the President of the United States; not merely because of what he said in this House a few days ago—that the Supreme Court and the judges of the Supreme Court must approach these questions from a more enlightened point of view—but because of things he has said before. We might pass by his recent statement if that was the only one. However, as we must look into the record—and we in this House know what the record is—we find that the President only last year urged Representative Samuel B. Hill, of this House, to put aside his reasonable doubts as to the constitutionality of the Guffey bill and pass the bill.

We know what he said when the N. R. A. was declared unconstitutional by a unanimous vote of the Supreme Court—that we had gone back to the "horse and buggy" days; that wheat would go down to 40 cents and cotton to 6 cents. I do not wish to inject a political and partisan issue into this discussion, but we Republicans feel that the change and improvement in conditions started from the time the Supreme Court held the N. R. A. unconstitutional, which restored confidence in the land and lifted the fear and dread of government by bureaucracy and Executive orders instead of by law. From that time wheat and cotton have gone up in spite of what the President said about "horse and buggy" days, when he sneered at the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court in the N. R. A. or Schechter case.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. FORD of California. Does the gentleman mean to tell this House that the man he is criticizing is the only President of the United States who ever criticized the Supreme Court? Did Theodore Roosevelt do so? Did President Grant do so by packing the Court? Did Lincoln do so? Did not President Theodore Roosevelt suggest recall of judicial decisions?

Mr. FISH. I am very glad to answer the gentleman's question. It is perfectly true that all these Presidents—Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln to some extent after the Dred Scott decision—although Lincoln believed the Constitution was all the law and the prophets. He did not say that he would resist that decision, but said that he thought the decision was wrong.

Mr. FORD of California rose.

Mr. FISH. Let me proceed. I am coming to Theodore Roosevelt. There was no greater believer in constitutional government than Theodore Roosevelt since the days of Daniel Webster—Theodore Roosevelt believed exactly what I believe, and that is that the people made the Constitution, that the people are the masters of the Constitution, and that they have a right to amend the Constitution in an orderly and prescribed way by a two-thirds vote of the House and of the Senate and by ratification of three-quarters of the States. He also advocated a review of judicial decisions, but that also through a constitutional amendment.

Mr. FORD of California and Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana rose.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield for the moment.

Mr. Speaker, we have the right to amend the Constitution. If there is need to amend it, let us amend it. Why not propose the amendments? I for one expect to go along with some of these amendments. I have no more use for the 5-to-4 decisions than any other Member of this House. I would be perfectly willing to give the Congress of the United States the right to override a 5-to-4 decision of the Supreme Court by a two-thirds vote in the same manner we override a Presidential veto. There is nothing radical about that in the case of 5-to-4 decisions; but what would you do in these other decisions, where the vote was unanimous or practically unanimous? Would you have the members of the Supreme Court so enlightened that all nine of them would reverse their own decisions at the suggestion of their master in the White House or because of some alleged popular point of view? Would you have the entire membership of the Supreme Court reverse their decision on the N. R. A. case, the liberals and the more conservatives alike? How enlightened would you have them? I can see some excuse for this argument on a 5-to-4 decision, but these are not 5-to-4 decisions which we have been discussing, such as the N. R. A. and A. A. A. I have already expressed my views on the invalidating of the minimum-wage law in New York State, which was a 5-to-4 decision and, to me, a shocking one, and I go for reversing it but not for resisting it.

The President has raised an unfortunate and an unlawful issue when he lectured the Court in his speech to Congress on the state of the Union and urged the Court to look at the ballot box and have a more enlightened judgment because of some alleged popular opinion or temporary whim. I say as a liberal Republican that this is not only a novel doctrine, this is not only a new doctrine, but it is a revolutionary, unlawful, and a monstrous doctrine put forth by the President of the United States in which he tells the Supreme Court "not to mind the context of the Constitution but look and see what the people back home want." The only way—the prescribed way and the quickest way—to find out what the people want done is to submit a constitutional amendment to them.

What is the function of the Supreme Court? It is one of the checks and balances provided by the Constitution in order that legislation may not be passed contrary to the Constitution. The Supreme Court is the living voice of the Constitution, that maintains its integrity and supremacy and a government by law. We either believe in the Constitution or we do not believe in it. If we do not believe in it, then let us go ahead and take back all the powers for ourselves, unrestrained by the Supreme Court, and legislate in any way we want. But if we believe in the Constitution and constitutional government it is our duty to uphold the Supreme Court and call upon its members to express their views and reach their decisions in accordance with the text of the Constitution. Otherwise there is no power or authority to prevent the encroachment of the Congress upon the executive branch of the Government, or vice versa, or the invasion of States' rights or even the wiping out of those guaranties of the Constitution providing for freedom of speech, of the press, or of assembly.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Not for the moment.

If the Members want to bring in an amendment giving the Congress control of maximum hours and minimum wages, bring it in and we can discuss it. I have no fear of it, because it will be a referendum to the people and the people will decide the issue.

When you criticize the Court you criticize yourselves; you criticize Congress. When a proposed amendment to the Constitution is passed by a two-thirds vote of Congress it is submitted to the people back home in the various States for their decision and, as a firm believer in popular government and the will of the people, I have no fear of the results or of a just decision. Then we shall have what the people want and not what some individual thinks they want. If anybody has been negligent, it is the Congress; but in order to protect ourselves with a good degree of hypocrisy we point the finger of scorn at the Supreme Court and try to place the blame on the Court instead of on ourselves. The Justices of the Supreme Court would become unfit guides and unworthy guardians of American liberties and the welfare of the country if they should change their opinions as easily as weather vanes or the color of their decisions like chameleons.

What happened in regard to prohibition? The people decided to do away with it, and it took them a year or so. What happened to the more recent Norris amendment? They put it through in a year and a half. The doctrine proposed by the President is an abomination of desolation. If it were followed by the members of the Court, it would destroy their usefulness and undermine the confidence and the respect of the American people for the impartiality, independence, integrity, courage, and wisdom of the Court. The record of the Supreme Court is one of the proudest and most honorable pages in American history and we must not smear or besmirch it. If the American people desire to amend the Constitution, it is our duty and function to initiate the amendment and the people can put it through within a year or two. However, let us stop saying to the Supreme Court from now on: "Never mind the Constitution. Never mind its wording or context. Make your decision on what you think the people back home want." That is a repugnant innovation. It is a degrading idea that will be rejected with disdain by the people as a dishonorable expedient.

The consequences of such a fatal doctrine would wreck the Court, as it virtually would require the Justices to violate their oaths of office. I challenge any Democrat to show one single speech the President of the United States made during the campaign in which he even mentioned the Constitution or the Supreme Court. He avoided both like poison throughout the campaign and would not express a single view. Now, what right has the President to say that the election was fought out on the ground of constitutional government and to tell the Supreme Court to listen to the election returns? [Applause.]

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House at this time for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, it is rather presumptuous of me, as a new man, to rise so early in the session and explain in an offhand way my attitude toward the great issues which now confront us. However, I have been deeply impressed today and in past days by the discussion I have heard on both sides of this Chamber.

I fear we are entering upon a study of the great problems before us entirely in a partisan manner. I think that is the greatest danger which besets and endangers the successful work ahead of us.

This morning we have heard from Members on both sides of the aisle. The President has been upheld and the President has been criticized in regard to his attitude toward the Supreme Court.

I have given some little study to constitutional problems myself, and I have my own view as to the President's meaning when he asked for a more "enlightened view." May I say, following the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], who has just spoken, that the present encumbent of the White House is certainly not the first great Executive to challenge the findings of our highest Court. May I recall to you that President Lincoln certainly felt that property rights were held higher than human rights, and there was a time when our Great Emancipator President held to the view that the higher law was being disregarded by too close an interpretation of the Constitution of the United States.

May I remind the Members that the other great President by the name of Roosevelt felt, when minimum-wage laws were being nullified by court action, that property rights were being held too sacred in conflict with human rights.

I do not feel anyone here can surpass me in respect for the supreme law of the land if I understand what the supreme law of the land is. What is the Constitution of the United States? It is the will of the American people. It is not only the original document but the amendments that have been added since. It represents the will of the American people as expressed in solemn convention in 1787 and as later amended by 21 formal amendments.

Mr. Speaker, it is very, very difficult, indeed, for the supreme will of a great nation to be expressed in words. Such are the defects of human nature and intelligence and such the limitation of our language.

It has been proposed that if the Constitution of the United States, constituting the will of the Nation, be changed, that is the way it should be done. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has suggested the offering of an amendment. I can agree with him in that respect, but, Mr. Speaker, it takes a long time, and it should take a long time, to amend the Constitution of the United States. Sometimes when we amend it we do not fully express the will of the Nation. I submit that the fourteenth amendment and the fifteenth amendment, not to mention others at this time, probably did not fully represent the will of the Nation. Since that time we have adopted other amendments. We adopted, for instance, the eighteenth amendment, and I wonder if that amendment really represented the will of the American Nation? It was formally adopted, of course, and we need not criticize the way in which it was adopted.

There is no other way to do it legally, you say. Perhaps you are right. What did the President of the United States mean recently when he stood here begging and praying for a more enlightened view of our supreme law? I think he prayed for this on his own part, on the part of the Congress, and on the part of the judiciary. I do not feel that the President was scolding the judiciary by this remark, as has been implied here.

Mr. Speaker, there are great issues before us at the present time. What road shall we take? The road of conservatism and reaction, or the road of progress?

Our President looks in the direction of progress, and he hopes that we, as lawmakers, will uphold him in the direction of that progress. He earnestly hopes, if I correctly interpret his words, that the Federal judiciary will do the same thing, not to the extent of stultifying their conscience or their intellect, but simply to bring legislative action and judicial interpretation into such agreement that the general welfare of 130,000,000 American people may be properly ministered to. That is the oath he took yesterday. That is the oath we took a few days ago. I believe it can be done if we will forget partisanship. Let us cease bantering back and forth across the aisle. Let us see to it that we do not make a mockery of the supreme law of the land. I am the last one to sanction that or suggest it, and I am sure our great leader has no intention of doing any such thing, nor do I think anyone in the House believes he has such intention.

If we are to legislate during this reconstruction period with a view of applying all that science has done to better the lot of the common man, we should not undermine the ancient safeguards of liberty. I am the last one to remove the ancient milestones. But we must legislate, and we ought to expect the Court to interpret the supreme law of the land, in the light of the twentieth century rather than in the light of the eighteenth century. That is the spirit of progress, and that, I think, Mr. Speaker, is what the President of the United States expects.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CULKIN. I understand there has been no quarrel with the Supreme Court from any source with reference to its conclusions on human rights, human liberty, or the liberty of the individual. The gentleman would not change the Constitution in that respect, would he?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. No; I want to safeguard our human liberties. It is with respect to property rights——

Mr. CULKIN. In other words, the most radical individual or the individual most advanced toward the left does not want the Constitution changed with respect to its authority over human liberty or the Bill of Rights. I assume the gentleman would not change that.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. No; I am willing that should remain as it is. It is our great heritage.

Mr. CULKIN. And the gentleman is satisfied with the interpretation of the Supreme Court in that respect?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. So far as I understand its interpretation; yes.

Mr. CULKIN. Does the gentleman know of anyone in authority or anyone who speaks advisedly who does quarrel with those interpretations?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I think the chief quarrel has been with regard to property rights and that sort of thing.

Mr. CULKIN. The economic phases involved.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. Why is not the solution of that problem the simple procedure suggested by my colleague from New York a moment ago—a constitutional amendment which can accomplish the purpose in a year or a year and a half? Is it a fact that the distinguished leader of the gentleman's party now in the White House is afraid of a referendum of the people on such a constitutional amendment?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. No; I think not. I think he wishes to arrive at a solution of our problem without such a change if it can be done, and I feel that way about it myself.

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman would not want the Supreme Court to stultify itself in its interpretation of the present Constitution. I beg leave to inquire, why does not the gentleman advocate the submission of a constitutional amendment to the people covering the economic or the property phases of life in the United States, and let the people pass on that question through the customary medium?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. We may need to do that ultimately, but I think that is a long process. If the object can be attained without doing that, it can be done more quickly.

Mr. CULKIN. May I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the repeal of prohibition took about a year and the adoption of the Norris amendment about a year and a half, and by adopting this method we have the value of a referendum passed on by the people of the United States.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I agree to that.

Mr. CULKIN. Why does not the distinguished gentleman, whose speech I much admire, propose such an amendment himself?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Well, I have not come to that point. I am a new man and I am simply expressing to the Members of the House how I feel about it.

Mr. CULKIN. Why do not some of the leaders of the gentleman's party propose it?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I may say that I would not want to destroy or break down our constitutional safeguards or take away from the Supreme Court of the United States the right of judicial review. In this respect I agree quite thoroughly with the distinguished gentleman from Georgia who addressed us so learnedly, and also the distinguished gentleman from New York. I am a conservative in that respect. All I am in favor of is just what I believe the President of the United States hopes for, and that is a judicial interpretation which gives enough leeway so we may accomplish our great objectives without unconstitutional statutes and without the long delay of formal amendment.

Mr. CULKIN. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the distinguished leader of the Senate, Senator ROBINSON, announced at the beginning of the session that a constitutional amendment was to be submitted to the people, and he was forthwith kicked into the cellar by the statement of our distinguished President who implored the Court to take a more modern or a more humanitarian view of the Constitution.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. May I suggest to the gentleman from Arizona, and also to the gentleman from New York, that it is not necessary to draw up another resolution and introduce it in the Congress to accomplish the purpose suggested by the gentleman from New York, because during the last Congress many resolutions approaching that subject and many resolutions having the particular purpose in mind stated by the gentleman from New York were submitted to the Congress and, I believe, have been reintroduced at this session and are now pending; and may I also suggest that I agree with the gentleman from New York that this is probably the best way to handle the matter, and, perhaps, the gentleman from Arizona likewise feels that we should attack this problem by offering a constitutional amendment if that is necessary.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Arizona may proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALLGREN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULKIN. May I say that I am in favor of submitting to the people any proper amendment giving jurisdiction of these social questions, but not with regard to the Bill of Rights. I think that stands unchallenged in the minds of the American people, but on the various economic questions we can submit a proposed amendment and let the people pass on it. I wanted to make that clear to the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. And may I take the remaining time to make myself clear, if I have not already done so, in regard to a constitutional amendment? I would agree to that as a last resort, or if it cannot possibly be done the way I believe the President wants it to be done—and I may say further that if there be any Member of this House who is suggesting a constitutional amendment, not sincerely but as a matter of dilatory tactics, then I am not with that gentleman.

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman does not mean to suggest that I am intending this to be dilatory?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. No.

Mr. CULKIN. Then the gentleman does not refer to me.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Not at all, I assure the gentleman.

Mr. CULKIN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. But I am saying that if anyone should at this moment come forward with the suggestion that we must have a constitutional amendment, and is doing this purely for the purpose of delaying the important social legislation we are now engaged upon, then, of course, I cannot agree with such sentiment; but I am not charging the gentleman from New York with taking that view. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I have a very jealous regard for the dignity of this House. Of approximately 1,000,000 public servants operating in various fields of the Federal Government today the Members of the two legislative bodies of the Congress are practically the only ones directly representative of the people.

In the final analysis, the President of the United States is not always selected by a majority of the voters, and it has happened in our history that a nominee for that high office has received a majority of the votes cast, but, through the machinery of the electoral college, has been defeated.

So we who serve in the two legislative bodies of the Congress are the only direct representatives of the great masses of our people in all the ramifications of their various pursuits. I think it behooves us, therefore, to have due regard for the dignity of this assembly.

During the years in which I have served as a Member of this body I have noted one thing which, in my judgment, detracts seriously and materially from its dignity, and I think it is well at the beginning of this session to call attention to it, because we can in part correct it.

Any Member of this House may drop a bill in the hopper, and the customary procedure is its reference to the appropriate committee.

When the bill reaches that committee it is sent directly to the appropriate executive or administrative department for investigation and report. In the ramifications of departmental service the bill introduced by a Member may find itself finally in the hands of some subordinate in one of the many divisions of that department or bureau, or someone working under him, and he may send to the committee in response to its inquiry an adverse report.

It is conceivable that that adverse report may be based on personal considerations, or on an unfavorable attitude which may result from his individual feeling toward the Member who introduced the bill, or an unfavorable attitude toward the general subject to which the bill relates.

It has been the practice in this House, when such an unfavorable report is received from such a subordinate, for the committee of the House of Representatives to decline further consideration of the measure introduced by the Member. And I think that with less than 550 Representatives of the people directly in our governmental service, it behooves the committees of this House to be mindful of that representation and what it means, and so to assert the authority of the legislative branch of the Government that we may not be absolutely submissive and speechless at the behest of some subordinate in some bureau of a department. [Applause.]

Perhaps at times this practice may go even further in its stifling effects. It may be that if a committee should overrule the objections of the subordinate officer and display sufficient hardihood to report the bill favorably, and then the two Houses of the Congress in the course of their deliberations should pass it, even the great Executive of the United States, whom we all admire for his humanitarian purposes, would find it necessary, in the great mass of official labors, to send that measure over to the self-same department to get the result of its reflections and conclusions concerning the bill, and that back to the same subordinate would go this measure upon which the Congress of the United States had passed; and that because of a letter of advice emanating from him and perhaps signed by the Cabinet officer at the head of his department, pro forma, the President of the United States would feel justified in vetoing the measure. It is evident that in such a course justice could miscarry.

So it seems to me, from observation through a service of some years, that from the beginning of this Congress we should realize the dignity of the important position we hold and that we should uphold this body in all its worth and integrity, that it may not lose caste either with us or with the people of the United States, and that as the Representatives of the people we may assert the rights which are theirs and ours and see that the dignity and the honor of this great assembly are properly preserved. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CURLEY, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. EBERHARTER, on account of death in family.

To Mr. MOUTON, for 3 days, on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, January 22, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Subcommittee 1 of the Judiciary Committee will hold a hearing at 10 a. m., Wednesday, January 27, 1937, on H. R. 1611, to amend the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies."

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

243. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated January 12, 1937, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and illustration, on a preliminary examination and survey of Cheboygan Harbor and River, Mich., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved August 30, 1935 (H. Doc. No. 134); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustration.

244. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a draft of a bill for the relief of Victor M. Ruiz C. and Luz Elena Robles, both of Panama City, Republic of Panama, which the War Department presents for the consideration of the Congress, with a view to its enactment into law; to the Committee on Claims.

245. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the draft of a bill to amend the act of February 7, 1913, so as to remove restrictions as to the use of the Little Rock Confederate Cemetery, and for other purposes, which the War Department presents for the consideration of the Congress with a view to its enactment into law; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

246. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the draft of a bill to amend the act of June 23, 1936, authorizing the Secretary of War to set apart as a national cemetery certain lands of the Fort Snelling Military Reservation, Minn., which the War Department presents for the consideration of the Congress with a view to its enactment into law; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

247. A letter from the Secretary of Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to amend the act approved February 15, 1929, entitled "An act to permit certain warrant officers to count all active service rendered under temporary appointment as warrant or commissioned officers in the Regular Navy, or as warrant or commissioned officers in the United States Naval Reserve Force, for the purpose of promotion to chief warrant rank"; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

248. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill authorizing an appropriation for the erection of a memorial to the officers and men of the United States Navy who lost their lives as the result of a boiler explosion that totally destroyed the U. S. S. Tulip near St. Inigoes Bay, Md., on November 11, 1864, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

249. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to amend section 5 of the act entitled "An act authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes", approved March 3, 1925, to authorize the payment of a per diem in connection with naval aerial surveys and flight checking of aviation charts; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

250. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to amend section 1860 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, to permit retired officers and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps to hold civil-service office in any Territory of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

251. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to provide for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men and former enlisted men of the Marine Corps for the value of personal effects lost by fire at the marine barracks, Quantico, Va., on October 5, 1930; to the Committee on Claims.

252. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept from the State of Utah title to a certain State-owned section of land and to patent other land in the State in lieu thereof, and for other purposes (this proposed legislation has been submitted to the Secretary of the Interior and he has signified his approval thereof); to the Committee on the Public Lands.

253. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to amend section 22 of the act approved March 4, 1925, entitled "An act providing for sundry matters affecting the naval service, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

254. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a bill for the relief of Lt. Comdr. Chester B. Peake, Supply Corps, United States Navy; to the Committee on Claims.

255. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to authorize the acceptance of certain lands in the city of San Diego, Calif., by the United States and the transfer by the Secretary of the Navy of other lands to said city of San Diego; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

256. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a bill to provide for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men and former enlisted men of the Navy for the value of personal effects destroyed in a fire at the Naval Radio Station, Libugon, Guam, on April 5, 1932; to the Committee on Claims.

257. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to provide for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men and former enlisted men of the Navy for the value of personal effects lost by fire at the Naval Radio Station, Eureka, Calif., on January 17, 1930; to the Committee on Claims.

258. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept gifts and bequests for the benefit of the Office of Naval Records and Library, Navy Department; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

259. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes", approved July 1, 1902; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

260. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to provide for the reimbursement of certain officers of the Navy and Marine Corps and the widow of a deceased officer of the Navy for personal property lost as a result of the earthquake which occurred at Managua, Nicaragua, on March 31, 1931; to the Committee on Claims.

261. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill for the relief of Norman Hildebrand; to the Committee on Claims.

262. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a bill to amend the part of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes", approved June 4, 1920, relating to the conservation, care, custody, protection, and operation of the naval petroleum and oil-shale reserves; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

263. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to amend section 7 of the act approved May 29, 1934, entitled "An act to regulate the distribution, promotion, retirement, and discharge of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

264. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to provide for the reimbursement of certain civilians employed at the naval operating base, Hampton Roads, Va., on May 4, 1930, for losses of tools in a fire on pier 7 at the naval operating base on that date; to the Committee on Claims.

265. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to prohibit the unauthorized wearing, manufacture, or sale of medals and badges issued by the Navy Department; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

266. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill awarding a Navy cross to John W. Thomason; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

267. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to provide for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men and former enlisted men of the Navy for the value of personal effects lost by fire at the Naval Training Station, Hampton Roads, Va., on February 21, 1927; to the Committee on Claims.

268. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to authorize the disposition of the former naval radio station property at St. Augustine, Fla.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

269. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to provide for the better administration of justice in the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

270. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to provide for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men and former enlisted men of the Navy for the value of personal effects lost during a hurricane in Samoa on January 15, 1931; to the Committee on Claims.

271. A letter from the Federal Power Commission, transmitting a statement showing the names, titles, and compensation of the members and employees of the Federal Power Commission to be attached to your copy of the Fifteenth Annual Report of the Federal Power Commission; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

272. A letter from the Attorney General, transmitting a proposed bill to regulate the presentation of the defense of alibi in criminal cases; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

273. A letter from the Attorney General, transmitting certain provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, suggesting certain amendments to the act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

274. A letter from the Attorney General, transmitting a proposed bill intended to permit the court or the prosecuting attorney to comment on the failure of a defendant in a criminal case to testify in his own behalf; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

275. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, transmitting a report on forest roads and trails for the fiscal year of 1936; to the Committee on Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 79. A resolution providing for the consideration of H. R. 2301; without amendment (Rept. No. 15). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 80. A resolution providing for the consideration of H. R. 1545; without amendment (Rept. No. 16). Referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BLOOM: A bill (H. R. 3407) to amend the act of May 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 349), for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service and in certain positions in the legislative branch of the Government, to include all employees in the Columbia Institution for the Deaf; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

By Mr. CELLER: A bill (H. R. 3408) to amend the Civil Service Act approved January 16, 1883 (22 Stat. 403), and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3409) to amend section 2 of the act approved June 30, 1879, so as to permit women to serve on juries in the courts of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COLLINS: A bill (H. R. 3410) authorizing an appropriation for the purchase of a site and the erection of a new main building for the Free Public Library of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. LEAVY: A bill (H. R. 3411) to amend section 112 of the Judicial Code to provide for the inclusion of Whitman County, Wash., in the northern division of the eastern district of Washington; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE

FRIDAY, JANUARY 22, 1937

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, whose wondrous name is Love, we bow before Thy presence at this morning hour in the spirit of deep humility and tender penitence, for Thou dwellest with him alone who is lowly and contrite of heart.

Increase our zeal as Thou dost light the flame upon the altar of our lives; forgive, we pray, the poverty of our petitions and hearken only to the crying of our need. Shed light upon all darkened places of the earth, upon all problems of our minds; dispel the night of dark and fear, and for the eyes that wait may morning dawn.

So let us ever work with Thee in watchfulness and prayer, hearing betimes the Master's voice—

> I did make them all—
> All things and man, heaven's glories and the dust.
> Who with Me works shall quicken death itself;
> Without Me—dust is dust.

We ask it in His name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar days Tuesday, January 19, and Wednesday, January 20, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

FOREIGN SERVICE RETIREMENT AND DISABILITY SYSTEM

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State showing all receipts and disbursements on account of refunds, allowances, and annuities for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1935, in connection with the Foreign Service retirement and disability system, as required by section 26 (a) of an act for the grading and classification of clerks in the Foreign Service of the United States of America, and providing compensation therefor, approved February 23, 1931.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 22, 1937.

[Enclosure: Report concerning retirement and disability fund, Foreign Service.]

REPORT ON APPROPRIATIONS FOR FOREST ROADS AND TRAILS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the appropriations for forest roads and trails for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1936, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

EMPLOYEES OF THE FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Federal Power Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement showing the names, titles, and compensation of members and employees of the Federal Power Commission as of June 30, 1936, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I present, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations, a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of North Dakota having to do with the meeting of emergency conditions prevailing in the drought area, and also a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of North Dakota having to do with the extension of credit for seeds and help in the planting of crops in the drought area.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolutions will be received and referred, as requested by the Senator from North Dakota.

The concurrent resolutions were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution A

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring)—

Whereas a very serious emergency exists, due to a total crop failure in more than two-thirds of the counties of the State in 1936, which left our farmers entirely without feeds, both grains and hay, to care for their livestock needs, and which made it necessary for them to dispose of all surplus livestock except a few milk cows, brood sows, poultry, and work horses; and

Whereas all the farmers in the early fall of 1936 were lead to believe that emergency feed loans would be made available to them by the Resettlement Administration or by other Federal relief agencies to provide feed for their subsistence and foundation stock; and

Whereas hundreds of farmers did make application to the Resettlement Administration for such emergency feed loans; and

Whereas due to the exhaustion of funds made available to the Resettlement Administration by the Congress of the United States for such emergency relief purposes, further grants for feed loans have not been made, which fact has created conditions among our farmers that are intolerable and unbearable in that large numbers of subsistence and foundation livestock are in dire danger of complete destruction by starvation; and

Whereas the farmers' feed supplies on hundreds of farms are now entirely exhausted; and

Whereas severe cold weather and blizzards which have raged across our prairies the last 2 weeks have seriously aggravated the situation; and

Whereas our farmers, due to a series of crop failures and depressed prices, are entirely without means to care for their livestock needs; and

Whereas due to the general depression and nonpayment of taxes, our State and local governments are unable to cope with the situation; and

Whereas there must be some form of immediate aid given these farmers to assist them to feed the remaining stock they have, and if this is not done they will lose what stock they have left, and they will not be able to carry on when spring comes and remain self-supporting, but instead will be thrown on relief to a greater extent than the immediate assistance that should be given them at this time: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring), That we call to the attention of our Representatives in Congress, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Resettlement Administration, and the Federal Relief Administration the serious emergency now existing in our State, and urge upon the President and the Congress to make immediately available funds to meet this emergency condition either by appropriation by Congress or by the issuance of such Executive order as may be necessary to obtain for our farmers the feed necessary to save their livestock and carry them through the winter months; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be instructed to forward copies of this resolution to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Resettlement Administration, and the Federal Relief Administration, all in Washington, D. C.

House Concurrent Resolution A

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the senate concurring)—

Whereas during the past years the Federal Government has made loans to the farmers of this State to aid them in the purchase of seed with which to plant their crops, and has taken security for such loans in the form of notes secured by crop mortgages: and

Whereas by reason of the continued drought conditions existing in this State it has been absolutely impossible for our farmers to liquidate but a very small portion, if any, of such indebtedness; and

Whereas it will be necessary for our farmers to receive further aid from the Federal Government during the year 1937 to enable them to purchase and obtain the necessary seed to plant their crops: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the senate concurring), That we respectfully urge the President of the United States of America to at once make such Executive order as may be necessary to enable the farmers of the drought areas of the United States to obtain credit for seed or seed in kind for the planting of their crops during the year 1937, and that such seed as may be held by Government agencies be made available for sale and distribution at once; be it further

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be urged to cooperate with the President and Government agencies in every possible way necessary to bring about the distribution of seed to distressed farmers in the drought areas in ample time for use at the commencement of the planting season; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded immediately to the President of the United States and to each Senator and Representative of the State of North Dakota in Congress.

Mr. NYE. I also present another concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of North Dakota, for reference to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, favoring a continued Federal program to combat Bang's disease.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be received and referred, as requested by the Senator from North Dakota.

The concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution B

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring therein)—

Whereas the Federal program designed to combat Bang's disease in cattle in North Dakota has resulted in greatly reducing the prevalence of said disease, and has proven otherwise extremely beneficial to the cattle-breeding and dairy industries in the State: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, earnestly requested to continue the Federal appropriations for the control of Bang's disease; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted by the secretary of state to the President of the United States, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, and to each Member of Congress from North Dakota.

Mr. COPELAND presented petitions, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of East Aurora and Gloversville, in the State of New York, praying for the enactment of neutrality legislation laying mandatory embargoes on the shipment of arms and other munitions of war, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution adopted by the Sodality Union, of Washington, D. C., protesting against the use of books or literature in the public schools of the District of Columbia teaching communism, and favoring the adoption by the Board of Education of the District of only such books as will expose the dangerous and destructive effects of communism on the Republic, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Kansas City, Kans., protesting against the enactment of legislation providing for a 6-hour workday for railroad employees, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Home Missionary Society of the Kansas Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, of Topeka, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation to abolish the compulsory block booking of motion-picture films, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

TAX ON CORPORATION SURPLUSES

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I submit a letter received by me today from Mr. D. Robert Yarnall, of Chestnut Hill, Pa., which I request be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance. The letter is brief. It expresses, in precise language, how a tax on surpluses of a modest corporation may prove to be an obstacle in the path of expansion.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHESTNUT HILL, PA., January 21, 1937.

Senator JAMES J. DAVIS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am writing on behalf of our manufacturing establishment which employs, including office force and salesmen, about 125 people. We have a business which has been growing conservatively for 25 years, manufacturing special valves and steam specialties.

We have never made a large profit but have been fairly consistent in our growth. Our men have received a little more than the prevailing wage in this district, and we have seen to it that they have satisfactory working conditions. We are now horrified by the increasing taxation which is placed upon us by the State and by the Government at Washington.

It so happens that our business is subject to extreme fluctuations between prosperous times and depressed times. If we cannot lay up any reserve in dull times and cannot lay up enough reserve in good times, we are prevented from the development of our business in a sound way.

At the present time we need to add about 20 percent more floor space to our present manufacturing facilities. As our surplus cash is going into taxes we do not have money available for these necessary extensions.

This is a frank statement to you of our situation without any political bias whatsoever. We need sympathetic treatment by you of our tax situation in Washington.

Yours faithfully,

YARNALL-WARING CO.,
D. ROBERT YARNALL.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. NYE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 368) to amend the act of May 25, 1933 (48 Stat. 73), reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 9) thereon.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEE TO AUDIT AND CONTROL THE CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF THE SENATE

Mr. BYRNES. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably without amendment Senate Resolutions 59, 62, 63, and 64, and ask unanimous consent for their immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON TERRITORIES AND INSULAR AFFAIRS

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 59), submitted by Mr. TYDINGS on the 12th instant, was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized during the Seventy-fifth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

AMENDMENT OF NEUTRALITY JOINT RESOLUTIONS

Mr. PITTMAN. I introduce a joint resolution and ask to have it referred to the Foreign Relations Committee. I will state that it relates to the neutrality acts. There has been some suggestion of tentative amendments. I desire that it be submitted to the committee so that consideration of this matter may be commenced.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be received and referred, as requested by the Senator from Nevada.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 51) to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for the prohibition of the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerent countries; the prohibition of the transportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war by vessels of the United States for the use of belligerent states; for the registration and licensing of persons engaged in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing arms, ammunition, or implements of war; and restricting travel by American citizens on belligerent ships during war", approved August 31, 1935, being Public Resolution No. 67, Seventy-fourth Congress (S. J. Res. 173), as amended by joint resolution approved February 29, 1936, entitled "Joint resolution extending and amending the joint resolution (Public Res. No. 67, 74h Cong.), approved August 31, 1935", was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], who is ill, I introduce a bill to amend the Federal Trade Commission Act. It is in identical terms with Senate bill 3744, Seventy-fourth Congress, second session, which was passed by the Senate on the 4th of May 1936. That bill went to the other House, and on it the House committee held hearings, but, on account of the lateness of the session, the House did not act upon the bill. The hearings which were held before the committees of the Senate and the House and the report filed by the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce contain all the information with respect to the measure. I make this statement at the request of the Senator from Montana.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 1077) to amend the act creating the Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion by Mr. SHEPPARD, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 917) for the relief of officers and soldiers of the Volunteer service of the United States mustered into service for the War with Spain and who were held in service in the Philippine Islands after the ratification of the treaty of peace, April 11, 1899, and it was referred to the Committee on Claims.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. BULOW submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 66), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Civil Service, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized during the Seventy-fifth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be held in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

STUDY OF CORRUPT PRACTICES ACTS (S. DOC. NO. 11)

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, for as many as 10 years I have been conversant with the effort being made by Prof. Harry Best, of the University of Kentucky, in connection with a study of the corrupt practices acts of the various States of the Union. His study has been kept up to date from year to year and as laws have been changed his compilation has been changed. I think the study most deserving of being printed as a public document, and I ask consent that it may be so printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

AUTHORITY TO SIGN AN ENROLLED BILL

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask recognition for the consideration of a privileged order. I ask entry of the order which I send to the desk and invite the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The order will be read.

The legislative clerk read the order, as follows:

Ordered, That the President of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to sign, during the recess or adjournment of the Senate following today, the enrolled bill (S. 416) to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the order is entered.

THE LAWYER AND DEMOCRACY—ARTICLE BY CHARLTON OGBURN

[Mr. O'MAHONEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by Mr. Charlton Ogburn published in the American Law Review in 1915, entitled "The Lawyer and Democracy", which appears in the Appendix.]

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. The calendar under rule VIII is in order, and the first bill on the calendar will be stated.

EXCHANGE OF USED PARTS OF EQUIPMENT

The bill (S. 462) to permit the exchange of used parts of certain types of equipment for new or reconditioned parts of the same equipment was announced as first in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was read, considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That used parts of mechanical refrigerators, hermetically sealed refrigerating units, temperature control devices, and watchmen's clocks may be exchanged in whole or in part payment for new or reconditioned parts to be used for the same purpose as those proposed to be exchanged.

CHARLES T. MILLER HOSPITAL, INC., AND OTHERS

The bill (S. 767) for the relief of the Charles T. Miller Hospital, Inc., at St. Paul, Minn.; Dr. Edgar T. Herrmann; Ruth Kehoe, nurse; and Catherine Foley, nurse, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the naval hospital fund, to the Charles T. Miller Hospital, Inc., at St. Paul, Minn., the sum of $135.45; to Dr. Edgar T. Herrmann the sum of $117; to Ruth Kehoe, nurse, the sum of $9; and to Catherine Foley, nurse, the sum of $4; in all, $265.45, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for services and professional treatment rendered Leonard James Graves, storekeeper, second-class, (F–1) United States Naval Reserve, while ill with diabetic acidosis during the period from August 17, 1935, to September 7, 1935: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

REIMBURSEMENT OF CERTAIN ENLISTED MEN OF THE NAVY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 766) to provide for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men and former enlisted men of the Navy for the value of personal effects destroyed in a fire at the radio direction-finder station, North Truro, Mass., on December 27, 1934, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $527.89, or such portion as may be necessary, to pay claims of enlisted men and former enlisted men of the United States Navy for the value of personal effects destroyed as the result of a fire at the radio direction-finder station, North Truro, Mass., on December 27, 1934: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall determine the amount to be paid hereunder to each claimant: And provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claims. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claims, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] make a very brief explanation of Senate bill 766, providing for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men of the Navy? Does the bill contemplate extending the rule beyond that which heretofore has prevailed in the Navy?

Mr. WALSH. It does not. Both of the bills, the one just passed and the one now before us, were sent to the Senate by the Secretary of the Navy and were introduced at the request of the Navy.

Under the general law if an enlisted man or an officer suffers damage by reason of a fire through a "marine disaster", the Navy Department itself can award and pay damages. There is no general law that permits the awarding of damages for loss of the clothing or effects of a naval officer or enlisted man of the Navy if the loss happens in a navy yard or in some other place than a "marine disaster." Several bills of this nature have passed previous Congresses.

The purpose of the bill is to provide an appropriation of $527.89 for the payment to five enlisted men and former enlisted men of the Navy for the loss of clothing and other effects resulting from a fire at the radio direction-finder station, North Truro, Mass., on December 27, 1934.

The facts and circumstances of this case are, substantially, as follows: At about 5:20 p. m., on December 27, 1934, a fire was discovered in the chimney casing of the crew's barracks at the radio direction-finder station, North Truro, Mass. The main chimney of the barracks, where the fire started, was of single brick construction with no insulation other than a 4-inch air space between the chimney and the pine chimney casing. The chimney was not lined. After the fire had burned the section of the roof near the top of the chimney, the upper part of the chimney collapsed. The fire completely destroyed the barracks and its contents, the garage, pump-house, and the firehouse. One side and the roof of the powerhouse were badly scorched. The fire was fought by the station personnel under the direction of the chief radioman in charge of the station and by the combined fire departments from North Truro, Provincetown, and Wellfleet, Mass. The station chemical fire apparatus functioned properly, but the personnel fighting the fire were greatly handicapped by the lack of sufficient water supply. No personal effects, except what each man was wearing, were saved by the crew.

The board of investigation that inquired into the circumstances of the fire expressed the opinion that it resulted from a defective chimney; that no responsibility on the part of claimants exists, therefore, the defect being due to the long use of the chimney and the fact that it was so enclosed as to be impracticable to examine its condition during routine inspection. The personnel of the station, aided by outside assistance, made every possible effort to subdue the fire and save the property of the Government. The board commended them for restricting the damage to the property destroyed.

Claims were submitted by five enlisted men for losses occurring in the fire. These claims were submitted to the Navy Department Claims Board, which found the total value of the articles destroyed to be $527.89, which amount is considered to be reasonable. The committee is of the opinion that as the losses of claimants' effects occurred without fault or negligence on their part and consisted only of articles of wearing apparel and personal effects, they should be reimbursed for the losses sustained.

The claims were submitted to the Navy Department for settlement under the act of October 6, 1917 (sec. 981, title 34, U. S. C.), but could not be adjusted thereunder on account of the fact that the fire was not a "marine disaster." There is no other existing authority of law for the adjustment of these claims.

The additional cost to the Government should the bill be enacted will not exceed $527.89.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill be engrossed for a third reading?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] objected to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. No; I stated I had no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has been passed. Does the Senator desire a reconsideration?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to interpose an objection. The Committee on Claims is preparing rules in reference to bills of this kind which they desire to submit to the Senate. The feeling in the Committee on Claims is that the Government should not be an insurer in cases of this kind, but that if a loss is due to some negligence on the part of the Government then the enlisted men should be entitled to reimbursement. Otherwise, they should not be entitled to it. I ask for a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed were reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will remain on the calendar.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, ATCHISON, KANS.

The bill (S. 62) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a free highway bridge across the Missouri River at or near Atchison, Kans., was announced as next in order.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I ask that the bill may be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce. I understand several persons interested are desirous of appearing before the committee and making statements in reference to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That may be done if there is no objection. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, this happens to be my bill. I am willing for the committee to hear the parties referred to by the Senator from Ohio, but I object to the bill being taken from the calendar and recommitted back to the committee.

Nearly 3 years ago a measure was passed granting permission to construct the bridge. Those who desire now to have a hearing have continually held up the matter by some temporary restraining order in one court or another for a full period of 3 years. Early next month the time will expire within which to begin the construction of the bridge. Therefore, action should be had on the bill at a very early date.

I should like to have the bill remain on the calendar. If the Senator from Ohio has constituents who would like to appear before the subcommittee, that is agreeable, provided they will do so at a reasonably early date.

Mr. BULKLEY. I only desire to make sure that they shall have a hearing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from Kansas [Mr. McGILL] to object to recommittal of the bill to the Committee on Commerce. Apparently there is no objection to the bill going over. It will be passed over and remain on the calendar.

THE FOREIGN DEBTS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a brief time, which I trust will not exceed 5 minutes.

Mr. President, I bring to the attention of the Senate a press report laid on my desk this moment. This public information, as communicated to us by the press, indicates that our Nation's debtors—the foreign nations now indebted to the United States in vast billions—are indicating a desire to take the subject up anew with this Government. It is here reported that they have found it agreeable to send commissioners or envoys to take up the question with the American administration in power in such manner as may be expressed by us to our people.

I do not know, sir, that those who are assumed to be envoys are being commissioned by the governments which are indebted to the United States, or whether they have assumed to come here as voluntary emissaries of peace and financial honor. I am exceedingly interested to ascertain by what authority they come, and I am more interested as to what they bring.

I am quite aware that we frequently quote the ancient maxim of the Greeks as to those who were opposed to them, to beware of those bearing gifts. I am not conscious that those who are on their way are bringing gifts which were indicated in those days as presents. I am conscious of the fact that we are at a time when some action must be taken as to these debts.

I observe from the general press which gives this information that there is in our midst already a distinguished financier and emissary, Sir George Paish. This eminent gentleman has frequently done us the honor to be present, and has submitted his wisdom in different forms and suggestions for our guidance. In a matter of this kind we should not be without due appreciation, since the announcement is now made, among others, that he comes to instruct us, as well as England, in the matter of what is known as the Carnegie peace movement, of its importance for America's future welfare. Incidentally with this, sir, it is reported that the head of the Board of Trade of London and that of the English Government, the eminent financier, Sir Runciman, is at New York. He, in an interview on this subject, announced a very natural desire, hoping that the "whole subject may now be settled."

In the meanwhile we behold that France, through her ruling officer under the theory of her government, acting through Ambassador-elect Bonnét, who is shortly to be the representative of France here in the United States, and an officer of the institution which we speak of as the Bank of France, has stated that, while there is no cash to be paid to the United States, it is to be trusted that there will be found a "method", and that there has been, says the quotation, some consideration mutually between some of the debtors. I take it, sir, that means England and France, as it is only as to those two that we have seen that there has been any conference between the eminent representatives of these very reputable nations. I observe, sir, that one of these announced representatives says "that the time has come when this whole dispute should now be settled." In that we wholly concur.

Mr. President, it is a noted fact that these great nations, standing upon the dignity of the pressure from their Governments, have found it agreeable, in the response to the different demands from this Government to decline to pay their debts or to state any time when any part of the debts will be paid, and even refuse to recognize the interest due as proof earnest of the honesty of the debt. It may be, sir, that they find it agreeable to execute some policy of their own not heretofore expressed, unknown to us so far as declaration is concerned, but very clearly one in process of some understanding; for the work of confusing the status seems to be so contemporaneous and, at the same time, sir, so synonymous with the same object, that one can but conclude that there has been at least the direction in detail of each to guide and protect the conduct of the other.

Mr. President, it may be, and for the purposes of this suggestion we will consider, that there is not cash to be paid, and that these eminent sources are here, as intimated, to find some "method." Among other methods is, perchance, that of another conference by this Government and the other governments interested as debtors to bring about a reduction of the debt, perchance wiping it out by some "method" of pretense of friendship and brotherhood; or, at any rate, sir, to "dispose of the subject", as one of the eminent representatives expresses himself, by cancelation of the obligation.

Mr. President, I make bold at this moment, with the indulgence of the Senate, to make a respectful suggestion to these eminent envoys and emissaries for their consideration, because of the subject matter rising to the dignity of one that now may be considered to be in need of termination.

Since it be true, sir, that these nations have no cash with which to pay us, as they state, but since it is also evidently true, sir, that they are able to build for themselves a very large increase in the armaments of war, I take the liberty of calling to their attention the fact that since the world at large seems to be threatening all mankind with some form of hostility, and this our United States of America is compelled by these conditions of warning to take preparation for its defense, and since our debtor England is enabled to build great ships at vast expense for its uses and to discharge them from her yards and send them to the seas, and as necessities now have put upon the United States the need for a larger navy and for the addition of ships, it is suggested that England contribute in part payment of the debt that she owes us some of the ships that are in excess of her immediate needs, or that she build in her yards a form of ships commensurate with the needs of this our United States of America, those ships to be sent to the United States to take the place of those which otherwise we should be compelled to build and pay for out of the Treasury of our Nation.

In this respect, this particular feature of what one of the eminent emissaries calls "mutual trade" could readily be entered upon with very serious consideration, and I suggest it as one of very natural adoption in the form of "payment of debts."

And now, sir, as to France: As it is known by record that France has been enabled now to hold first place with her submarines, and as such submarines seem to be necessary if war is to be precipitated upon this Nation by any other, then, particularly for our defense, it is suggested that a contribution of those particular craft now in excess of her immediate needs be made by France to supply some of the needs of the United States' service of defense, and that those be credited upon her debt to the amount that the United States may adopt.

But, sir, let us be frank in alluding to Italy. Italy, we will recall, did not receive territory at the Peace Conference. She did not receive vast areas of land such as were given the other debtors of whom we have made mention, which, in the long range of their geography, include more population, taken all together, than the whole population of the United States of America, and, sir, in area, if measured by the estimates given by those who received them, exceeding the land that is occupied upon the Continent of America. Since Italy has received nothing of these in the form of indemnity, we suggest that Italy be considered in the light of this lesser situation; and since she now possesses the aerial machine or flying machine so necessary to war in such quantity and evidently of such force and modern power that she was able to affright great England with her threat of aerial armament surrounding the Red Sea and the Suez Canal at the time when there was contemplation of war between Italy and England over Ethiopia, we now suggest that Italy make contribution to the United States of some of the surplus of these machines which she has been so able to construct with such magnitude of power and what appears to be great efficacy in their usefulness. And, sir, I submit that as to these three debtors this example be at once entered upon to consider that which our country has uses for, as something in the form of contributions toward this debt.

I am, sir, anxious that these eminent debtors understand that this Government is not sitting idly by, and merely because in its good manners and generosity it has declined continuously to prod its debtors that its silence does not mean that it is surrendering its right or that it is to yield the honest debt which is owed to it. I have often burdened this honorable body, I fear, in taking up subjects such as we now have before us; but I take the liberty to remark, sir, that we cannot overlook the fact that our great debtors have been enabled to add to their forces for the purposes of conflict a vast army of material which has cost vast billions of money. In the meantime, sir, no interest is paid upon this debt, which was incurred by them for their salvation and the money paid by us for what they then said was their necessary preservation. As they cried for salvation at the time, and we yielded at the expense to ourselves of great inconvenience to our people and loss to our Treasury, when a method is suggested by which they could now make a contribution of payment it is highly commendable that at least the gesture be given and that honorable faith be shown between these who are friendly nations.

These nations have done us the compliment of sending abroad these envoys, who, we hope, will be entertained in our midst while they administer to us such direction and counsel as is necessary to our welfare. Of course, no one will think I am indulging in any satire in these observations. Of course, it is seen how entirely serious I am. This is very apparent in the compliment I am having in this attentive, full-seated Senate. I therefore take the liberty in this honorable body of suggesting that these nations should consider, sir, the seriousness of this situation and give some immediate evidence of action, so that this Nation may know what is to be the course of these debtors. Do they intend to continue this course of deception, this plausibility of gesture, this expression of general friendship, while continuing an indebtedness and constantly cheating us of our rights? If they intend to do that, let them announce it, that we may know where we are, and where we are to be, and what shall be the manner of our dealing hereafter with such debtors. This is the hour when we must recall to these honorable nations the warning contained in the words of the twenty-second chapter of the Revelations—that even a nation may reach a point where it will be known before the world as one "that loveth and maketh lies." I trust, sir, that we shall not be called upon to deal with these nations upon such a basis.

I take the liberty to make suggestions such as I have made that these eminent envoys, or whatever representatives they are, shall consider such as some of the methods by which payment may be made in a manner of which we have need, but which avoids the paying of cash, and at least gives some illustration and demonstration of an honest effort to pay these debts. They are now due again in this January of the new year—this 1937. May there come a result to be saluted with "a Happy New Year."

I thank the Senate for its indulgence.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. The calendar has been disposed of. If there be no further legislative business, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States, submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, reported favorably the nomination of Frank E. DeKay, of Idaho, to be register of the land office at Blackfoot, Idaho, which was ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

THE POSTMASTER GENERAL

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 22, 1937.

To the Senate of the United States:

I nominate James A. Farley, of New York, to be Postmaster General. (Reappointment.)

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, there have been sent to the Senate today a number of Executive nominations, among them the nomination of Mr. James A. Farley to be Postmaster General, which has just been laid before the Senate. Under the custom which has prevailed in the Senate, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the nomination.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, this is an unusual request, but probably the situation is unusual. I do not wish to have consent upon my part on this occasion construed as a precedent in the future. With this remark, I have no objection to the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Farley.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

The nomination was confirmed.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Charles C. Wyche to be United States district judge, western district of South Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Claude N. Sapp to be United States district attorney for the eastern district of South Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Oscar Henry Doyle to be United States attorney for the western district of South Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

NAVY DEPARTMENT

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Charles Edison, of New Jersey, to be Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Admiral William D. Leahy to be Chief of Naval Operations in the Department of the Navy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

IN THE NAVY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations for promotions in the Navy.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, all the remaining naval nominations are promotions made in the regular order, which have been approved by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I ask that they be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the other nominations in the Navy are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Brig. Gen. Thomas Holcomb to be major general commandant of the Marine Corps.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Col. James J. Mead to be brigadier general in the Marine Corps.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations for promotions in the Marine Corps.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask that all the other nominations in the Marine Corps, which have been made through a selection board, and which have been approved by the Committee on Naval Affairs, be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the other nominations in the Marine Corps are confirmed en bloc. That completes the calendar.

ADJOURNMENT TO TUESDAY

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, there is no business on the calendar. I therefore move an adjournment of the Senate until Tuesday next at 12 o'clock. I hope that in the meantime the committees may have opportunity to consider proposed legislation.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Tuesday, January 26, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JANUARY 22, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, author of life and purity, help us to lay hold of things eternal. We come to Thy feet in prayer that we may receive grace that makes for righteousness in the soul. We give Thee our hearty thanks for all our manifold blessings—so rich, so free, and so abundant. Define for us the pathway of duty and impart unto us courage to walk therein. O Lord God Most High, raging storms of destruction and ruin are sweeping over large areas of land. Arise in Thy might and stay the tragic tides of disaster, devastation, and death. Heavenly Father, turn Thou to the homeless, according to Thy loving kindness, and allow not the water floods to overflow them, neither let the deep swallow them up. Make haste to deliver them; come in all Thy fullness and have compassion upon Thine own. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 4. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the original Norfolk, Va., land grant and the two hundredth anniversary of the establishment of the city of Norfolk, Va., as a borough.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on January 18, 1937, the President approved and signed a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 106. Joint resolution to exempt from the tax on admissions amounts paid for admission tickets sold by authority of the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect in January 1937.

SESSIONS OF COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Ways and Means may have permission to sit during the sessions of the House during this session of Congress at such times as may be deemed necessary by the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

ROBERTA SLEE

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the House passed House Resolution 49. The first name of the person to be benefited was incorrectly handed to me.

I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings by which House Resolution 49 was passed be vacated and that the resolution be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I now offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 81

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Roberta Slee, widow of Richard B. Slee, late an employee of the House, an amount equal to 6 months' compensation, and an additional amount not to exceed $250 to defray funeral expenses of the said Richard B. Slee.

The resolution was agreed to.

NEUTRALITY LEGISLATION

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, today the problem of keeping the United States out of war is the concern of every American citizen. Few times in history has the question so occupied the minds of our citizens and the attention of our public press. This Congress is charged with the responsibility of formulating a neutrality program to replace the existing temporary legislation which expires on May 1. Immediate action is necessary. We must have adequate discussion for a full understanding of this problem and its relation to America.

If we are to prevent the United States from being forced into another foreign war, we must shut off the road which led us into the last one.

That is why we must revise our neutrality policy.

On January 5 I introduced H. R. 1491, which bill, if enacted into law, to my mind, will give the American people the neutrality they want.

No neutrality law, however it is framed, can prevent our taking part in a war if the issues are such that the people of this country wish to give their lives in support of one side or the other. A mandatory law, such as I propose, would, however, protect the rank and file of American citizens against being forced into war as a consequence of policies to protect financial and other interests.

It is possible, of course, that the United States would have entered the last war—as some claim that it did enter—for purely idealistic reasons. But it is also true that this Government, at the risk of war, followed policies for the protection of trade and finance that Congress had, in important instances, no opportunity to discuss, and the people no opportunity to reject or accept. These policies made inevitable our ultimate involvement in the war.

What were these policies? In addition to permitting loans and credits—

Under a long-standing neutrality policy, which, after the outbreak of the war, could not be altered, our Government permitted the sale of munitions theoretically to either side—actually only to that side which controlled the seas—in other words, the Allies.

Our Government permitted American ships to carry munitions and armed our merchant vessels.

Our Government permitted American citizens to travel on ships—ours and belligerents'—armed or carrying munitions.

These policies under modern conditions of warfare meant loss of American shipping and American lives. The old claim to neutral trade rights was based on the assumption that contraband goods were limited to supplies intended for the use of armies; that ships could be searched at sea to determine whether they carried contraband; and that passengers could be removed before the sinking of a ship. The vital part played by civilian populations in modern war extends the list of contraband goods to practically all supplies to belligerents, while the use of submarines and airplanes makes search of ships and removal of passengers impossible. Even British and American naval officers are agreed that belligerents are entitled "to prevent any neutral commerce that will aid the enemy in prosecuting the war."

Our policy in regard to loans and credits to belligerents was determined without congressional or public discussion by the President and Cabinet.

The steps by which administration policies, unknown to the people or not understood by them, brought about a situation in which our financial stake in allied victory was of decisive importance were revealed by the Nye committee and are set forth by Charles Beard in The Devil Theory of War.

They were as follows:

The belligerent governments found themselves unable to pay for purchases in this country with gold or with imports. The French Government sought a loan through the House of Morgan, which approached Secretary Bryan for his opinion. Bryan expressed to President Wilson the opinion that "money is the worst of all contrabands", and that if loans were made "powerful financial interests" would make it difficult to maintain neutrality. In agreement with the President, Secretary Bryan notified the Morgan interests that "loans made by American bankers to any foreign nation which is at war are inconsistent with the true spirit of neutrality."

Mr. Lansing, counselor of the State Department at this time, advised Secretary Bryan that there was no legal objection to financing such a loan. The banking interests, blocked in making loans, then sought for a way to supply credits. This time they approached Mr. Lansing, over Secretary Bryan's head, saying that they wished to stimulate the unprecedented volume of business, and, continuing, they said, "If we allow these purchases to go elsewhere, we will have neglected our foreign trade at the time of our greatest need and greatest opportunity. The business I have attempted to describe to you we deem necessary to the general good." Here was the cry for profits in preference to peace.

Mr. Lansing appealed to President Wilson. Mr. Wilson authorized Mr. Lansing, upon the express understanding that he was not speaking with the authority of the President, to give to such persons as were "entitled to hear them" the "impression" that they were free to go ahead and extend credits. In turn Mr. Lansing gave this impression to the Morgan Co.

Within a few months the Allies had stretched their short-term credits to the limit and the British pound was slipping. This meant less business for the clients of American banks. Benjamin Strong, of the New York Federal Reserve Bank, wrote Colonel House on August 14, 1915, that because of the decline in the pound there was "danger of a decrease in our export business."

The bankers again began pressing for a loan to the Allies to finance purchases in this country through Mr. Lansing, who had by that time become Secretary of State.

Mr. McADOO, as Secretary of the Treasury, wrote the President a letter on August 21, 1915, which said:

Our prosperity is dependent upon our continued and enlarged foreign trade. We must do everything we can to assist our customers to buy. To maintain our prosperity we must finance it, otherwise we must stop and that would be disastrous.

Again we heard the cry of profits in preference to peace.

On August 25, Secretary Lansing wrote the President, saying:

> The large debts which result from purchases by belligerent governments require some method of funding these debts in this country. * * * We are face to face with what appears to be a critical economic situation, which can only be relieved apparently by the investment of American capital in foreign loans to be used in liquidating the enormous balance of trade in favor of the United States. Can we afford to let a declaration as to our conception of "the true spirit of neutrality" made in the first days of the war stand in the way of our national interests, which seem to be seriously threatened?

Now, it is no longer a mere cry for profits in preference to peace. It is a demand for them.

On August 26, the President wrote Secretary Lansing that he could convey "orally" to the bankers the opinion that the Government would take no action either for or against their making a loan to the belligerents.

Loan after loan was floated to obtain American money to pay for American goods. American financial interests now had millions at stake in the victory of the Allies. With the collapse of the Russian Government, that victory was threatened. Ambassador Page, on March 5, 1917, cabled President Wilson, describing the weak financial condition of England, and saying:

> There will be almost a cessation of trans-Atlantic trade. This will, of course, cause a panic in the United States. Perhaps our going to war is the only way in which our present prominent trade position can be maintained and a panic averted.

Here we have the inevitable result of the demand for profits in preference to peace.

The business that we did with the Allies, according to the Morgan company, prior to April 1, 1917, amounted to $7,000,000,000. The World War has cost us, up to June 30, 1935, $41,947,000,000, and the cost is still going up.

By 1935, disclosures by the Nye committee and studies by historians as to the real situation in this country at the time of our entrance into the World War, led to a demand in Congress for a revision of our neutrality policy. The demand was intensified by the threatening situation then existing in Europe. The question was: What neutrality policy would give protection against a repetition of our entanglement in the World War?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Is it not a fact that the Democratic platform provides, and is it not a fact that President Roosevelt in a speech delivered about a year ago committed the Democratic Party to the principle of peace above profits?

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. It is; and the purpose of my message to the Congress this morning is to make certain that that pronouncement by our President and the Democratic platform shall be kept.

In general, the President and State Department desired a discretionary neutrality law, leaving it to the President to decide whether embargoes should be applied; and if applied, whether they should be against one or both sides in a conflict. This would have made it possible to avoid the dangers encountered during the World War, but would not have provided certainty that those dangers would be avoided.

Congressional leaders demanded mandatory legislation requiring embargoes on arms, ammunitions, and implements of war against all belligerents. The law adopted merely embodied the mandatory principle. So far as real neutrality is concerned, so far as guarding us against the dangers of our World War experience is concerned, it was far from complete. All it did was to prohibit the sale of any form of munitions to belligerents. It prohibited American vessels from carrying weapons of war destined for belligerents. It gave the President power to prohibit travel by American citizens on vessels of belligerents.

The bill, for good reason, was regarded as unsatisfactory. Therefore it was provided with an expiration date on February 29, 1936.

By the time it became necessary to renew the law public opinion had vigorously expressed itself. A bill embodying the mandatory principle and extending the provisions of the neutrality law was submitted in Congress. It met opposition from those who wish embargoes to apply to aggressor States only and from those who wish to return to our old policy of "freedom of the seas." A legislative combat ensued. The result was another compromise and further temporary legislation which expires May 1 of this year.

The provisions of the first law were, however, extended in important respects. Not only munitions but loans and credits to belligerents were prohibited. The new law continued the prohibition against American vessels carrying munitions to belligerents and strengthened the provision in regard to travel by American citizens on vessels carrying munitions to belligerents. Also it strengthened the provision in regard to travel by American citizens on vessels of belligerents by calling upon the President to prohibit such travel whenever he should find it endangered the maintenance of peace. But it failed to provide any control for war materials other than munitions and did not prohibit American vessels from entering war zones. It also failed to make its provisions apply to countries engaged in civil war.

As I said, this present law expires on May 1, 1937. Now we must write a new law. If the new law is to offer protection against recognized dangers of entanglement in foreign wars it must embargo munitions and loans and credits to all belligerents; it must give the President power to embargo other war materials, with the provision that all embargoes shall be enforced against both sides; it must provide that American citizens retain no interest in shipments of goods after they leave our ports; it must prohibit American citizens from traveling on the vessels of belligerents; it must provide that American vessels or citizens entering war zones will not have the protection of this Government.

The provisions of the law must apply to all fighting forces whether engaged in international or civil war.

The application of the neutrality law to civil strife, after the necessary proclamation by the President, would be in line with the policy of nonintervention developed in this hemisphere. Further, in the present world situation civil war is potentially world war and cannot be treated otherwise.

The argument that the shipment of airplanes to Spain proved the necessity for discretionary neutrality legislation completely ignored the actual facts of the situation. Had the present law applied to civil as well as international war, the embargo against the sale of munitions would have prevented the shipment to Spain. It was this omission in the law that created the difficulty.

In addition to this weakness, the present law does not provide any control over war supplies other than munitions. Since the essential requirements of belligerents cover many other articles than munitions, it is necessary that the possibility of embargoing these materials exist. It is equally necessary that sales of any supplies to belligerents shall be so controlled that American citizens do not acquire a financial stake in the victory of either side.

In the question of mandatory versus discretionary legislation, there are two important questions involved.

(1) Which type of legislation will best protect this country against the events and policies which meant its entanglement in the World War?

(2) Which type of legislation is in closest accord with the constitutional grant of the war-making power of Congress?

If the President is given discretion to apply embargoes to one side only in any conflict, the World War situation will be duplicated, when, through control of the seas, the Allies alone were able to obtain supplies from this country. If application of embargoes to one side is made under the name of sanctions or collective security, the situation is, practically, the same, since it is clear that belligerents against whom sanctions are applied will regard them as tantamount to war.

Discretionary neutrality would, therefore, amount to taking the war-making power away from Congress and giving it to the Executive.

Those who favor discretionary power for the President have attempted to interpret the Supreme Court's decision in regard to the Chaco embargo law, in which the wide discretionary powers of the President in foreign affairs were emphasized, as support for giving him greater discretion in a new neutrality law. This argument fails entirely to distinguish between the conduct of foreign affairs and the war-making power.

The application of embargoes to war supplies other than munitions calls for a certain discretion on the part of the President, since the importance of supplies will vary according to the countries involved. But while there should be discretion as to which other supplies are to be embargoed, it should be mandatory that whatever embargoes are enforced shall be enforced against all belligerents.

There is no question that any trade with belligerents, if we are to avoid the danger of war, must be carried on at the risk of the foreign purchasers, and with American shippers retaining no right or interest in articles exported.

The argument of opponents of strict neutrality legislation, that the people of this country would not tolerate the economic loss involved in the necessary curtailment of war trade, is contradicted by these facts: 90 percent of American business concerns, according to our President, accepted the mere advice, not supported by law, of the State Department, that in patriotic support of the peace interests of this country, munitions should not be shipped to Spain.

Moreover, at the annual convention of the National Grange, the farming interests of the country adopted a resolution calling for "stronger neutrality legislation to include embargoes on basic war materials", while the master of the Grange, Louis J. Taber, said in his opening address:

> We must make illegal for export all munitions and raw materials that are essential to war. This will mean that agriculture must make a sacrifice, because cotton, wheat, and fats are as essential to war as are gunpowder, steel, and munitions.

Opponents of mandatory neutrality also claim that such a policy means the refusal of the United States to accept its responsibility for world peace. On the contrary, only mandatory legislation will definitely throw the influence of this country against war. By serving notice on the world that the United States can no longer be used as a base of supplies for war, we will exert pressure on all governments to find some adjustment for conflicts short of war.

From the point of view of the League, powers which might desire to apply sanctions, if it is a question of a large number of powers acting against one, their great need is to be assured that the United States will not aid or abet the aggressor. Only mandatory legislation can give them that assurance.

If the application of sanctions results, as all indications are that it would result, in a division of the world into two more or less equal hostile camps, there can be no question but that the result would be just such another conflict as the World War.

It would be senseless to say that war can be prevented by the threat that the United States will apply embargoes against aggressors only. This would be assuming, contrary to history, that a government, reduced to a desperate situation, would avoid war even at the risk of its own overthrow. It would be assuming, contrary to history, that the people of a nation would prefer permanent economic insecurity to war. If the status quo is such that it breeds war, it is up to the nations which are profiting from the status quo to initiate changes which will breed peace instead.

The World War showed clearly the difficulty of adopting a policy toward belligerents after the outbreak of a conflict. Nor should an Executive be placed, or desire to be placed, in a position where various forces will attempt to exert pressure to determine national policy in their own interest. Whatever is done after war breaks out is bound to be regarded as unfair by one side or the other.

Temporary legislation, which may expire at a critical moment, is undesirable for the same reasons, and the new law should be enacted without any expiration date.

Mr. Speaker, the need for a clear-cut policy is immediate. I have submitted a bill, H. R. 1491, "to preserve the neutrality of the United States in armed conflicts occurring outside its territorial limits to which it is not a party and to define the obligations of citizens and nationals of the United States in respect to such conflicts."

This bill is now in the hands of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House. I urge each and every Representative here to read carefully this measure, for I feel that this bill contains the essential elements so necessary in our foreign policy if we are desirous of making real neutrality legislation during this session. The way to peace for America lies in true neutrality. [Applause.]

CONTINUATION OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 79.

House Resolution 79

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 2301, a bill to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2½ hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. Speaker, this is a rule for the consideration of H. R. 2301, a bill to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and four other agencies of the Government.

Mr. Speaker, in the hearing before the Rules Committee yesterday we called the attention of the four members of the Committee on Banking and Currency to the fact that there was an identical Senate bill which had passed the Senate and was on the Speaker's desk. We asked precisely whether or not the request was to report the House bill or the Senate bill, explaining that it would be more expeditious to report the Senate bill. We were informed by the representatives of the committee that they wanted the House bill reported. We could not understand why, but we were told it was the House bill they asked to have reported, and therefore we reported the House bill.

Of course, the expeditious way to advance the legislation would be to report the Senate bill. I have now been informed by the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, who was not present at the meeting yesterday, that some error was made, and that the committee desires to offer the Senate bill.

I therefore ask unanimous consent that House Resolution 79 be amended by inserting, in line 4, "S. 415" in lieu of "H. R. 2301."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York says there is no difference between the Senate bill and the House bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. We were so informed by the members of the committee yesterday. We were informed that they were identical bills. I have not made the comparison.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Having that information yesterday and the committee not reporting out the Senate bill, why should the gentleman now ask the House to make the Senate bill in order?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Because I have just been requested by the committee to do so.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman think that is sufficient need for this exceptional procedure?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, unless I can get a better explanation than has already been given, I will be obliged to object for the moment.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I have been trying to explain all I know about it. I desired to report the Senate bill yesterday, but the committee was insistent on reporting the House bill.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. REILLY. I was called to appear before the committee yesterday as the ranking member who was not under the weather at that time. I knew nothing about what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] desired. I told the chairman I knew nothing about it. Then one of the clerks in the office said that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] requested the House bill. The gentleman from Alabama said that was a mistake, that he never requested the House bill. So the committee at no time yesterday expressed a desire to have the House bill. Our statement was that we did not know what the gentleman from Alabama wanted in the way of reporting the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be too technical about this matter, but it indicates how in trying to hurry legislation we do not take time enough to know where we are going. While I am not going to object in this instance, I serve notice now that hereafter, when a committee comes before the House, it should know exactly what it wants to do.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I was not able to attend the meeting of the Rules Committee yesterday. I have been confined to my bed all the week until yesterday. I phoned the clerk of the Committee on Banking and Currency and told him to pass the word that the rule should provide for consideration of the Senate bill, because that bill had already passed the Senate and was identical with the House bill. I am sorry about this error. It grew out of the situation which I have mentioned.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I may make the observation that so far as I can see the majority Members have been waiting to see what the White House wanted before they acted.

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, would consideration of the Senate bill instead of the House bill in any way restrict the Members of the House in making amendments further than they are restricted under the rule?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. No; not at all. The bills are identical, and this is an open rule which permits of amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, of late there has been criticism because Congress has lost a good deal of its old legislative standing. There has been criticism because we have abdicated a great deal of the power originally invested in the House. There has been criticism because we have failed to give the consideration to legislation which is essential for good government. This bill and the time given for debate justifies, in large measure, much of this criticism.

We have a bill today to continue five distinct agencies of the Government. This positively is not in the interest of good government. If any one of these agencies has proved its merit during its tenure of office, that agency ought to come here alone and on its own feet and be granted a continuance. But the popularity of a good agency should not be made the vehicle for favorable consideration to a less worthy agency.

The minority requested in the consideration of this measure at least 3 hours of debate, but the best we could get was two hours and a half. Think of that—two hours and a half in which to consider the continuance of five important agencies of the Government. This means 15 minutes for each agency. There are 435 Members of Congress, yet we are given only 150 minutes to consider this most important legislation. We are particularly justified in our criticism of this lack of time when we realize that although Congress has been in session 14 days, only two measures have been considered. We have had plenty of time to talk about anything that might come to the imagination of the individual legislator, but when it comes to the consideration of important legislation we are refused adequate time thoroughly to discuss the details of the measure. An effort has also been made to stampede us into hasty action; demanding that this bill be passed immediately on the ground that it is necessary because the agency will expire on February 1. Everyone knows, however, that the law provides the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may continue 1 year to liquidate without any further legislation; and I believe that at the present time no new loans are being made, or at least very few loans are being made. This indicates there is no real need of haste, yet we are stampeded into passing the legislation before the Members can thoroughly digest it.

There has been a great deal of criticism because Congress has not drafted its own legislation. I rejoiced when I first looked at this bill, because I saw at the top of H. R. 2301 this sentence:

Mr. STEAGALL introduced the following bill, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

I thought that was fine, for I knew Mr. STEAGALL to be a splendid legislator and an expert on banking and currency; I knew if he drafted the legislation it would appeal to the House. Then I happened to read a record of the hearings before the committee and came to a point where the chairman interrupted the witness, Mr. Alley, with the statement:

Let me ask you right there—I have not read this bill.

That is the record; the chairman of the committee had not read the bill. I must conclude, consequently, that the old order of the last 3 years is being continued; someone down in these bureaus writes out the legislation and brings it up to Congress asking us to O. K. it and pass it without changing the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t." When I looked further at the bill I was gratified to know it was not the creation of the gentleman from Alabama. I do not believe if he drafted the measure he would have given the President of the United States the additional power granted in this bill. The bill provides if the President of the United States feels the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is making loans that he personally does not agree with he can, by an order, demand that they cease making these loans. Now, I do not believe he should have this coercive power over an agency supposed to be nonpartisan and devoted to the rehabilitation of the industrial life of the Nation.

Members of Congress who have been fighting for loans to small industry, Members of Congress who have advocated loans for the purpose of continuing poor schools, Members from the West who believe in irrigation and reclamation projects may well consider whether or not they want the President of the United States to have this additional power. Of course, the President has the power to suspend the whole organization at the present time, but he now asks for specific power to provide he may direct just how the organization shall make its loans. I would not think the House would want to give the additional authority. I do not believe the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL], if he drafted this legislation, would want to continue this Export and Import Authority on the evidence presented to his committee.

Mr. Speaker, this is an agency of some substantial size. It is interesting to read the hearings concerning it. On page 21 of the hearings the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] asked this question:

> There seems to be a lot of mystery about the Export and Import Bank. I do not think there is any mystery as far as I am concerned.

Here is the reply of Mr. Jones:

> They have been doing about as much business as you could do with your vest pocket.

That is the answer of Mr. Jones, of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, who is identified with the Export and Import Bank.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. In just a moment.

They are doing only enough business to carry in your vest pocket, according to their own admission. Nevertheless, the Bureau has a president who draws a salary of $10,000 a year. It has an examiner who draws a salary of $6,000. It has an assistant secretary drawing a salary of $2,700 a year. While I have never been over there, I venture the opinion they have plenty of secretaries and clerks, and I would not be at all surprised if they had two or three messengers and two or three colored gentlemen who sit outside the doors to let them know when any danger is approaching.

Mr. Jones was asked why we should continue this particular agency. He admits it is not doing anything. He admits it is not going to do anything. His reply was he wanted this power because he might need it in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I ask both the Democrats and Republicans if that is fair to the taxpayers. Do you want these expenditures to continue, with this evidence? We talk about economy. We talk about efficiency. By and by you will be cutting off someone who is on relief or some poor veteran. You will be in here talking of economizing; now, right here is an agency that is not doing anything. The Chairman admits it is not doing anything. He admits it has not done anything, yet you are going to keep it in existence at great expense to hard-pressed taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. How long has it been since the Reconstruction Finance Corporation ceased making loans?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I could not answer the question. I think they are still making some loans. If the gentleman asks me how long has it been since they made a loan to a small manufacturer or to a small industry, I will answer that they have made precious few.

All of its efforts have been directed toward the large banks, the insurance companies, and the public utilities; but as far as actually being of service to the small manufacturers of this country is concerned, it has never contributed anything. I do not want to minimize the value of the stabilizing aid rendered, but it has failed to do what it should have done for small business.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. What has the Export-Import Bank done?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. All they have done is what could be put in your vest pocket. So states Mr. Jones. I do not know how much that is.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky To what extent, if at all, have the expenses of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Export-Import Bank been reduced?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I believe the gentleman is an optimist when he asks that question. I do not know of one single bureau in Washington during the last 3 years that has reduced its expenses one dollar.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. If they admit they are not going ahead and are not likely to perform any service in the next year or two, it seems to me, and I refer to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Export-Import Bank, that their expenses should be reduced for the benefit of the taxpayers of the country. A recent report of the Treasury shows that our deficit from July to the present time is more than $1,500,000,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The taxpayer is only remembered around election time.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. It has been my understanding that under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation law now in effect the R. F. C. may make loans only when private capital is not available. Is that the gentleman's understanding?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That was the theory upon which the agency was established; that is, it would not make loans except when private capital was not available. It was also expected it would not make loans to a new industry which would compete with another industry of the same kind, but we found they loaned millions to create a new concern to compete with other concerns in distress.

Mr. BOILEAU. If my understanding is correct, it seems to me the proviso in section 1 is rather ridiculous, because under the law the Board cannot make loans when private capital is available. In section 1 it states that the President could authorize the Directors to suspend the exercising of this power, but it would seem to me that language is superfluous and should not be in the bill, if my understanding of the present law is correct.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I cannot say definitely.

Mr. BOILEAU. It is confusing and does not mean anything.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There may still be some reason for loans in some sections of the country.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE. The statement the gentleman made that they did not make loans to small industries must be an error. There have been many thousands of dollars lent in the Pacific Northwest, particularly to the lumber industry. There was a pledge within the last week in the district of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] involving some $650,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. They made these loans in September or October?

Mr. PIERCE. No; this last one was a pledge within the last week, to my knowledge.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I congratulate the gentleman on his influence with the organization.

Mr. DIRKSEN and Mr. MICHENER rose.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. I may say with respect to the inquiry of my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] in regard to the language of the bill, the authority conferred upon the President to suspend the operations of any one of the subdivisions of the R. F. C. virtually gives him power, as a matter of practical operation, to terminate the R. F. C.

Mr. BOILEAU. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will permit, it is my understanding, although I may be in error about this, and for this reason I want some enlightenment from some member of the committee——

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am not a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency now. I was a member of that committee.

Mr. BOILEAU. I know the gentleman was a member of the committee. Under the original law, as I understand, it was not the policy at least of the R. F. C. to make loans where there was sufficient capital available for that type of loan, and it was my impression that they were not permitted under the law to make such loans. I know it is not their policy to do so, and when I was trying to assist a certain corporation to obtain a loan I was informed they could not make the loan because there was capital available for that type of loan.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It was rather in the nature of discretionary authority conferred upon the R. F. C. to be exercised in the interest of the country.

Mr. BOILEAU. I do not want to impose upon the gentleman from Massachusetts, but, if he will permit, I would like to have the matter clarified by having the chairman of the committee state what is the present law in that respect.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I think the gentleman can explain that in his own time. I now yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. I simply desired to call attention to the manner in which this bill is drawn. I am not surprised when I find the chairman of the committee had never read the bill when it was before the committee. The Department drew the bill. The Department sent up instructions telling the committee how to draw the bill, what to insert and what to strike out, and the committee in its wisdom wanted to agree with what the Department said and, evidently fearing they might do something wrong if they changed it, they followed the formula and included in the bill a formula to strike out and insert, and therefore this bill, without reading the original law, is meaningless. I shall speak of this more in detail at greater length later.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am going to offer an amendment to strike out the provision for the continuation of the Export-Import Bank. I admit I am not optimistic about the fate of the amendment, because I have heard it said there has been organized in the House an administration battalion of 250. I have been told this battalion is going to see the President gets everything he wants. I do not know whether this is true or not, and I find it difficult to find a good reason for its existence. Certainly it cannot be on account of the 89 Members on this side of the House. So it must be someone is afraid of some of the Democrats. I shall offer my amendment in order to give you a chance to eliminate at least one commission that is not needed, if you want to make one small, feeble gesture toward economy.

Mr. McCORMACK and Mr. MAY rose.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield first to my distinguished friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will my distinguished friend from Massachusetts advise us where he got that information?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I may inform the gentleman I read it in the newspapers.

Mr. McCORMACK. Does the gentleman always rely on the newspapers?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is about the only source of information a good many of us Republicans have on such a matter.

Mr. McCORMACK. And, based on a newspaper story, the gentleman then made a definite statement?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman did not understand what I said or he would not make that observation. I said if this report is true, then I have not much optimism as to what will be the fate of my amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. Whether the statement is true or not, the gentleman does not know?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman know whether it is true or not? Let us have it out right here.

Mr. McCORMACK. So far as the gentleman from Massachusetts who is now speaking is concerned, the first time he heard of any such thing was when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] stated it a moment ago.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman has been busy with the inauguration and probably has not kept up with the times. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts would know something about what was going on in that respect in the House here.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. MAY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, if he is going to offer an amendment to eliminate the Import-Export Bank, why he does not extend the amendment to include all four of the additional agencies, including the Electric Home and Farm Authority; and for his information I would like to tell the gentleman, if he does not know it already, the Electric Home and Farm Authority is a corporation created by Executive order, organized under the laws of Delaware, and is engaged in the private business of peddling electric fixtures and supplies. When it gets an order from a power company it accepts the assignment of the papers without recourse on the power company, so that the power company is released and the Government holds the bag. Why does not the gentleman extend his amendment so as to eliminate all of these subsidiaries and let the R. F. C. go on as a lending institution?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman has made a fine contribution to the debate. I stated in the beginning of my remarks I believed every one of these agencies should be brought up separately and should stand or fall on their own merits. If it is a good agency, no one ought to fear its fate in the House, which is 4 to 1 Democratic. I would certainly be willing to have this procedure, but I am not optimistic enough to think my motion would prevail.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Has the Import-Export Bank done any business at all since Mr. Peek resigned?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I cannot say definitely about that. I am not opposed to granting this rule. It is a subject that should be considered, but I regret that we do not have ample time to debate the question thoroughly. I hope when it comes up under the 5-minute rule a spirit of patriotism will prevail in the ranks of the majority party. Let us consider each agency and the increased power to the President solely upon merit.

Mr. STEAGALL. I will suggest to the gentleman that we will be able to save a little more time if we adopt the rule now.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts want to use any more time?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes; I have one other speaker.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. How much time, Mr. Speaker, has been used?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman, from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Members of the House, we are asked to grant a rule to extend the time for the existence of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and four other organizations. I want to call your attention to a letter sent the committee on January 15 by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee [Mr. STEAGALL] from Jesse H. Jones.

I read from the second page of the letter as follows:

> Our policy for the past year or more has been to assist and encourage applicants in getting their loans from private sources where possible rather than by making them ourselves. The fact that we are in a position to make the loans enables us to do this, in many cases.
> We are liquidating as rapidly as is consistent with the best interests of our borrowers, and the best interest of the country.

The Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation states that they are trying to have the people of the country borrow from the banks as they are trying to liquidate. Now, somebody from somewhere has sent in a new request that we continue the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for 2½ years, one-half year after the expiration of this Congress. Why do they want this extension of time? No reason has been given for such an extension. How many applications have they before them? Who wants to borrow, and how much do they want to borrow? Let them furnish this information.

Let me read what the investigating committee for consolidation and organization of the Government agencies in the last Senate states. This comes from that excellent committee on the other side of the Capitol. This investigation reveals this fact. I will only read one or two sentences:

> We as Members of Congress, are trustees for the taxpayers' dollars and our obligation is to make it buy the fullest value.
> The manifold activities of Government must be systematized and directed with maximum efficiency.
> No essential agency should be starved, but saving should be found in consolidation and simplification.

Now, this Senate investigating committee reveals to Members of Congress that there are 24 lending agencies in the Government.

I heard a prominent man on the Democratic side of this House of Representatives say yesterday that we have too many organizations in our Government, and that we should simplify the Government agencies. I say to you gentlemen of Congress that if you do not simplify the agencies of the Government, your responsibility is to this extent that because this Congress does not act, you are going to wreck the Government. You admit it but you will not act. I do not say that because I want to say anything detrimental to Congress, but the responsibility is upon the Congress now to simplify the agencies of government. Yet we come in here, and from some unknown source, or at least it has not been revealed by the majority, we have presented to us a request to extend the time of these various Government agencies for 2½ years. What right have we to do it? What is the actual need? I want somebody on the Democratic side of the House to explain to me why and for what reason we have requests from Government institutions or departments in this country demanding that we continue the R. F. C. for 2½ years, when the Chairman of that institution, Mr. Jesse Jones, says that they are trying to liquidate it now. If that is the case, we do not need to keep the R. F. C. and these four other agencies in operation. We can very well turn them over to some of those other agencies and let them liquidate in an orderly procedure and do away with much of our Government overhead and duplication spoken of in the Senate investigation committee.

I know that 2 or 3 years ago I went to the R. F. C. and tried to get them to loan money to a small corporation and I never worked harder in my life to get $3,500 than I did for that concern in my district. The $3,500 would have been a revolving fund to employ 60 men for a year or more. The agent of the R. F. C. said they ought to grant the loan, but when the time came to grant it the directors would not do it. I did everything but guarantee that loan or make it myself. That is what the R. F. C. does for the little fellow. They just do not grant loans to the little fellow and today the big fellow does not need the R. F. C.; he can get the loans from the banks.

Somebody said on the floor that they just loaned $600,000 to a lumber company in his State. The banks of this country have lots of money, and the fellow that can put up security enough to get a loan from the R. F. C. can get a loan from the banks. They want to loan their money, and it is not difficult for a concern that has proper security to get money at 2½ and 3 percent.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I cannot yield; I have not the time. The only reason that I can find that we want a continuation of the R. F. C. is because, as I understand it, the Chairman, Mr. Jesse Jones, wants to run for President in 1940, and if he has this organization, he can build up a machine that may help him get there. Remember that Jesse Jones comes from Texas. You know when those fellows down there in Texas want to put something across, they generally do it. I heard a man from Texas say that he was 200 percent for a certain fellow, and they just took a certain place, an important post in this House, away from New York and sent it down to Texas, and I am getting to be in the position of wanting to know whether Texas is going to be a part of the United States or whether the United States is going to be a part of Texas. That is the thing that is in my mind. A few years ago we had a colleague from Texas who sat in the House of Representatives, about 1930, and he was from Texas. He said, "When the other fellow gets a ham, we will get a hog", and it pretty well looks as if that is what is going on, because they have the Vice President, and then I understand they want the President in 1940, so they can properly celebrate in 1941 the 100 years of Texas admission to the Union. They want the President and the Vice President, and Mr. Speaker, I suggest that one ought not to be too sure but what they will have the Speaker of the House of Representatives as well. Texas has the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. Texas has the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. Texas has the chairman of Elections No. 1 Committee. Texas had the chairman of Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Texas has the chairman of the Judiciary Committee. Texas has the chairman of Public Buildings and Grounds Committee. Texas has the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. Texas has the chairman of Special Committee of Investigation of American Retail Federation and Trade Practices. Texas has the chairman of the Select Committee to Investigate the Executive Agencies of the Government.

The great question is, Are we going to build the Capital of the United States in Texas, and if so, will New York be a county of Texas, will Pennsylvania be a county of Texas or will Texas still be a part of the United States?

I do not think one State should take all the national honors. What right had the Democratic Party to give the House majority leader to Texas, when the person in line for the honor came from New York State? Mr. Speaker, let me show you in another way what I mean. See what the New Deal campaign committee of Texas said about that State receiving $1,000,000,000 from the Federal Government through the N. E. C.; and I quote:

> When this fund of $1,000,000,000 sent to Texas is analyzed, compared, and contrasted, it presents an unusual picture. For instance, the Roosevelt-Garner administration gave to Texas 4,000 times the amount sought as a campaign contribution in this State, which is only $250,000. Expressed in another way, Texas is asked to give but one-fortieth of 1 percent of the $1,000,000,000 toward the campaign war chest. Again, it means $167 per capita, that sum going to every man, woman, and child in Texas. Another side of the picture, the Washington government gave to Texas 10 times the total annual expenditures of the State government, for, in round numbers, the State government costs $100,000,000 a year.

Now, gentlemen, is not that something for the people of Texas to gloat over?

Spoils for Texas and taxes for New York; spoils for Texas and taxes for Pennsylvania; spoils for Texas and taxes for Illinois. Well, it looks to me as if all Northern States will have taxes and some Southern States will have the spoils. I call it selfishness.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 415) to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 415, with Mr. COOPER in the chair.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any other provision of law, until the close of business on June 30, 1939, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized to continue to perform all functions which it is authorized to perform under law, and the liquidation and winding up of the Corporation's affairs as provided for by section 13 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, are hereby postponed during the period that functions of the Corporation are continued pursuant to this Act: Provided, That in order to facilitate the withdrawal of the credit activities of the Corporation when from time to time during such period the President finds, upon a report of the Board of Directors of the Corporation or otherwise, that credit for any class of borrowers to which the Corporation is authorized to lend is sufficiently available from private sources to meet legitimate demands upon fair terms and rates, the President may authorize the directors to suspend the exercise by the Corporation of any such lending authority for such time or times as he may deem advisable.

> SEC. 2. (a) Section 7 of the act approved January 31, 1935 (Public, No. 1, 74th Cong.), is hereby amended by striking from the first sentence thereof "April 1, 1937" and inserting in lieu thereof "the close of business on June 30, 1939"; section 1 of the act approved March 31, 1936 (Public, No. 484, 74th Cong.), is hereby amended by striking from the first sentence thereof "February 1, 1937" and inserting in lieu thereof "the close of business on June 30, 1939"; section 9 of the act approved January 31, 1935 (Public,

No. 1, 74th Cong.), is hereby amended by striking from the first sentence thereof "June 16, 1937" and inserting in lieu thereof "the close of business on June 30, 1939."

(b) The agencies referred to in the acts referred to in subdivision (a) of this section, and the R. F. C. Mortgage Co., shall be deemed to be established by or pursuant to law within the meaning of section 7 (a) of the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1936.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I shall occupy only a brief time of the House. There is nothing in this legislation that is new. In fact, everything proposed in this measure has been passed upon by both Houses of Congress and has received the approval of the President. The only thing that is attempted is to extend until the end of the fiscal year 1939 the functions and powers now reposed in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. In passing, I wish to say for myself, and I am sure I speak the general views of many Members of the House, that the accomplishments of this agency of the Government, established as it was to aid in meeting the problems arising out of the distress of the period of depression, have been gratifying in a most unusual degree.

It seems almost more than could have been anticipated that the services of this Corporation should have afforded the relief that has been accomplished by its operation. Certainly it is most gratifying that the Corporation should have been conducted with such success in the matter of relief afforded, and with a record that will show profits in large sums accruing to the Government as a result of the operations of the Corporation.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEAGALL. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. Did I understand the gentleman to say that all we are doing at the present time with this legislation is to extend the present operations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. STEAGALL. The present powers now reposed in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the period of time suggested; yes, sir.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me that the last part of section 1 of the bill gives additional powers to the President which he did not have under the provisions of the original bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. Let me say to the gentleman, I think he will hardly find that my statement was inaccurate.

Mr. SNELL. That part of the bill seems rather important. It may be that my understanding was inaccurate.

Mr. STEAGALL. Under the present law the President of the United States is clothed with blanket authority to terminate the activities of the Corporation at any time.

Mr. SNELL. I understand that.

Mr. STEAGALL. Under the bill now before the House there is a limitation on that power of the President. So that the statement I have just made, if erroneous at all, was erroneous in the opposite sense to that which the gentleman from New York seems to have understood.

Under the present law there is blanket authority that the President, at his own will, may terminate the activities of the Corporation. Under the bill now before the House we have limited that authority. I will read the language, which is more accurate than any language I could employ in stating it:

When from time to time during such period the President finds, upon a report of the board of directors of the Corporation or otherwise, that credit for any class of borrowers to which the Corporation is authorized to lend is sufficiently available from private sources to meet legitimate demands upon fair terms and rates, the President may authorize the directors to suspend the exercise by the Corporation of any such lending authority for such time or times as he may deem advisable.

Instead of conferring unlimited, blanket authority, as under existing law, the present bill seeks to impose limitations upon the President in the exercise of that authority; limitations that require the fulfillment of the legislative purpose, in that the President may not authorize termination of the activities of the Corporation except upon ascertainment of the fact that sufficiently available credit from private sources to meet legitimate demands upon fair terms and rates is available. So that there is no enlargement of the President's power; but rather, a limitation.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand that language it gives the President additional power to suspend from time to time, and then he can put back into operation any one of these smaller activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, whereas under the old law the only thing the President was given power to do was to terminate the whole matter. I think this is additional power instead of a limitation. Reading your own questions in the hearing, it says that this gives the President the power to make the lending policy of the Board.

Mr. STEAGALL. If the gentleman attempts to quote from anything I had to say, I have no recollection of a statement like that. I do not so understand the matter. However, let me say to the gentleman there has been a question in the minds of well-informed lawyers as to the validity of an enactment by Congress conferring simple blanket authority upon an Executive or any department of the Government to terminate or put an end to legislation.

Mr. SNELL. That is not quite the point I was trying to get at.

Mr. STEAGALL. This legislation attempts to meet that difficulty. It is contended by good lawyers that such difficulty does exist. This legislation attempts to meet it by requiring the ascertainment of facts contemplated by the legislative branch of the Government; so that under the bill now before the House, instead of giving to the Executive the power in his own right to say whether or not the Corporation should cease to function, the legislative branch of the Government gives specific direction to the Chief Executive to authorize termination of the functions of the Corporation only upon ascertainment of the facts which, in the legislative mind, constitute sufficient predicate for that action.

Mr. SNELL. I am not arguing with the gentleman about the constitutionality of the legislation. I simply claim that from the questions asked by members of his committee, by this legislation you are giving additional powers to the President which he did not have before. He did not have anything to do with the policy of these lending agencies. The only power he had was to terminate them. According to the questions that were asked in the gentleman's committee, he has additional power, under this act, relative to the policy of the lending agency.

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not see how it can be contended that the authority conferred upon the Executive by this act gives him any more power to direct the policies of the Corporation in the matter of loans to be made than he could have had under the blanket authority which permitted him to cut off the head of the Corporation any time he might see fit.

Mr. SNELL. Under the original act, the President had no power to suspend from time to time one of these lesser agencies, had he?

Mr. STEAGALL. He had no express power to suspend from time to time.

Mr. SNELL. Under this act he has the power to suspend activities for 1 month or 2 months, according as he may find the facts, of any one of these lesser agencies or activities.

Mr. STEAGALL. Provided he ascertains the facts to exist, upon which the legislative branch of the Government says that action should be determined.

Mr. SNELL. He did not have that power before, did he?

Mr. STEAGALL. I think the gentleman's question may very well be answered either "yes" or "no." As a matter of fact, he had all the authority that is now conferred, if not more.

Mr. SNELL. But under the act setting up the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the only authority the President had was to terminate the whole activity.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is all; he could not terminate part of it.

Mr. SNELL. Under the provisions of the pending bill he can terminate part of it. I claim this is an added power given to the President.

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not so consider it.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I voted for the original Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act. I think the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been a great organization, and I would like to vote for the continuance of this Corporation naked, as it was when we created it. I do not like to vote for it with a lot of other agencies in its coat pockets.

As I understand, these other four agencies, the Commodity Credit Corporation, the Electric Home and Farm Authority, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Mortgage Co., and the export bank were all created separately from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by Executive orders of the President and incorporated under the laws of Delaware or the District of Columbia, as the case may have been. The last sentence of the bill, subsection (b) of section 2, contains this language:

The agencies referred to in the acts referred to in subdivision (a) of this section, and the RFC Mortgage Co., shall be deemed to be established by or pursuant to law within the meaning of section 7 (a) of the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1936.

Why does not that expression in this legislation give congressional or legislative authority to these four agencies and continue them as creatures of the Congress instead of creatures of Executive order or as private corporations?

Mr. STEAGALL. Unquestionably, the legislation carries forward the existence of these corporations and with the relationship they now bear to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. MAY. They are merely agencies, or loopholes, through which the R. F. C. is lending money; is that the idea?

Mr. STEAGALL. It may be expressed that way.

Mr. MAY. Why does not the R. F. C. lend the money directly on its own initiative without the use of these agencies?

Mr. REILLY. Because Congress authorized them to establish agencies.

Mr. MAY. And then they are established by Executive order rather than by act of Congress.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. I ask the chairman of the committee for information. Is it not a fact that under existing law, if the R. F. C. Board finds that there is credit available in the community, or credit available for the type of loan sought, that this Corporation is authorized to refuse the loan? Is not the purpose of the R. F. C. to make loans only where private capital is not available?

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not think that particular language was included in the original R. F. C. Act. It was included in the provision for loans to industry. If it had not been included, of course, the same rule would have been applied in the nature of things, for that is the only common-sense way in which to handle it.

Mr. BOILEAU. At any rate, under present law, should the Board find that credit is available, they are authorized to refuse the loan, are they not?

Mr. STEAGALL. They are authorized to do that anyhow.

Mr. BOILEAU. That is the point I am trying to make. With that understanding, why is this language necessary?—

When from time to time during such period the President finds, upon a report of the board of directors of the Corporation or otherwise, that credit for any class of borrowers to which the Corporation is authorized to lend is sufficiently available from private sources to meet legitimate demands upon fair terms and rates, the President may authorize the directors to suspend the exercise by the Corporation of any such lending authority for such time or times as he may deem advisable.

In other words, it does not direct the Board to cease the granting of loans; it empowers the President under certain conditions to authorize the R. F. C. to suspend making this type of loan. In other words, he can authorize them to refuse to make the same kind of loans they are now authorized to refuse to make. I cannot see what purpose is to be served by this language in the pending bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. It is not desirable that we set up a governmental board or agency with authority to engage in certain lines of business, and clothe that board with authority or to confer upon the board the right by arbitrary judgment to terminate a function of government established by Congress.

Mr. BOILEAU. The language of the pending bill would empower the President to authorize the directors to suspend certain of its functions.

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not agree with the gentleman's viewpoint.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. FORD of California. Perhaps I can offer a suggestion to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. I should be pleased to have it.

Mr. FORD of California. Under this authorization to suspend any of the different classes of loans, the purpose back of it is probably this, that once an order to suspend is authorized, the Corporation will no longer have to engage in the long and expensive routine of examining that class of loan. When request for a loan of that character came up heretofore, the Corporation was obliged to examine the loan and in the end did not make the loan. If the Corporation is authorized to suspend loans to these various types of loan—we do not know that any will be suspended, but if they should be suspended it would greatly curtail the trouble and expense of the Board.

Mr. BOILEAU. The language does not read that they are authorized and directed; it reads merely "authorized." I am wondering if it has the same effect as the words "authorized and directed"?

Mr. STEAGALL. Undoubtedly it is going to have the same effect. It is quite possible that there has not been the most lawyerlike use of language, but the practical situation is the same. It will work out easily and with the same results. If the President authorized the Board to terminate loans to any class of borrowers the Board would do so, just as though the language read "authorized and directed."

Mr. BOILEAU. The point is that under this language the same authority will be vested in the Board which they now exercise. They now have authority under these same conditions to refuse this type of loan. We are merely giving the President the power to authorize them to do the thing we are now authorized to do. It seems to me the language is very clear.

Mr. STEAGALL. I have already stated to the gentleman that the limitation that loans were to be made only when it was found that funds through other channels were not available, has not been employed except in the instance of loans to industry. That is an answer to the suggestion of the gentleman.

Mr. BOILEAU. I know there have been loans turned down for that same purpose, because I have had them turned down in my district.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. I have not had an opportunity to read the hearings. I am wondering whether they have been printed?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes; they are in print.

Mr. KNUTSON. We are busy in our committee at the present time.

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman may read the hearings. He will find them interesting.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am sure I will and I shall. I read in a paper a while ago that the R. F. C. had advanced $4,000,000 to establish a kraft paper industry down in Arkansas when the kraft paper mills all over the country were complaining that the field was already full and that the production was more than enough to take care of the present consumption.

Has the gentleman any information in reference to that matter?

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course, my friend attempts to point out one single transaction of this Corporation out of the billions of dollars of business that has been done by the Corporation, and the gentleman predicates his question upon newspaper reports which I have not read and with reference to a detail with which I am not familiar, as the gentleman must understand.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. For my own information I would like to get a little further light on the point raised by the minority leader. May I ask the gentleman if the language of the original act giving blanket authority to the President to suspend or terminate the operations of this Corporation is repealed by any language in the pending bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. I imagine the authority perhaps would still exist. That would be a matter of legal construction. But in any event, I do not understand we have enlarged the powers of the President when we say he may exercise this power as to a certain class of borrowers without having to exercise it as to all classes of borrowers eligible for loans.

Mr. MOTT. The point of my question is, if the authority given by the original act is not repealed by this act, then that authority would still exist, notwithstanding the enactment of this bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. As I have previously stated to the gentleman from New York, one reason for the employment of language used in the present act is to meet a possible difficulty involved in a legislative attempt to confer blanket authority upon the President to terminate a Government agency at his own will.

Mr. MOTT. I think I see the gentleman's point. But if that is the case, why not repeal in this act the blanket authority given in the original act to terminate this Corporation and simply retain the authority that may be given in the pending legislation?

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not think this provision automatically repeals it. It is the opinion of good lawyers the original provision is not binding anyway.

Mr. MOTT. Does the gentleman think that blanket authority ought to be repealed or retained?

Mr. STEAGALL. I think the present language is what has always been employed because this language is designed to restrict the President to such action as carries out the will of the Congress and surely Members of Congress should not object to this method of assuring the integrity of the legislative intent.

Mr. MOTT. Why not content ourselves with the authority given in the other act?

Mr. STEAGALL. I think that is a repetition of a question already asked.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Could the directors of the R. F. C. suspend credit to any class of borrowers under the language of section 1 without an order from the President of the United States so to do?

Mr. STEAGALL. That is not the purpose of the legislation and I cannot see how it could be so construed.

Mr. DONDERO. That would practically place in his hands the power to decide the policies of the R. F. C.

Mr. STEAGALL. It might be said he has that power when the act gives the President authority to name the Board.

Mr. DONDERO. Would the gentleman be willing to agree to an amendment striking out the word "suspend" and place in lieu thereof the word "terminate"?

Mr. STEAGALL. I could not agree to any change in the bill. There are many reasons for my inability to meet that suggestion.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to consume much more time. I desire to conclude without yielding for further questions.

Mr. Chairman, so far as the Mortgage Co. is concerned, the authority does not terminate except as the Corporation terminates. It is not in the same class in that regard as is the case with reference to the Export-Import Bank, the Electric Home and Farm Authority, the Commodity Credit Corporation, and others.

I am sure that the Members of the House, especially those who represent agricultural constituencies, appreciate the great importance of continuing the support that has been given heretofore to the Commodity Credit Corporation. I call the attention of the Members of the House to the importance of the work that has been so carefully conducted by the Commodity Credit Corporation.

This Corporation makes loans upon the security of agricultural commodities for the purpose of financing the carrying and orderly marketing of such commodities. Its policy has been to make loans only on such commodities as are designated by the President. Loans have been made on cotton, corn, tobacco, and gum rosin, and gum turpentine.

Commodity Credit Corporation was originally created as an emergency agency under the laws of the State of Delaware pursuant to Executive order of the President dated October 16, 1933. The original capital of $3,000,000 was subscribed and is held jointly by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration for the use and benefit of the United States. By the act of January 31, 1935, its functions were extended to April 1, 1937, or such earlier date as the President might fix by Executive order. Pursuant to a joint resolution of April 10, 1936, its capital was increased to $100,000,000, the additional capital stock being purchased by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

An extension of its functions is deemed necessary in order to permit the orderly liquidation of the pledged commodities now held by the Corporation and to preserve an agency for the making of loans of the character mentioned above.

Commodity Credit Corporation, since its organization, has made approximately the number of loans listed below in the approximate amounts shown below:

Type of borrower	Total number of loans	Aggregate amount
Cotton growers	1,833,067	$392,105,294.86
Corn farmers	244,519	145,537,175.44
Producers of turpentine and rosin	7,500	7,123,511.21
Tobacco cooperative associations		8,251,615.10
Producers' pool		51,415,841.82
Total	2,085,086	604,433,438.43

The total amount of loans outstanding as of December 31, 1936, amounted to $212,727,596.28.

The Electric Home and Farm Authority has aided in the purchase of electrical appliances on behalf of people who were unable to pay cash. The Authority has worked in cooperation with manufacturers, dealers, and the utilities. It has rendered a great service, not alone in the matter of direct aid extended but indirectly in the matter of interest rates and in the matter of the utility rates, which have been reduced.

Eighteen thousand nine hundred and seventy loans have been made, with an average of $160, involving an aggregate amount of $3,028,666. There have been no losses, and our advice is that there is practically no delinquent paper. Over 2,000 loans, involving over $1,463,000, have been repaid.

The Electric Home and Farm Authority is an integral part of the Government's low rate, high volume power policy, and an essential part of it. It is helpful in the matter of utility charges and in interest rates charged to borrowers and has resulted in enlarged use of electrical household appliances.

The R. F. C. has not made any loans to the Electric Home and Farm Authority. I believe the record shows they have made no loans whatever. They have been ready to do so and have made committals for loans, but the fact that the R. F. C. stands back of this Authority enables the Authority to obtain credit through regular channels, and withdrawal of the support of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would certainly cripple the Authority very seriously in its operations.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes; for a question.

Mr. MAY. Does not the Electric Home and Farm Authority get its money direct from the R. F. C.?

Mr. STEAGALL. No; the Electric Home and Farm Authority was set up out of a fund that was supplied out of a $100,000,000 fund which the Congress placed at the disposal of the Executive in connection with N. R. A. activities, as I recall, and I think the amount is $8,500,000, which they have employed up to this time.

Mr. MAY. I may say for the information of the gentleman that it appeared last year in the Military Affairs Committee hearings that the R. F. C. had made an authorization to the Electric Home and Farm Authority of $10,000,000.

Mr. STEAGALL. I just stated that the R. F. C.——

Mr. MAY. Just a moment; I am not through with my statement. It was testified by the directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority, who are likewise the directors of the Electric Home and Farm Authority, that they did have this credit with the R. F. C.

Mr. STEAGALL. I thought I stated that the R. F. C. had made committals to the Electric Home and Farm Authority for loans, but the actual loans had not been made and that in large part desired results have been accomplished without the use of the funds of the corporation.

Mr. MAY. Did the gentleman ascertain, or attempt to ascertain, in the hearings before his committee, whether or not the Electric Home and Farm Authority, when they go out to sell appliances through an agency, the agency or the dealer takes a note and assigns that note to the Electric Home and Farm Authority and gets the money from it without recourse on the dealer?

Mr. STEAGALL. Just the opposite is the fact. The Electric Home and Farm Authority only protects the loan to the amount of 80 percent, and they require the endorsement of the dealer along with the purchaser, and the loan is likewise secured by chattel mortgage rights covering the property sold.

Mr. MAY. I have undertaken since early last week to get a statement from the Electric Home and Farm Authority and the R. F. C. with respect to the annual report of that concern, and I have been unable to get it. Can the gentleman tell me where I can get the information?

Mr. STEAGALL. If the gentleman will call at my office, I think I can give him a report that will contain all the information he has in mind. It has been supplied to the Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I simply wish to say that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] has correctly given the facts. The Electric Home and Farm Authority has not received one dollar from the R. F. C. It is borrowing today, without any difficulty whatever, from private banks at very low rates of interest. At times it has been getting money for three-fourths of 1 percent.

Mr. STEAGALL. All of which is quite true, but might not be true if the Authority did not have the support of the R. F. C., ready to come to its aid in case of necessity.

Mr. COX. May I say to the gentleman also that the R. F. C. gave the authority or the commitment for $10,000,000, but it has not used any part of the commitment.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is true. I thought I had so stated.

Mr. COX. And may I make the further observation that there is evidently no ambition on the part of this Authority to develop into one of any very considerable size. The chief virtue of its activity is the influence it has had upon interest rates on installment transactions.

Mr. STEAGALL. Undoubtedly, that is one important advantage.

Mr. COX. And this has been most helpful.

Mr. STEAGALL. And that is true of many of the activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation in many instances makes committals for loans which they are never required to make. As soon as it develops that the applicant can get necessary accommodations at the R. F. C. a bank comes along and takes over the loan, and the best service that the R. F. C. is rendering the country now is in being able to bring about normal accommodations on the part of lending institutions and banks, due to the fact that the Corporation stands by ready to take care of any difficulties that may arise.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I want to correct the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], who stated a moment ago that the Electric Home and Farm Authority goes out and sells these appliances. The Electric Home and Farm Authority only finances the dealer who sells these appliances and takes the notes which the dealer endorses with recourse.

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. And it is one of the best agencies of this Government.

Mr. STEAGALL. Now, as to the Export Bank, it has extended 90-day credits in connection with the export of agricultural products, especially cotton and tobacco, where such facilities were not available through private financial institutions; and where conditions make longer credits essential or desirable, the bank has provided them. Such short-term accommodations have usually been arranged by appointing the exporter's own bank as agent to accept and discount drafts of the foreign purchasers or banks for and on behalf of the Export-Import Bank. This procedure is in line with the general policy of supplementing rather than competing with the activities of commercial banks and has the added virtue of maintaining established trade channels.

It is believed that this particular type of business can be greatly expanded to the substantial benefit of the Nation's domestic economy.

Second, the bank has extended credit directly to American firms desiring to export industrial products, particularly heavy machinery and railway equipment. Until recently the durable-goods industries have exhibited a high percentage of unemployment, and, while there is a wide demand abroad for their products, competition from foreign sources has been very keen.

The practice of the bank has been to offer credit terms in specific cases approaching those available to foreign competitors, which usually run from 1 to 5 years; and in some cases the bank has agreed to assume a portion of the risk without recourse to the American manufacturer or exporter. These transactions have usually been accomplished through the purchase by the bank of the obligations of the foreign purchaser, representing up to 50 percent of the credit extended such purchaser by the American seller. In exceptional cases the bank has increased its participation up to 65 percent of the credit so extended.

Third. The bank has approved loans to American exporters whose working capital has been reduced because of the failure of foreign governments to provide their own nationals with sufficient exchange to permit them to meet their dollar obligations. Advances of this character are only made against the guaranty of the foreign government concerned or of a responsible foreign bank, or both. In these situations recourse for the full amount is retained against the American exporter concerned.

In addition to the foregoing, obligations arising from foreign commercial transactions held by other governmental agencies have been consolidated in the bank. Thus the bank has purchased during the past year from Reconstruction Finance Corporation and Farm Credit Administration certain promissory notes of the Republic of China arising from the sale of cotton, wheat, and flour to China prior to the organization of the bank. Likewise, certain judgments against the Republic of Cuba, held by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, have been assigned to the bank for collection.

Other transactions which do not fall within the classifications mentioned are the loans to the Republic of Cuba to finance the purchase of silver bullion and the minting thereof into standard Cuban pesos. The two banks have financed four transactions involving the advance of approximately $20,600,000 and the minting of 50,000,000 standard Cuban pesos. The last transaction, involving 20,000,000 pesos, is now about one-half completed. Payment is made by the Republic of Cuba against the delivery of pesos in Habana.

Attached hereto, marked "Exhibit A", is a table setting forth the activities of the export-import banks since their creation through December 31, 1936. During the year 1936 there was a substantial increase in disbursements. While this is due in large part to the acquisition of the notes of the Republic of China formerly held by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Farm Credit Administration, it also reflects the establishment of definite lending policies. In other words, during the years 1934 and 1935 many of the authorizations were on a more or less experimental basis, and the terms of the commitments were often such that the applicants could not utilize them. Experience and a better knowledge of the needs of the American exporter and importer have greatly improved the administration of the activities of the bank with the result that it is now in position to furnish, and is furnishing, prompt and valuable assistance in our foreign-trade field.

Loans authorized by the two export banks since their creation may be classified as of the close of business on December 31, 1936, as follows:

a. Agricultural exports:
Authorizations	$26,723,646
Disbursements (including amounts advanced under agency agreements)	17,457,613
Repayments	1,630,597
b. Industrial exports:
Authorizations	37,650,808
Disbursements	238,764
Repayments	65,142
c. Other credits:
Authorizations	48,353,559
Disbursements	17,446,867
Repayments	15,874,877

The bank has approved loans to finance the shipment of American goods or products to Argentina, Austria, Canada, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czechslovakia, Germany, Hungary, India, Latvia, Mexico, Nicaragua, Norway, Poland, Paraguay, Spain, Straits Settlements, Turkey, Uruguay, Venezuela, and Yugoslavia. Generally proposals to finance the exportation of industrial products concern Mexico, South America, and the Far East, while those concerning agricultural exports relate to Europe and, to a lesser extent, China.

The bank stands ready to meet the requirements arising out of development that cannot always be anticipated and provided against specifically.

The usefulness of the bank should be enlarged. Its authority should not be terminated right now, with the injury to export business of the country which we so much desire to promote.

A good deal has been said about loans to industry. Undoubtedly some gentlemen who have spoken are not familiar with the facts. They seem not to know that up to January 15, 1937, the R. F. C. approved of loans in the amount of $169,739,000. Of this amount, $53,000,000 was withdrawn and canceled because loans were obtained elsewhere. This certainly refutes statements that the Corporation has not carried out this provision of law.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I have now used more time than I thought I would consume and must yield the floor in order that other Members may have time to speak.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, if this bill had been presented to us, as we had a right to assume it would be, as a simple bill to extend the activities of the R. F. C. to June 30, 1939, it would not have taken the committee more than 10 minutes to have convinced this House of the desirability of doing so.

Unfortunately this bill has taken the form that so many bills take when presented to us. It is complicated by such a diversity of subjects that it is almost impossible in the time allotted to us to discuss any of them to the extent that a Member has an intelligent understanding of what he is doing.

Section 1 of this bill not only provides for the extension of the activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation but, notwithstanding anything which has been said on the subject, it authorizes the President for the first time since the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was organized on January 22, 1932, to determine the loan policy of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. At the present time, under existing law, the President is given blanket authority to terminate the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. He is not given authority to suspend or terminate any particular activity of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Instead of being a bill which will carry out the pure legislative purpose of the several acts which we have passed extending the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, it negatives the legislative purpose of those acts, because if this bill is passed and the President finds in any manner, not alone on the recommendation of the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation but on their recommendation, or otherwise, he may authorize the Board of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to terminate any activity of the Corporation. I know that many of you who were particularly interested in the situation in which small industries found themselves sometime ago will be interested to be informed that under this bill the President could suspend the operation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation with respect to loans to small industries.

Many of us have taken a stand in months and years gone by that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should be authorized to loan on the warrants or other paper of the school districts of the United States. They have never had that authority, but if this Congress in its wisdom gives them that authority, the President and the Board of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, under the terms of this act, could turn around and absolutely nullify the pure intent of such legislation by suspending the operation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in that respect. Many of you will recall the fight on the floor at the time the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was authorized to make loans to drainage districts and irrigation districts. The President in his wisdom, finding from any source which might be available to him that credit is now available, could destroy the very legislative intent and purpose of those acts and suspend definitely, or for a given period of time, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation activity in that respect.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is to be from now on merely a stand-by organization. I wonder why it is necessary at this time to vest these most unusual powers in the President of the United States. If he had come in 2 years ago or 3 years ago and asked for this power, there might have been some substance to the argument that he was in better position to determine the policy of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation than was the Reconstruction Finance Corporation's board itself, because, perhaps, he was closer to the emergency at that time. However, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is virtually going through a period of liquidation. It was called to your attention here by the esteemed chairman of the committee that their receipts over disbursements during last year were something like $736,000,000. Their net profit at the present time is $160,000,000.

So the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should be allowed to continue without any strings tied to the Board, to liquidate this corporation which has done more to bring back prosperity by increasing the volume of credit and giving acceleration to that credit than any other single governmental agency. Why at this late date the President would want this authority to determine the loan policy of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation I cannot understand. There is some question as to whether this gives him the authority to determine the loan policy. The man who is most interested in this is the general counsel for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, who has to interpret this act after it is passed. He is Mr. James B.

Alley, and many of you know him—a very estimable gentleman doing a remarkable job—and I shall read excerpts from the testimony which Mr. Alley gave in that respect, quoting from page 4 of the committee print:

Mr. WOLCOTT. At the present time has the President any authority to shape the policy of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. ALLEY. He has power to terminate it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. He has power to terminate the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as to all classes of operation?

Mr. ALLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WOLCOTT. But he has no power to determine the policy of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. ALLEY. That is right.

Mr. WOLCOTT. This gives him the power to determine the policy?

Mr. ALLEY. Just what did you say? I did not get it. Was that a question or a statement?

Mr. WOLCOTT. That gives him the power to determine the policy of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. ALLEY. Yes; I think it would, sir.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is a far-fetched proposition from the original bill as amended, is it not?

Mr. ALLEY. Yes; he has never had entire control. The control he has had heretofore has been so restricted. His power was the power of termination only.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Under the pending bill would the President determine the policy or would he have the board of directors determine that?

Mr. ALLEY. Of course, as a matter of fact, in the determination of policy the directors themselves consult with the President a great deal on the lending policy of the Corporation, but he has had no legislative authority for that.

Mr. WOLCOTT. There is nothing in the law that requires the Corporation to consult the President, is there?

Mr. ALLEY. No; there is not, except in certain types of investment of banks and mortgage associations the President must approve any investment which the Corporation makes in a commercial bank, savings bank, or mortgage company.

Now, with respect to this subject, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was set up as a nonpartisan body in 1932, and in order that no individual or group of individuals should give a partisan complexion to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation we provided in the original act that of the seven directors no more than four would be of the same political faith.

There has not been any politics, as far as I know, in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation up to the present time. Publicly, I want to commend the chairman, Jesse Jones, and the rest of the board for doing one of the best jobs any of us have ever seen done under like conditions. We have sworn at them at times and we have blasphemed the board because they have not made loans which we asked them to make, but in the quiet of our offices and our homes we felt safe in the fact that the Board of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had established and were maintaining safe and sound policies, and those policies have resulted now in a net profit to the Government of the United States of $160,000,000.

Every Member of Congress who has contributed to the maintenance of that board as a nonpartisan board should be proud of his activity in that respect. Every Member of Congress who today votes to destroy that nonpartisanship and set up a political dictatorship over the lending policy of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should, in the quiet moments when he contemplates his actions, be ashamed that he has contributed to the potential destruction of one of the outstanding lending agencies of this country.

Mr. Chairman, at the proper time I am going to move to strike out that proviso.

Section 2 of the bill extends three distinct agencies—the Commodity Credit Corporation, the Electric Farm and Home Authority, and the Export-Import Bank. The chairman of the committee has gone into detail concerning those activities. I simply want to call your attention to the fact that these agencies are operated and managed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. As Mr. Jones told us in committee, the life of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is not contingent in any manner upon an extension of the activities of any one of these organizations. However, the extension of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is wholly essential to the life of any one of those three corporations. For that reason they try to justify tying these all up in the same bill.

Many of you will recall a year ago when we extended the Commodity Credit Corporation that an attempt was made to show to the country what the operation of the Commodity Credit Corporation was. Many on this floor had condemned the Farm Board, created back in the Hoover administration for the purpose of taking surplus wheat off the market, and their surprise in finding that the Commodity Credit Corporation, a Delaware corporation, had been set up by Executive order to do exactly the same thing for cotton and corn and turpentine and resin that the Farm Board had been attempting to do for wheat.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has consumed 15 minutes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. FULMER. We had bills passed by Congress controlling production to a certain extent, where the price could be fixed and there would not be any losses, but under the old Farm Board there was no control over production anywhere, and no one would be able to fix or control the price.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Commodity Credit Corporation has gone ever so much further than the Farm Board ever tried to go, because they have pegged the price of cotton at 12 cents. At the present time the market price of cotton is 11.79 cents, and the Government at the present time has 14½ cents invested in 4,800,000 bales of cotton, and some futures. Last year they had taken off the market 6,000,000 bales of cotton, or the equivalent of one-half of 1 year's crop. Their paper loss is 0.03 times the amount of cotton, in pounds, that they are holding at the present time. Although we are told they are going to try to unload some of this cotton, as was said a year ago, the same thing might be said today, that to unload 1,400,000 bales of this cotton, as might be contemplated, would wholly demoralize the cotton market, because the price of cotton at the present time is less than what the Commodity Credit Corporation has pegged it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has consumed 17 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order during the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether it was necessary to make that request or not, because I propose to talk largely on the bill, but may make reference to affiliated subjects. In order to have the right and power to do so I propounded the request.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, may I understand the request of the gentleman?

Mr. FISH. It has already been granted. The request was to speak out of order on any subject I desired.

Mr. STEAGALL. We are operating under a rule which specifically provides that debate shall be confined to this bill.

Mr. FISH. The permission was granted by unanimous consent. I am not going to digress very much, I may say to the gentleman, but it is too late to raise any objection now.

Mr. Chairman, the President in his message on the state of the Union delivered to the Congress recently made the following statement:

We know now that if early in 1931 the Government had taken the steps which were taken 2 or 3 years later the depression would never have reached the depths of the beginning of 1933.

This statement, of course, was directed against the prior Republican administration. In other words, President Roosevelt said that the prior Republican administration had fallen down and had failed to propose recovery legislation of any kind or was worth anything at all. In all fairness to that administration and to former President Hoover, and as a member of the Republican Party who was then in the Congress, I submit that President Hoover made certain sound recommendations to the Congress of the United States, then controlled by the Democrats, and that they deliberately sabotized those recommendations and threw them out of the window. If these recommendations had been accepted, there would be confidence in the country today and we would know which way we were going, and I refer particularly to the last 3 or 4 years.

The President in his message, however, claimed that nothing was proposed, but he overlooked the fact that repeatedly the Democratic Congress, for partisan reasons, sabotized the sound and constructive recommendations which were then made. One of the recommendations made by President Hoover, and therefore offered by the Republican Party, after the depression set in, was the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, which passed the Congress and was enacted into law in February 1932.

Mr. Chairman, that was a Republican measure and was necessary in order to try to save the banking situation and to stabilize industry. If that administration measure had not been put into effect all credit would have collapsed. It would not have been simply a question of banks failing, but it would have meant that credit would have been paralyzed and the insurance companies, the railroads, and business generally would have likewise collapsed. We would have had a far more serious financial catastrophe. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation was a Republican baby, conceived by the Republican Party, which the Democratic Party adopted. It was one of the few measures suggested by the Republican Party that the Democrats adopted, but they have taken that Republican vehicle and have used it to the extent of lending $9,000,000,000 to American industry to stabilize industry, stop the crash, and help bring America out of the depression and put people back to work.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that that Republican measure has done more to stabilize industry and bring about recovery than all the panaceas and wild experiments of the "brain trust" combined. There should not be a single Republican objection to the continuation of the R. F. C., because it was a Republican measure which we are justly proud of, and we deserve the credit for bringing it into existence. It differs vastly from the New Deal policies of squandering and wasting the people's money on such vagaries as the Resettlement Administration and the other New Deal systems of bounties, bonuses, and cash payments of all kinds. The R. F. C. loaned money on sound collateral, and most of it will be paid back or recovered. That is a sound Republican policy, in contrast to the New Deal policy of subsidizing everyone and piling debt upon debt by borrowing billions and still more billions.

Mr. Chairman, the President in his inaugural address used these words:

> I see one-third of a Nation ill-housed, ill-clad, and ill-nourished.

It seems to me that is an indictment of the New Deal. After 4 years of the New Deal the President goes before the American people and practically says: "I see 40,000,000 American people ill-housed, ill-clad, and ill-nourished in a country that is the granary of the world."

How does he reconcile the statement that there are 40,000,000 American people ill-clad and ill-nourished when he urged and jammed through Congress a program of scarcity, a program of destruction of crops, the plowing under of crops such as cotton, wheat, and foodstuffs, and the slaughtering of 6,000,000 pigs? This program of birth control of pigs and destruction of food crops and cotton has caused at least 2,000,000 breadwinners to join the army of unemployed. It has brought economic disaster to at least 6,000,000 Americans.

We on this side believe that we can have a program of abundance instead of scarcity. We believe that there are enough foodstuffs produced in America so that 40,000,000 American people shall not be ill-nourished. This is the richest farming Nation in the world, and there is no excuse for permitting 40,000,000 of our people to be undernourished.

Turning back for a moment to the R. F. C. and to one particular loan made by the R. F. C. to sell cotton to Soviet Russia. I direct the attention of gentlemen from Southern States, where cotton is king, to that loan. What did Russian propagandists say? They stated, "If you will recognize Soviet Russia, we will buy $200,000,000 worth of cotton from the Southern States." Prior to that time, or about the same time, they made the additional statement, "We propose to do a billion dollars' worth of business with you if you recognize us." This was the juicy bait held out to the international bankers and industrialists.

Then the big bankers of New York jumped on the band wagon and demanded recognition. As Lenin said, "The capitalists will commit suicide for temporary profit."

Then they made the cotton appeal to the Southern States and all the Baptists and Methodists and others jumped on the bandwagon, in spite of the fact they hated the very idea of recognition on religious grounds. They also grabbed the bait or promise to buy $200,000,000 worth of cotton from the Southern States. Now, what are the facts? The facts are that under Republican administrations Soviet Russia bought from America over $100,000,000 worth of commodities a year and since recognition they have bought approximately $20,000,000, and in 1935 they bought $3,500,000 worth of cotton—not $200,000,000 worth—and they borrowed the entire $3,500,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to put through the deal. This is what you have gotten from recognition and from the promises and pledges given by Commissar Litvinoff.

I cannot get a great deal alarmed about the contention made by the Republicans that the President should not have certain powers to limit and liquidate the R. F. C. and the different agencies. It seems to me if words mean anything this is exactly what is proposed in the bill—to expedite liquidation of the R. F. C. and, primarily, of these other loaning agencies. In business we have trustees appointed. You cannot have the whole Congress appointed, so we appoint in this bill the President as a sort of trustee to expedite liquidation where liquidation is necessary. Let us, for example, take the Export-Import Bank. It is doing no business at all. Jesse Jones said before the committee that it is not doing as much business as you would do in your vest pocket. Why should all these deserving Democrats continue to hold jobs down there at fancy salaries and not do any business? Is this Democratic efficiency? Is this New Deal honesty and economy in government? Of course, the President or somebody should have power to put an end to the Export-Import Bank. If the Congress will not do it, then let us give the power to the President to do it. I would like to see it done right now by the Congress, and if anybody offers such an amendment I shall vote for it.

It is a little different with the Commodity Credit Corporation. I tried to ask the distinguished chairman of our committee a question. I think he perhaps knew in advance what the question was going to be. I was going to ask him, coming from a Southern State, how the Commodity Credit Corporation was going to get rid of the 3,000,000 bales of cotton it had? How are they going to dump it on the market without destroying the price of cotton?

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I will yield to the gentleman in a moment.

Mr. FULMER. I want to give the gentleman some information.

Mr. FISH. I do not see how we can put an end to it without ruining the cotton market, but I will say that it is a direct result of the A. A. A. program and the destruction and plowing under of cotton. We have lost half of our world market in our cotton export trade, the greatest single American export, amounting to over $100,000,000 a year. This has been thrown overboard. Of course, then we had to have a Commodity Credit Corporation to take up the surplus cotton. We have the surplus now. What are we going to do with it? In the end the Government will probably have to pay for it, but the net result is we have lost half of the world cotton market to Brazil, Egypt, China, various South American countries, and also to Soviet Russia. We have already lost this wealth and probably the rest of our world cotton market will vanish.

If I had my way, I would take this surplus cotton in the Commodity Credit Corporation and sell it on the world market in Liverpool for whatever it would bring—5 cents a pound, 6 cents a pound, or 7 cents a pound—and bring this wealth back to the United States and distribute it among the farmers.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question at this point?

Mr. FISH. For a brief question.

Mr. FULMER. May I state to the gentleman from New York that the Corporation now is being begged by the exporters and the domestic consumers of cotton to put this cotton on the market, and we can sell it today at a premium of from one-half cent to 1 cent a pound? Cotton is actually selling on the market at a price of from 12½ to 13 cents a pound.

Mr. FISH. I will say to the gentleman that if this Corporation attempted to unload that cotton, amounting to 3,000,000 bales, the entire cotton market would collapse, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman forgets the record of last year. The Commodity Credit Corporation disposed of a large portion of its cotton without ruining the market.

Mr. FISH. You cannot keep on buying cotton at high prices and then selling it without wrecking the domestic market. You have this cotton on your hands, and the sooner we stop buying any more the better.

I have the greatest admiration and respect for the Honorable Jesse Jones, and if you Democrats decide to make him your candidate for President it would suit me. [Applause.] He was the nominee of a Republican President when he went on the R. F. C. Board. When the R. F. C. was established it was assumed it would be a nonpartisan organization. President Hoover appointed another Democrat at the head of it, Senator Atlee Pomerene.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 more minutes.

Mr. Jesse Jones was appointed as a director by the Republicans. It was a bona-fide, nonpartisan organization, but, unfortunately, it is not so any longer.

President Roosevelt has deliberately violated the nonpartisan requirements, which call for a nonpartisan board, giving the minority party bona-fide representation. The President has put on the board not Republicans that represent the Republican Party but former Republicans, who have deserted the party and who supported the President. So today we have not any real Republicans on the board. [Applause.]

If you think it is the proper thing to violate the spirit and intent of the law by filling the board with Democrats and deserving Republicans, you have the power to do so. But it destroys the very essence of nonpartisanship, and is done in violation of law. If you can do it with this board you can do it with all boards, but I would remind you what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

The Republicans have not protested, because they have not got the votes to compel an investigation, but President Roosevelt has been ignoring the law and the rights of the minority party in an autocratic and high-handed manner, utterly violating traditional policies and violating the law by appointing on various nonpartisan boards former Republicans who have deserted their party and who do not represent the Republican Party today.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. For a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. How about the $90,000,000 loan to General Dawes?

Mr. FISH. That was done by Jesse Jones and Senator Pomerene, both Democrats, and the gentleman better refer to them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. It was done under Hoover.

Mr. FISH. As I have said the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was originated by the Republicans and the best thing the Democrats have done to get us out of the depression was to use this Republican vehicle providing for loans to be made on sound collateral. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK].

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, it seems to me that the question before us is a very simple one. It merely makes possible a continuation of the activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and four of its affiliates or subsidiaries which are instrumentalities through which it functions and operates. The activities of the Corporation and its constructive accomplishments are so well known that I deem it unnecessary to engage in any long-drawn-out or exhaustive discussion of the resolution providing for the extension of its life to June 30, 1939. In my judgment, it has been perhaps the most effective force in the recovery program of the country during the Roosevelt administration, though I recognize that two other agencies have played major parts.

The Corporation was set up in 1932, when the Senate was controlled by the Republican Party and the House by the Democratic Party. At no time, however, has the Corporation's policy been tainted with political partisanship. It has kept true and loyal to its original purpose and in its execution has touched helpfully the business life of practically every community in our country. When first established it was more or less a negative force designed to end the panicky feeling in business circles and to halt the deflationary processes which were undermining the mechanics and structure of our business and financial institutions. With conditions growing worse in the latter part of 1932 and the early part of 1933, it became necessary to increase the powers of the Corporation and extend its lending policy in many ways which are familiar to practically every Member of the House. The results of its operations cannot be fully told or reflected by its operating statement, which shows a profit of more than $150,000,000. Independent of the allocations made by it for relief purposes, it has authorized more than eight and one-half billions of dollars in loans, approximately six and one-quarter billions of which has actually been disbursed. It is quite significant, however, that under the efficient, sound, and humane leadership of its distinguished chairman these loans were made in such a way that approximately 70 percent in amount have been collected, and today there is only approximately a billion, nine hundred million dollars in loans outstanding. It will be impossible for me to even review the various activities carried on by the Corporation; to those who desire this information, it is available in the various reports made by the Corporation to the Congress.

To those who would criticize the Corporation's failure to make certain loans, I would suggest a careful reading of the language of the original act and amendments thereto under which these loans can be made. Its original lending powers were confined to the key institutions, such as banks, railroads, insurance companies, and building and loan associations, not primarily, however, for the purpose of aiding the larger institutions but because it was recognized that through help to these institutions the greatest number of our people engaged in business pursuits could be assisted and, in many instances, saved. Notwithstanding all of the statements that have been made here today, undertaking to create the impression that the Corporation's activities have been aimed toward helping the big corporations, I know of my own knowledge that the small business concerns have been accorded the same consideration by the management as is accorded the most powerful corporation or bank in the country. Every application is considered on its merits, and there has at no time under the present management been any disposition to prefer one applicant over another.

From the argument presented by several gentlemen of the committee, there seems to be some question with respect to the effect of the proviso in the first section of the resolution. It is my opinion that nothing in this proviso is designed to change the present policy of the Corporation. The President now has the right, without finding any facts, to terminate any one of the lending agencies. That right is certainly broad enough to include the right of the President, upon ascertainment of certain facts, to suspend the operations of any phase of its lending activities. It seems to me that the new provision preserves rather than destroys the powers of the legislative branch of the Government. In other words, under the provisions of the instant bill, the President would not have to terminate the lending activities to any class of borrowers, but could merely "suspend" the same in the interest of economy and in keeping with the policy of the administration to withdraw its lending activities as rapidly as conditions in the country warrant.

It should be called to the attention of the Committee that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the past year has spent most of its time trying to encourage and persuade private lending institutions to take the loans which they have been asked to take, and, in numerous instances, the mere fact that the Corporation was in position to make the loans has influenced private institutions to make them. This Corporation has been handled in such a sound, conservative, and efficient manner that its approval of a loan carries with it such weight that private institutions are ready to step in and take its place. This will continue as its present policy. There could be no better proof of this than the fact that during the past year its collections or repayments have exceeded its loans and commitments by approximately $736,000,000. Notwithstanding the irrelevant, and I am sure unintentionally misleading, statements made by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] with respect to loans to aid small businesses, the record will show that of the $169,000,000 authorized for direct loans to industry and small business enterprises, a large number of these loans have ranged from $500 and $1,000 to $100,000. I think the average loan runs around $70,000, and by eliminating several of the larger loans, the average would be approximately $50,000. This is certainly in keeping with this section of the bill and the wishes of Congress in enacting the same. It might be interesting to the membership of the House to compare the R. F. C.'s record of direct loans to industry with the record of the Federal Reserve banks, who are not even lending their own money. Some of you will remember that there was a working agreement made between the Federal Reserve banks and the Treasury with respect to the $139,000,000 of earnings taken from them and used for the subscription of stock to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. I am confident that there is no justification for any fear that the present management, or the President of the United States, would take any action with respect to the lending activities of this institution which could under any condition jeopardize the rights of small business enterprises to continue their operations. Mr. Jones has made it very clear that he feels that this agency, with its splendid machinery for aiding business when it cannot be aided otherwise, should be kept intact and serve as a "stand-by" agency for the protection of the small, worthy businessman. We should not forget, however, that Congress itself made the management of this great institution a trustee of the taxpayers' money and required that its lending policy should be predicated upon sound business principles.

The second section of this bill merely extends the life of the four subsidiary or affiliate corporations through which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation extends its effective service to beneficiaries otherwise ineligible under the act creating the parent corporation. All of them are instrumentalities through which the R. F. C. functions and operates. They are almost entirely dependent upon the backing of the R. F. C.

The Electric Home and Farm Authority was organized for the purpose of aiding the administration's low-rate and high-volume electric-power policy. It in a measure implements the Rural Electrification Administration, Tennessee Valley Authority, and the Public Works Administration programs. It is a credit institution, operated efficiently and conservatively, and has accomplished much in reducing the rate of interest on installment sales of electric appliances to people who could not pay cash for the same. It will not operate in any territory where power rates are excessive.

The Commodity Credit Corporation has been a great aid in the financing and holding off the market of agricultural products which would otherwise have been forced on the market at sacrifice prices.

The Export-Import Bank is being continued for the purpose of aiding the exportation of American products.

The R. F. C. mortgage company is doing a useful work in refinancing distressed business properties.

According to my information, each one of these affiliate organizations is operating at a profit, with the exception of the Commodity Credit Corporation. This organization, however, would show a reasonable profit but for the loss which it will incur as a result of its guaranty of 12 cents for the price of cotton. The small amount of loss, however, in connection with the operations of this Corporation will be considered negligible in the light of the benefit which it has extended to thousands of tobacco, corn, and cotton growers throughout the United States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not desire to interfere with the tenor of the gentleman's remarks by interrupting him at an inopportune moment, and I assure the gentleman the interruption is not an unfriendly one. Has the Committee on Banking and Currency received from the officials of these subsidiary corporations any report or statement showing accurately their present financial set-up and status?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. We have received the annual report for the year 1936 of the Electric Farm and Home Authority and the Export-Import Bank. I do not believe that a report of the operations of the RFC Mortgage Co. or the Commodity Credit Corporation has been filed with the committee. These may be included in the annual statement of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. However, the information given to me by the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, if my memory serves me correctly, is that the Export-Import Bank shows a profit today of between four and five hundred thousand dollars. The financial statement of the Electric Home and Farm Authority shows that since it has been operated under the supervision of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation it has overcome its early loss and now reflects a profit of approximately $50,000. The financial operations of the Mortgage Co. could not be definitely determined at this time, or until its present loans have been liquidated. It is safe to assume, however, that it is operating at a profit.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the gentleman will permit an observation—I find in the RECORD, page 254, of January 15, in a speech delivered by the Senator from Virginia, Senator BYRD, a very interesting statement of the assets and liabilities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. In that statement we find, of course, accurately set forth the sums of money which the R. F. C. has advanced to these subsidiary corporations in order to finance them. The statement of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is very instructive and informative, and, incidentally, I believe, with the exception of certain items, very encouraging; but I am wondering if the Congress has anything like complete knowledge of the financial condition of the subsidiary corporations at this time. I do not mean to criticize unduly the members of the committee. I know you have been hurried in this matter; but it is rather a pity that the Committee on Banking and Currency has not been able to give us a report in the normal fashion, showing just where these corporations stand.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Of course, I am just one member of the committee. I want to say, however, that in the consideration of this bill we have not been needlessly rushed. I think the activities of these organizations, and their financial result, are within the knowledge of all members of the committee. Hearings were conducted in the regular manner before the committee and later printed, and may be available to every Member. Of course, if the gentleman from New York desired additional information, he could secure it quite quickly by contacting officials of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In other words, the Committee on Banking and Currency puts the membership of the House on notice that it must find its own information?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Not at all. I did not mean to leave such an impression. If the information which we have and which we are presenting to you does not, however, satisfy your purpose, then you could make your own inquiry. That is the point I intended to make.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, and for the benefit of the Members of the House, I desire to state that the measure before us was unanimously reported to the House by the Committee on Banking and Currency. It was also unanimously reported by the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency. The Senate passed the bill in its present language and without an amendment last week, with but one dissenting vote. I want to make this statement merely for the purpose of reflecting the almost universal approval of the work of this Corporation. I venture the assertion that notwithstanding certain criticisms which have been directed toward this measure, and particularly section 2 thereof, there is not a Member of this House, regardless of his political affiliations, who has received since coming to Congress or, for that matter, before he left home, a single letter or request from a financial institution in his district or from a single individual constituent suggesting or urging that he oppose the passage of this measure. If no exception or contradiction is made to this assertion, it will be very difficult for me to understand how any man wanting to represent his constituency could oppose its passage. Though I may be wrong, I also believe that when the roll is called he will be a lonesome man who answers "nay."

Though we know that we are on the high road to recovery and better times in this country, we can by no means afford to discard the safeguards until some of our work has been tested in terms of normal conditions. The Chairman of the Corporation has on a number of occasions made it clear that the future policy of the Corporation will be to assist and encourage applicants in getting their loans from private sources where possible rather than by making them through the R. F. C.; and the mere fact that the Corporation is in position to make the loans enables it in many instances to get private sources to do so. I therefore feel that it is not only wise and expedient but also good public policy to keep these agencies with their splendid machinery intact and geared to meet any emergency which might arise in the near future. The fact that it is here and ready to come to the assistance or rescue of any eligible borrower creates confidence in our financial institutions in their effort to extend their operations and increase their activities. In the language of the distinguished Chairman, it will serve primarily as a "stand-by" agency to insure the citizenship of our country that every legitimate and sound business enterprise, both small and large, will be protected, and that when necessary the Government will step in to prevent a hold-up by unscrupulous and selfish lending agencies. As long as this agency is in existence we may be assured that eligible, worthy enterprises will not be subjected, in their financing programs, to unreasonable rates of interest or unfair terms of borrowing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK] has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I have been trying with some difficulty to find out, if possible, the value of the securities which may now be credited to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I spent some little time in the matter immediately after the President's Budget message was read. I am pleased that the genial Representative from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] was able to call your attention to a speech made last Friday by that Senator who now has a wet blanket over him without being ruled out of order.

You will recall that when I gave notice that I would like to make reference to the Senator's other speech made over the radio, I was told that I would be out of order. I am sure enough has been said to make you read the speech under discussion. I had prepared a very similar statement, several days before, after giving long attention to several recent Budget messages. I had called the Bureau of the Budget and asked an explanation of the bookkeeping as carried in the Budget statement. I have received a reply with a practical acknowledgment that the public at large are told in the financial statements of the Treasury that there are about two billion dollars worth of assets in our Treasury that are worthless; yet the public is daily furnished these statements by that Department, setting forth as assets valueless notes of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Of course there can be no denying this; but what surprises me is that while the Senator suggested that the Treasury should evaluate and give a proper picture of the real value of these holdings, I was informed, as I recall it, that Congress has to authorize the Treasurer to cancel this worthless paper.

Our gross debt is about $35,000,000,000. We can read that every day. We are supposed to have $17,000,000,000 worth of assets. The daily statement says so. Twelve billion dollars' worth of foreign obligations. We place but little value on those. As to the other five billion, what are they?

The President said in his message just the other day—and I refer to the recent platitudinous inaugural message:

> Government can obtain justified support and legitimate criticism when the people receive true information of all Government doings.

Well, perhaps I cannot give legitimate criticism, when there is no true information. What a pity. "Echoes of the last campaign," says the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. REILLY]. He can take it thus if he wants it, but your great President, speaking at Pittsburgh last October, and duplicating a performance of 4 years ago, setting forth the finances of the Nation, told the country that Hoover's deficit in 3 years was $3,000,000,000. He acknowledged that $2,000,000,000 of it was recoverable. He acknowledged that he himself had a deficit of $13,000,000,000, but claimed $6,000,000,000 recoverable. He knew better than that. God knows, he must have known better then. For there was $2,000,000,000 that he claimed that had actually been given away by the R. F. C. under his directions. I want the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. REILLY] to call this a campaign echo if he desires. I am talking about assets, represented by notes of the R. F. C., that have vanished. Here is another remarkable statement. The President told the country in the same speech that over $1,500,000,000 went for the payment of the World War veterans' bonus that year, instead of in 1945; that in consequence "the payment is now out of the way and is no longer a future obligation of the Government." I will read it to you again: "That payment is now out of the way and no longer a future obligation of the Government." The obligation was not due for 10 years, but by and through insistence we borrowed money to pay it; then can I tell my constituents that this obligation is now "out of the way"? We still owe that sum, and largely in short-term notes. What a speech.

Six billion dollars recoverable when he must have known there were really less than $4,000,000,000; that the R. F. C. had actually given away about $2,000,000,000; yet they carried that $6,000,000,000 as assets!

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. REILLY. Does the gentleman contend that we will have to pay the soldiers' bonus again?

Mr. GIFFORD. We borrowed the money. Most certainly we shall have to repay it.

Mr. REILLY. I mean the Government.

Mr. GIFFORD. That sort of absurd statement reminds me of something not a whit more silly—the story of the lady whose husband gave her a check to cash at the bank. She went to do it, and the teller said, "You must endorse it."

"What do you mean?"

"Put your name on it, so your husband will know you used it."

On the back of the check she wrote: "Dear Jimmy, I am now at the bank getting the money. Lots of kisses. Jennie." [Laughter.]

Some day I may take the time to deal more fully with that speech of the President; and I may read and comment on Hoover's reply made 2 weeks later—the answer of a man who knew what he was talking about, and who proved his case, but a man to whom the public somehow just would not listen.

No; the President of the United States is clothed with an aurora, and it remains for us of the minority to speak plainly, though we suffer the weariness of futility. I have to speak to an idolatrous country. [Laughter.] The name of Jesse Jones is synonymous with R. F. C. I believe in them both, thoroughly. But the test of our Government is here and now. When, during an emergency, we shall have brought into being certain necessary unusual powers of government, can we, when the emergency is over, have we, the courage to divorce ourselves from them and return to our former faith in our own citizens to carry on the banking and credit business of the Nation?

Ponder over the words of President Aldrich, of the Chase National Bank, which appeared in the papers this morning, "The whole subject of government lending agencies should be thoroughly reconsidered", read his warning of too low interest rates. The pending bill provides that the President, when and if he thinks there is enough of private credit available at rates that are satisfactory—get that—may discontinue these agencies. As long as this Government is in the market to borrow huge sums of money the rates have got to be fair, which may mean dangerously low ones. Why, the emergency is over so far as credit facilities go. You know it. The banks are bursting with money eager for reinvestment. What reason can we now assign for further Government credits? However, you too well know the Commodity Credit Corporation will take care of cotton and tobacco and willingly lose money doing it. It will be a permanent thing. You will probably never get rid of it. Nor will you get rid of the Export-Import Bank. We thought Russia was going to do such a flourishing business with us. That is why we established the Export-Import Bank. You will continue it because currencies are so unstable and we can let the Government agencies lose whenever private lenders will not take such chances on sales to foreign nations. Let us keep the machinery there although it is not doing anything.

Rural electrification! That is splended. The Government will lend money and at a lower rate than can private bankers, so we must continue that.

Referring again to our assets. Not only is that $2,000,000,000 gone but another $1,000,000,000 is probably gone as well, since, I think you will agree, with a contingent indebtedness of $4,700,000,000, there will be at least a 20-percent loss on those other activities that have been nursed along by the Government. Let the President not again tell his people that he has $6,000,000,000 recoverables. Rather tell them the truth so that legitimate criticism may be accepted. While the people are kept in the dark criticism may appear to be not legitimate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. It is safe to assume now that the Republicans are worried about this administration?

Mr. GIFFORD. That is a funny question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. No; it is not funny at all. Nobody else worries about it. We thought possibly the gentleman might be worried.

Mr. GIFFORD. Evidently if the Republicans did not worry, nobody would. We have, very definitely, something to worry about. The gentleman knows there is a debt of $35,000,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. I do.

Mr. GIFFORD. Does the gentleman have any hope that at any time within the immediate future we can reduce it by even $1,000,000,000? No. We are to have the Budget balanced in 1938. But the balance is already budgeted, so there is not a dollar to reduce the debt. This ought to be your worry, the responsibility not being upon us. As I have stated before, I shall try to be happy, but for a time must stew with you in your juice.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. We are not worried about the Budget.

Mr. GIFFORD. Who is "we"?

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Just the common people; not the Republicans.

Mr. GIFFORD. I do not think the so-called common people are worrying. They do not understand the facts, and depend so largely on what their idol tells them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. All we are worried about in Minnesota is to get enough to eat, and we have not been getting it in the last 3 years.

Mr. GIFFORD. The bill will be presented to your people just the same. Santa Claus came and left his presents and we were happy. But when he comes back to collect we are not going to like him.

Mr. Chairman, our democracy, having set up these agencies in an emergency, has not courage enough to divorce them when the emergency is over and trust private initiative to perform as it did before. Today we fail in the test.

Mr. Chairman, a committee has been appointed to reorganize the Government departments and bureaus, and this would seem to be a deliberate attempt to postpone the whole business still another 2 years. Why not extend this for 1 year? Why the necessity for 2 years? Do you desire the reorganization of our Government to go over 2 years? Certainly it would seem so by this vote today.

I would deem it a remarkable moment on the floor of the House if I could ever see any of these agencies abolished. It would seem that if this new committee should come in and recommend the abolition of any of these things, its recommendation would hardly prevail. The future does not look bright so far as doing away with any of these things is concerned.

Mr. Chairman, my time is about up. I again repeat the sad fact that he told us he had $6,000,000,000 of recoverables. We find he has only three billions.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it true that the R. F. C. is disposing of its holdings in Federal Housing mortgages and some of its bonds and debentures?

Mr. GIFFORD. I am glad the gentleman put his finger on that. We are extending the time that the capital stock subscribed may stay within the Corporation, with all the funds they have on hand and all they may borrow. These agencies may still be used to harass private business and bankers, who now have credit facilities in abundance. I am quite willing to extend the life of the R. F. C. for 1 year, but am not willing, with the information at hand, to continue the others included in this bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, twice this week I have had occasion to take the floor in the temper of Mark Anthony, who came to bury Caesar, not to praise him. Today I go into reverse and come to praise Caesar, not to bury him. The Caesar I praise is Jesse Jones and his empire is the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

It is idle to repeat what everybody knows, that this has been the most successful agency used to meet the depression. Its record is clean. Its performance has been marvelous. No other attempt to meet the crisis has matched it in importance, value, or integrity. Everything in it we should commend.

It might be well to stop there, but I find myself unable to refrain from taking a moment or two for expanding some of the things the gentleman from New York said, because of them I can say: "All of them I saw, and part of them I was."

Early in October 1931, as one of the older members of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I was summoned to the White House, together with 30 or so other men, about half from each party, including the Speaker of the House, the Presiding Officer of the Senate, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Under Secretary, the older members of two committees in the Congress, expected to take action upon what President Hoover recommended. He had succeeded in meeting one crisis with the moratorium on foreign debts. He was faced with a second. "And now it can be said." He told us that night unless we undertook to pass the legislation he desired every bank in the country would close its doors within 2 weeks. Never in our time did a more fateful emergency face the people of the United States.

He asked us three things. He asked men on both sides if they would support him in these recommendations: One was the creation of the agency that became the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Another was increasing the power of the Federal Reserve System in matter of loans. The third was relief of depositors in closed banks. We unanimously agreed to secure for him these things at the earliest possible moment. He had saved the day in the summer with the moratorium on foreign loans. The morning after our meeting the public was told what he now contemplated and another emergency was met.

When Congress came together we did take speedy action on two of those things. We laid the foundation for what later became the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and we provided the legislation for extending the powers of the Federal Reserve System.

In his message when Congress assembled the President added two things for saving the situation. One of them was to strengthen the Federal land bank. The other was the home loan bank bill.

The House had by that time come under Democratic control. The pledge of the leading Democrats in the House and Senate had been that all three things urged by the President in October should be acted upon as quickly as possible. What happened? As I said, two of them were speedily enacted into law. The bill for relief of depositors in closed banks met a different fate. Although it was pressed for action, for months we could not get a hearing by the committee. Other months passed; a year and a half passed; and there came only slight action, to be made adequate still a year later.

Mr. Chairman, it was 2½ years before we finally secured that which Democrats and Republicans alike had pledged.

The home loan bank bill was not enacted till half a year had passed. Reform of the banking system as a whole did not come until more than 2 years after Mr. Roosevelt was inaugurated.

Yet in recent discussions on the stump throughout the country it has been said that the responsibility for the final crisis was that of President Hoover and the Republican Party. I deny it! I charge inexcusable delay after the Democrats gained control.

Let me return to happier thoughts, those aroused by the pending resolution. It means that our best agency in fighting the depression shall have further opportunity to wind up its affairs. I doubt if there is a man in the House who is going to vote against the general purpose of this resolution. Amendments may be offered and there may be differences of opinion thereon, but upon the main purpose of the resolution itself we are agreed, and I thank heaven that there is now here a Democratic House willing to act quickly.

I believe in adequate discussion. I do not think we should go at these things with undue haste. I think all aspects ought to be presented, but when questions of this sort come along there ought to be action now, just as in 1932 there ought to have been action. Imagine, if you can, the worry and the anxiety of those of us who were trying to do something for the relief of depositors in closed banks when day after day and week after week, months passed into years before there was a carrying out of the full pledge that had been made to the American people.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. HOUSTON. Was the Republican Party very much in favor of the Federal Insurance of Deposits Act, and does not the gentleman think it has been a good thing?

Mr. LUCE. I do.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then why did the Republican leadership want to repeal it during the last campaign?

Mr. LUCE. I can answer for nobody but myself.

Mr. HOUSTON. Your leader, Mr. Landon, wanted to repeal it.

Mr. LUCE. Unfortunately, I am not a leader——

Mr. HOUSTON. Landon was the leader.

Mr. LUCE. Point the finger at somebody else, but not at me.

Mr. HOUSTON. I did, and so did 27,000,000 people in this country.

Mr. LUCE. Let me inform the gentleman that not all of them were in my district. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman is fortunate.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. REILLY. I know that my colleague was always in favor of guaranteeing bank deposits, but is it not a fact that the Republican Party in its platform of 1932 declared against the guaranteeing of bank deposits?

Mr. LUCE. The Republican Party occasionally has a lapse from good sense. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Has the gentleman been cognizant of any appearance on this floor of any member of the Banking and Currency Committee who has had the temerity to say that Mr. Roosevelt was for the Federal Insurance Deposit Corporation Act until it was forced on him on the 16th of June, 1933, by the overwhelming vote of this House?

Mr. LUCE. I will give opportunity to any Democrat here to answer that question.

Mr. GIFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, I have the facts right here showing he was forced into it, and I want to suggest right here that, to my utter amazement, my friend the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] signed a postal that was sent to all of us stating how President Roosevelt favored and put over the guaranteeing of bank deposits. It was utterly ridiculous. He had to be forced into it.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I believe the gentleman referred to the conditions obtaining when the banks closed under the administration of Mr. Hoover. I wonder if the gentleman will tell us what brought about the conditions leading up to the closing of the banks? [Applause.]

Mr. LUCE. It is a long story. I will give only the closing paragraph of the closing chapter. The refusal of Franklin D. Roosevelt to cooperate with President Hoover.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield for just a brief question?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. HOUSTON. Whatever became of Mr. Hoover? [Laughter.]

Mr. LUCE. He was given an opportunity to present to the people of the United States a great deal of good advice which I wish the gentleman had had sense enough to follow. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE].

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, I think we should hark back to the last administration and consider the history of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. We will admit that its creation was originally a Republican measure. What was its original purpose?

It was to furnish assistance to the great banks, to the insurance companies, to the railroads, and there it stopped. It seems to me that has been the basic philosophy of the Republican Party, a philosophy that has brought them to their present low estate—that if the great are taken care of the benefits will drip down upon the ordinary man and woman and they can take care of themselves.

All the developments, all the extensions of the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are expansions and developments that came under the Democratic administration.

You hesitate to give the President control of the functions that were created largely through his influence and in his administration. What is the power given the President under this bill? It is as follows:

Provided, That in order to facilitate the withdrawal of the credit activities of the Corporation when from time to time during such period the President finds, upon a report of the Board of Directors of the Corporation or otherwise, that credit for any class of borrowers to which the Corporation is authorized to lend is sufficiently available from private sources to meet legitimate demands upon fair terms and rates, the President may authorize the Director to suspend the exercise by the Corporation of any such lending authority for such time or times as he may deem advisable.

That limits rather than extends his powers. The President before action on his part must find what conditions and facts exist. Do you not believe that you can trust him to find these facts honestly when it was his influence and that of his party that made these extensions and enlargements of the powers of the Corporation?

I think there is no reason at all to give any consideration to the objections raised here because of the alleged enlargement of the power of the President.

He can at the present time by his ipse dixit, by a scratch of the pen, destroy this organization. That power is not increased by this amendment.

I believe that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as operated under this administration has been one of the most beneficent of the agencies of the Government. Every member of our committee I am sure has respect and confidence and admiration for the Chairman, Jesse Jones. He is able, genuine, and apparently sincere in all his acts and conduct. When he does not know, he will tell you that he does not know, a thing very unusual in those connected with most of our bureaus. He always gives us the information that he has with clarity and frankness. He has operated this great organization with great ability. It has rendered a great service to the American people, and I venture to say that those who denounce it on the floor will, if it comes to a record vote, vote for it on a roll call, because all Members, whatever they may say here, are responsive to the will of their constituents, and they know that the people at home want a continuance of the functions of this great Corporation. If it does not function in the future, it can at least stand by and be helpful, because those who may need its help will know that it is there to help in time of need. In the homely language of Chairman Jones, it is a shotgun in the corner, and it will be serviceable even though it may never be used. It may be that we will not need some of the activities of this organization again, but the mere fact that it still may function will give confidence to the business, the commercial, and agricultural interests of our people. [Applause.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman who just preceded me referred to the extension of the loaning powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purpose of serving the people. This is wholly in keeping with the spirit of the President's address the other day when he said:

The test of our progress is not whether we add more to the abundance of those who have much; it is whether we provide enough for those who have too little.

I rise to bring to your attention an omission in the time extension of the loaning powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in behalf of "those who have too little", and to bring before you a plea that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation be permitted again to loan money to school districts for the payment of teachers' salaries.

I come from South Dakota. I am getting reports repeatedly from school boards in my district that they are unable to pay their teachers' salaries because their cash funds are depleted and there is no market for their warrants and they are salable only at exceedingly large discounts.

In various districts the school board is obliged to advertise for teachers and let the job to the lowest bidder. Then the lowest bidder takes the salary warrants and tries to find a market for them. When they are a year and a half or 2 years or 4 years behind, you can imagine what that does. Some of you also know what this does to the kind of schooling that is offered and to the attempt to raise the standards of teacher training.

In the President's address he also said:

I see millions denied education, recreation, and the opportunity to better their lot and the lot of their children.

* * * * * * *

It is not in despair that I paint you that picture. I paint it for you in hope—because the Nation, seeing and understanding the injustice in it, proposes to paint it out.

* * * * * * *

If I know aught of the spirit and purpose of our Nation, we will not listen to comfort, opportunism, and timidity. We will carry on.

I trust I may be recognized at the proper time to offer an amendment that will extend, in similar purpose, the powers of the R. F. C. to loan money to school districts for the payment of teachers' salaries.

We are loaning money to banks and railroads and shipping companies. We are extending the time to handle cotton loans and extending the power to loan money to mining corporations, all of which has justification, but may be speculative. Some of you may suspect, and I happen to know, that in spite of the best engineering report some mining projects may not pay out. And some of you may also know that loans to banks and to insurance companies may not all be paid back. In short, we are loaning to those who are in business to make money and have a chance to profit largely just because there is uncertainty in their operations.

But there is no uncertainty, no speculation in buying tax-guaranteed warrants for teachers' salaries. The R. F. C.'s marvelous record for collection of loans was most remarkable when it loaned money to school districts. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], the dean of the House, I understand, was successful in getting loans extended to the school districts of the city of Chicago, with the result that long-overdue salaries were paid. That borrowing was paid back within 4 months, because a market was established. Private lending agencies readily bought the salary obligations when the R. F. C. recognized them.

But the power expired and was not renewed. In fact, it was specifically provided in the last session—Public, No. 325, section 2—when you did authorize loans to school districts for construction, that none of that authorization should apply for the purposes in the previous act—Public, No. 417, Seventy-third Congress, section 16—which was the payment of salaries.

Some of you may think that buildings constitute schools. I do not think so. The thing that makes the school is the teacher, and if you are going to penalize the teachers, you will penalize the children, the people for whom the President spoke, and for whom, I am sure, every Member in this body would speak were it called to his attention.

We are authorizing the extension of borrowing to speculate in the cotton market, we are authorizing the extension of borrowing to try to develop some trade with Russia through the Export-Import Bank. If those things can be done in the name of helping the common people, why can we not provide that teachers' salary warrants may be refinanced so that these warrants can be paid? This will restore the educational opportunity the President hoped for. It will insure and reward the training and quality of instruction which a fair opportunity demands.

Much has been said here this afternoon in tribute to the able Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Board. I wonder how many of you have read from the record that remarkable tribute from Mr. Jones to Eugene Schacher, the pilot to whom he gave credit for saving his life. If you have not, I commend it to you. It is the tribute of one man to another man. In this tribute Mr. Jones said:

When the door in the pilot room blew open and the flames were reaching into the cabin you came out and closed the door, going back into the furnace. Again the door flew open, so terrific was the speed, and again you came out, this time a human torch, closed the door and went back into the fiery pit. (Extension of remarks by Senator TOM CONNALLY, of Texas, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD Appendix, p. 13, Jan. 8, 1937.)

Then he goes on and explains how Schacher came back and warned the passengers against a rough landing and opened the door for them when his hands were burned to the bone; how he then went back and dragged Hefley from the burning cockpit.

At the conclusion Mr. Jones reverently said:

I pray God for the knowledge to understand for what purpose He saved my life by sacrificing yours.

May I, in all humility, suggest that possibly it was to give Mr. Jones and his organization the opportunity to establish a better basis for the finances of the common schools of the country and thereby to bring to other boys and girls something of the courage, devotion to duty, and spirit of sacrifice embodied in the life of Eugene Schacher.

Mr. Chairman, Schacher was the product of South Dakota schools, and so was the other pilot, Ed Hefley. Their families lived in South Dakota at the time of this tragedy. You may question the making of loans for certain purposes, but to make loans to produce schools which will train boys and give them that kind of a spirit is as worthy an object as any object for which you can loan money. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW].

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, I also yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Chairman, in the Seventy-second Congress I opposed the enactment of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation legislation. I did that because the group with which I was affiliated attempted to amend the act at that time so as to set aside and make it mandatory that 20 percent of the credit in the original set-up should be extended to those borrowing not more than $50,000. The amendment was defeated. I then voted against the passage of the measure.

Today I shall vote for an extension of the Corporation's activities. I realize that great good has come to the Nation by reason of the activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I also realize that there have been a great many abuses of that authority. It is my purpose today to place a safeguard against further abuses of that authority. At the proper time I will submit an amendment on page 2, line 10, to strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a colon and the following:

Provided further, That hereafter, except with the approval of the President in each case, the corporation shall not make any loan to any borrower if the aggregate amount of loans by the corporation to such borrower already exceeds $1,000,000, or would exceed $1,000,000 if such loan were made.

I propose this amendment for three reasons:

First. Because I have confidence in any man who has been elevated to the high position of Chief Executive of the United States.

Second. Because there is continual changing in the membership of the Board of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, a shifting that can be likened to the shifting of the sands.

Third. Because it is the loans of $1,000,000 and over that come to the attention of the people and are scrutinized. Therefore we must keep these loans above reproach if the people are to have confidence in us and the agencies of our Government.

I have in mind several abuses. Probably the most flagrant among these abuses was the loan granted to the Central Republic Trust Co., of Chicago, Ill. That loan of $90,000,000—$50,000,000 of which it is expected will be lost to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and to the Treasury of the United States——

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WITHROW. If the gentleman will please wait until I get through with my statement.

Certainly the circumstances surrounding this loan to the Central Republic Trust Co. are not above suspicion and reproach. What were the circumstances? This loan was negotiated shortly after the creation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

In passing, I may say I believe even President Hoover, as callous as he was to the conditions that existed in the country at that time, and as unmindful of the suffering of the people in these United States, even he, had he been forced to assume full responsibility for the making of this loan, would not have approved it.

Mr. Dawes was Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. He was likewise acting in a dual capacity as director of the Central Republic Trust Co.

He only acted as Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a period of a little over 4 months, and then resigned. Shortly after he resigned, and hardly had he gotten off the train at Chicago, Ill., when the newspapers blazed forth in headlines that the Central Republic Trust Co. of Chicago, Ill., had been granted a loan by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of $90,000,000, a substantial portion of which was made immediately available to them.

Are there any of us here today who are so innocent as to believe that General Dawes did not have something to do with the manipulations that were going on relative to the Central Republic loan at the time he was acting in the dual capacity as Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and as director of the Central Republic Trust Co., of Chicago, Ill.?

There is no gentleman, in my opinion, who can justify that loan. It is said that if that loan had not been granted the entire financial structure of the Northwest would have crumbled. There is no secrecy surrounding what happened to my people, the people of the Northwest. They were crucified with one bank failure after another. Today we have the unholy spactacle of the Government of the United States suing the stockholders of the Central Republic Trust Co., of Chicago, Ill., to get back a small portion of the moneys involved in this transaction.

The gentleman from Michigan very ably stated that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had shown a profit, a net profit of $160,000,000. That is very fine, but how much more of a profit could be shown had the General Dawes debauch not been permitted. How much more credit could have been extended to my people who were in dire need of it at that time? How much could the interest rate have been reduced on loans made to my people?

General Dawes was very much of a businessman while he was Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Oh, yes; indeed he was. He had two yardsticks. He had a yardstick that was used on the small banks. They came to the R. F. C. for loans. What did the Reconstruction Finance Corporation require of them? They granted them loans, it is true, yes; but what did they have to do to negotiate the loans? They had to deposit adequate collateral as security and then pay 5½ percent for the privilege of using the money. Neither the R. F. C. nor the Federal Government has lost money in its dealings with the small institutions throughout the United States; in fact, they have made money, and that is why the R. F. C. can now show a substantial profit.

It is reasonable to assume that inasmuch as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation required adequate collateral as security on loans made to the small banks that the Central Republic Trust Co. would be required likewise to supply adequate collateral to secure their loan.

That, indeed, was not the case. A substantial portion of the collateral securing the Central Republic Trust Co. loan consisted of Insull securities that are today hardly worth the paper they are written upon. [Applause.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, in view of what the gentleman from Wisconsin has said, I think it is interesting to note what Mr. Jones had to say about this so-called Dawes loan. We all admire Mr. Jones; we admire him because he is intellectually honest.

Before the Committee on Banking and Currency last year Mr. Jones said that he disclaimed no responsibility for the Dawes loan, so-called. Although he was not chairman of the board when the loan was made, he was a member of the board. He voted for the loan. He thought it was a good loan then; he still thought it was a good loan.

Instead of the losses being $50,000,000, he said that they know definitely the losses will be less than $10,000,000. He said further that if we were to have lost the whole $90,000,000, it would have been an almighty good investment on the part of the Federal Government, because it saved the depositors in the Seventh Federal Reserve District millions of dollars. [Applause.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, during the course of the debate it has been charged by Republican Members of the House and by Members of the Committee that the proviso in the first section of this bill gives the President additional powers and it gives him power to suspend types of loans to be made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. This charge is made by Republicans, and from what I have been able to gather from the debate the Democratic Members of the Committee on Banking and Currency agree that this proviso on the first section does give the President the power to suspend or to terminate various types of loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Possibly I am unable to read the English language understandingly, but I cannot agree with the statements made either by the Republican or the Democratic Members of the committee; because, as I read this proviso it does not substantially change existing law. I do not believe there is a member of this committee or a lawyer of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or anyone else who will claim that this proviso gives the President any more power than he has now; and I am at a loss to understand why the Republican and Democratic members of the Committee on Banking and Currency seem to agree that this language does give the President this additional power. I think the very distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK], made a statement with which we will all agree, that it has been the policy the Reconstruction Finance Corporation not to make loans where private capital was available; and I believe we will all agree that even though the law did not specifically require the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to desist from making loans under those circumstances, it has, nevertheless, been their policy to deny loans to applicants when money was available from private sources. If that were their policy, certainly they must have been authorized to deny that type of loan, certainly they must have had the power; and from the very nature of things we must assume they had the power to deny that type of loan.

Can any Member point out how this language gives additional power to the President to deal with this type of loan? The proviso reads substantially that when the President finds that credit for any class of borrowers to which the Corporation is authorized to lend is sufficiently available from private sources to meet legitimate demands upon fair terms and rates, the President may authorize the directors to suspend the exercise by the Corporation of any such lending authority.

The language of the pending bill merely states that the President can, if he finds there is sufficient private capital available, authorize the directors—not direct, but authorize the directors—to suspend the making of this type of loan. They already have the power and have been exercising it. Since the creation of the R. F. C. the board of directors have been exercising the power granted to them to deny loans when funds are available from private sources.

All this proviso of the pending bill does is to say that the President can authorize them to do a thing they have been doing for years. I cannot see the sense or necessity for this language, and I respectfully request some member of the committee to explain to the House the necessity for placing it in the bill. It seems to me to be entirely surplusage and that it should not be in the bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, Jesse Jones, of the R. F. C., has been highly praised by Members on both sides of the aisle today as a wonderful executive, a perfect gentleman, and a wonderful man. I agree with all this praise, because I like Mr. Jones; but I ask if any Member of this House having a small business in his district has received a loan from the R. F. C. to help keep labor working? I know I tried to secure loans from the R. F. C., especially for two manufacturing concerns in my district, one the H. B. Southwick leather factory, of Peabody, Mass., and the other the Sjostrom Lawrence Dye Works Co., but without success. Both of these industries had gone along for years, paid good wages, and kept people, among others, over the age of 50 at work, but they could not get a nickel out of the R. F. C. Mr. Sjostrom's concern had every prospect of business success, big orders and sound management for this coming year and presented a fine case to the R. F. C. Nevertheless, while other concerns less sound and with dubious prospects for success were taken care of in Massachusetts by the R. F. C., the Sjostrom and Southwick factories were left by the wayside, and as a result their employees will be thrown out of work.

Mr. Dawes got his $90,000,000. The railroads got their millions of dollars. Praise has been given the R. F. C. for its wonderful work in giving the Missouri Pacific millions of dollars to pay over to J. Pierpont Morgan. We want to know when the R. F. C. is going to begin to follow out the law that we enacted last year and take care of the small-business men of the United States who employ labor who need the work. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that last spring when we had flood and cyclone disasters certain loans were made to the people in these areas, and these loans not only saved the homes of laborers but furnished work to thousands and perhaps hundreds of thousands of laboring men.

Mr. CONNERY. That might be true of Mississippi, but it is not true in Massachusetts. W. P. A. took care of that; Mr. Hopkins, not Mr. Jones. We got very little out of Mr. Jones' R. F. C. organization.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Does the gentleman know that in his district the local committee as well as the agency of the R. F. C. reported favorably upon applications, but when they came to Washington they were turned down?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes. I am not talking about Mr. Joseph Carney's office at Boston. Mr. Carney's office understood the conditions and recommended favorably for these concerns. I am talking about Jesse Jones and the R. F. C. in Washington. R. F. C. headquarters at Washington seem to turn down anything that might help the little fellow. I would like to see them wake up and take care of the poor people of the United States. Never mind the Union Pacific, the Pennsylvania Railroad, and other big corporations. They are always well taken care of. Why not put into effect the intentions of Congress and protect the small-business man for a change?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Only 3 days ago I received a letter from a small industry thanking the R. F. C. and me for a loan that had been made. In that case the industry did employ labor, and I may say to the gentleman a number of the operatives were enabled to keep their homes as a result.

Mr. CONNERY. I am glad to hear that. It only proves what I have contended from the beginning—that, as far as loans to small industry are concerned, Mr. Jesse Jones is a fine Republican and the Members on the Republican side of the House can get somewhere with him, but we Democrats cannot get a thing. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, in the printed hearings of the testimony taken before the committee I have been given credit for a number of questions that were in fact asked by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN]. I ask unanimous consent that the printed hearings be corrected accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's request is not in order in the Committee of the Whole.

All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any other provision of law, until the close of business on June 30, 1939, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized to continue to perform all functions which it is authorized to perform under law, and the liquidation and winding up of the Corporation's affairs as provided for by section 13 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, are hereby postponed during the period that functions of the Corporation are continued pursuant to this act: Provided, That in order to facilitate the withdrawal of the credit activities of the Corporation when from time to time during such period the President finds, upon a report of the Board of Directors of the Corporation or otherwise, that credit for any class of borrowers to which the Corporation is authorized to lend is sufficiently available from private sources to meet legitimate demands upon fair terms and rates, the President may authorize the directors to suspend the exercise by the Corporation of any such lending authority for such time or times as he may deem advisable.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: On page 1, line 11, after the word "Act", strike out the remainder of line 11 and all of lines 1 to 10 on page 2.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, we have seen fit this afternoon to try to interpret this proviso of section 1 to mean we are limiting the power of the President over policies of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. However, a careful reading of this proviso reveals it does not repeal the existing law which gives the President authority to terminate the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, but, on the contrary, in addition to the power he now has to terminate the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, he is clothed with power, according to the interpretation placed upon this proviso by Mr. Alley, general counsel of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to direct the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to suspend any particular activity.

In this connection, may I read from the testimony of Mr. Alley, who has the responsibility of interpreting this act as it applies to the Board which he represents? The following appears on page 3 of the hearings:

Mr. HANCOCK. Doesn't the President have that power?

Mr. ALLEY. He has the power to terminate entirely, but no power to suspend. The power to terminate is a definite one. But if terminated, there will be no power to start the wheels of lending again. And, as I understand, one of the purposes of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, if it is extended, is to make it a stand-by agency in case of need, and the President of the United States, if he finds that the lenders engaged in the mortgage-loan field, that is, the mortgage companies are taking care of amply of needful loans, he can direct the Board to discontinue lending in the mortgage field or any commodity field, for instance.

That is the interpretation which the man who will have to interpret it for the board he represents places upon this provision. Who are we to say otherwise? After all, it is his interpretation which counts and not our interpretation, because the President can with a stroke of the pen negative the legislative intent which we spoke about today. Regardless of our action here today, he can with a stroke of the pen nullify our action.

May I ask you gentlemen who fought so valiantly for an authorization to loan money to small industry, my friends who so valiantly fought for loans to irrigation and drainage districts, to mining companies, what are you going to do? Are you going to allow the President of the United States to nullify these activities and your express legislative purpose in granting to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation these authorities? If left within the bill, you are doing exactly that thing. What are you gentlemen who favored helping the school districts of the West, the Midwest, and the East going to do? Are you going to put yourselves in the paradoxical position of saying to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, "You are authorized to make the loans", and then turn right around and tell the President he may nullify your action by telling the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that the loans shall not be made? It does seem to me, Mr. Chairman, the Members on that side are looking around for an opportunity to show the President that they want to give him every possible power that is at their command to give him.

You have picked out a delightful bill to do this, I am sure. This Corporation is in the midst of liquidation and still you come in here at this late hour and grant the President authority to formulate the loan policy of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Why did you not do this when it was needed, if it was ever needed, 4 years ago? Are you looking for opportunities to delegate your authority? You are not that lazy-minded. You are men of ability. You are men with some strength of character and some intellectual honesty. I do not believe you want to delegate this authority or this power to negative your acts to any individual, no matter how much faith you may have in his ability or integrity.

The adoption of my amendment will continue the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in statu quo, just as I think the majority of this House want it continued.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the position of the gentleman from Michigan comes more or less as a surprise in view of the history of this legislation. It will be recalled that the original Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, submitted to the Congress by the Hoover administration, sought to afford aid to banks, insurance companies, and railroads, the great financial institutions of the country. There were certain liberalizing amendments incorporated in the bill at that time which were proposed by the Banking and Currency Committee of the House and adopted by the House. These liberalizing amendments to the bill were adopted by a Democratic House of Representatives. One provision which was incorporated by the subcommittee that drafted the bill and by the Committee on Banking and Currency, which was also adopted by a Democratic House and finally became a part of the law, was to make closed banks eligible for loans at the R. F. C. for the benefit of depositors in such institutions. I wrote this amendment with my own hands, if I may say so, and I fought for it all the way to its passage. The administration at that time opposed the passage of that provision of the act and fought it all the way into the conference between the two Houses, and so it was as to every liberalizing amendment that was adopted at that time. Everything that has been done for the benefit of the people, about whom my good friend the gentleman from Michigan is so solicitous, has been put in this legislation under a Democratic administration and under the leadership of the present occupant of the White House, upon whom we are conferring in this bill the power which the gentleman from Michigan deplores.

This is all there is in the situation. If we want to continue the activities of the Corporation until the end of the fiscal year 1939, we have only to adopt this amendment and leave the law as it is; but, certainly, it is desirable—and I employ the language of the bill—that as soon as the President ascertains that sufficient funds from private sources are available to meet legitimate demands at fair rates the activities of the Corporation may be terminated. Surely it is the desire of every Member of the House, as well as the people of the country, that the Corporation shall not be given useless or unnecessary power to operate over an arbitrary period of time, during which the Corporation would be besieged with applications for loans which it would not be desirable to employ the necessary personnel to handle. I think everybody agrees that as soon as funds are available for legitimate credit demands from normal sources the Corporation should cease its activities; and we are conferring this power upon the President, and the record justifies the statement that the President will not arbitrarily terminate any of these powers because we are under obligation to him for many of the liberalizing provisions of existing law.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendment do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOLCOTT) there were—ayes 41, noes 123.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: Page 2, after line 10, insert the following:

"The Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, is hereby amended by inserting after section 5e thereof the following new section:

"'SEC. 5f. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans to any public or private hospital organized under the laws of any State upon the same terms and conditions and subject to the same limitations as are applicable in the case of loans to financial institutions specified in section 5 of this act, as amended.'"

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, for a number of years I have tried to get an amendment to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act providing that hospitals shall receive the same recognition that others are receiving. The hospitals of this country have been in need of as much assistance during this depression as any other business in the United States.

When a man or a woman is taken to a hospital, an emergency case, they are not stopped and asked if they have money to pay the bill. They are taken in. But in the end it develops many have not had money to pay. That means it is put on the books. Millions of dollars are owed to the hospitals in your district and in my district. I cannot conceive of a better loan.

I know there is not a Member of this House who served in the two preceding Congresses who did not receive an appeal from the hospitals of their district to give them the same privileges in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as other corporations receive. They should get it. Have you ever stopped to think what would happen if the hospitals could not carry on and closed? The sick would have no place to go in an emergency. The purpose of the amendment is to permit the hospitals to refinance, reduce the interest rates on their obligations, so they can carry on and continue their charity work.

This amendment clearly states that it is subject to the same limitations as other borrowers are subject to now. In other words, they must post sufficient collateral to secure recognition. No one is asking to get a loan that cannot comply with the rules and regulations of the Corporation. If you continue to close the door to the hospitals they might be required to close their doors to the sick and disabled. There is merit to this proposal.

I hope the Committee will pass this amendment and give the hospitals of the country an opportunity to refinance their obligations and reduce the interest rate; that is what they want to do, and it can be done through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation if you agree to the amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment has been rejected repeatedly during past sessions of Congress. I think it undesirable at this late hour, when liquidation of the Corporation is so much desired, and in fact in progress, that we should embark on the policy provided for in this amendment.

Another reason why it would be undesirable to adopt this amendment at this time is that this legislation must be passed expeditiously if we accomplish the purpose that is desired. If this amendment is adopted, it will throw the bill into conference and delay its passage.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment now close.

Mr. COCHRAN. If the gentleman will yield? The gentleman has made the same argument against this amendment to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act heretofore. This legislation does not have to be passed until next week and the amendment can go to the Senate. There is no reason for hurry. It will only hold up loans a day or two if the bill does not get there in time. It does not mean that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is going out of business entirely if the bill is not passed today. I repeat every time I have offered this amendment the gentleman has made the same objection. I would like the gentleman to tell the House why the hospitals cannot offer security as good as the railroads or other corporations of this country.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield further and I renew my motion that all debate on this amendment be now closed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COCHRAN) there were 71 ayes and 88 noes.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands tellers. Those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Nine Members have risen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota: Page 2, after line 11, insert the following:

"Section 16 of the act approved June 19, 1934, Public, No. 417, Seventy-third Congress, is hereby amended by striking out 'January 31, 1935' and inserting in lieu thereof 'June 30, 1939', and by striking out 'June 1, 1934' and inserting in lieu thereof 'June 30, 1938.'"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota. Debate has been closed on this section and all amendments thereto.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Do I understand that all debate has been closed?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been closed on this section and all amendments thereto by a vote of the Committee.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. I do not think the motion provided "all amendments thereto." The motion made by the Chairman was that all debate on this section be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has a very distinct recollection of stating the question as to whether or not debate should close on this section and all amendments thereto, and so put the question, and the motion was adopted.

Mr. MICHENER. I referred to what the motion stated.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Dakota be allowed to proceed for 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Dakota may proceed for 5 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object. This is just like going up the hill and coming down again.

Mr. WOLCOTT. There was a misunderstanding on our part, because the gentleman from South Dakota intended to offer this amendment and debate it.

Mr. RAYBURN. I was in the Chamber when the gentleman discussed the amendment and I feel constrained to object.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion, which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inquire of the gentleman from Michigan if this is his motion?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Dakota makes a written motion to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers a motion, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CASE of South Dakota moves to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion submitted is not in proper form.

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion, which I send to the desk.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, did the gentleman from South Dakota withdraw his first amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is still pending.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw that amendment so as to offer it at the close of another section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WITHROW moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Chairman, I moved to strike out the enacting clause for the purpose of addressing the House relative to an amendment that I have on the Clerk's desk. I think it is very unfair that debate upon this important question was shut off so quickly. My amendment would provide that all loans of over $1,000,000 would have to have the approval of the President of the United States.

I want to address my remarks for a moment to the statement of the gentleman from Michigan, who read a letter from Mr. Jesse Jones, now Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, who was a member of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, under Chairman Charles Dawes, when the loan to the Central Republic Trust Co. was approved. The letter states that instead of the Central Republic transaction being a $50,000,000 "racket" it was only a $10,000,000 "steal." My colleagues, the original loan of $90,000,000 had been reduced by a transfer of assets to the R. F. C. by the bank to approximately $55,000,000 at the time the case went to trial, January 23, 1936. Mr. Chairman, if Jesse Jones, as Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, is able to wheedle out of the assets of the Central Republic Trust Co., of Chicago, Ill., enough cash so that he can cut down the loss to $10,000,000, then I say to you that he is in reality performing a feat of magic. He is pulling the rabbit out of the hat. I sincerely hope this amendment will be adopted, so as to put an end to this type of "racketeering within the law."

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WITHROW. Yes, indeed.

Mr. CONNERY. As I understand the purpose of the gentleman's amendment, it is that the President himself must approve all loans over $1,000,000, so that the R. F. C. can look after the little fellow for a change and forget the forty-million-dollar boy.

Mr. WITHROW. That would be the result. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WITHROW. I am pleased to yield.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. The gentleman from Wisconsin really refers to this loan to the Central Republic Bank in terms which would make us believe it was the only bad loan ever made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I would like to know whether the gentleman knows of any bad loans that were made in the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. WITHROW. Maybe there have been bad loans made in Wisconsin. I will say this to the gentleman, that the loan in question here represents the most flagrant violation of the authority and confidence placed in an agency by the Congress that I know of.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. STEAGALL. This debate is not directed to the amendment before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, the motion to strike out the enacting clause naturally brings into scope the entire bill under consideration.

The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Does the gentleman from Alabama seek recognition in opposition to the motion?

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion.

Mr. Chairman, this has been a rather singular debate this afternoon, for in the time I have been in the Chamber I have heard the Reconstruction Finance Corporation reproached for being so niggardly in the matter of industrial loans, and then I observe the gentleman from Wisconsin indicating they were too generous in the matter of making loans and that some restriction ought to be placed upon their authority.

I am wondering what the temper of the House is between those two extremes.

Permit me a word in defense of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I sat on the Committee on Banking and Currency with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] and a great many others when we were seeking to fashion language under which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation could operate in connection with so-called industrial loans. We talked about the need for supplying adequate collateral before an industrial loan would be granted. We talked about such language as "reasonable security." Members of the committee will bear out the time spent in seeking to fashion the right kind of language that would operate for the guidance of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and you can readily believe that it is difficult to find language to cover all cases coming before the R. F. C.

Nobody had more cause for being aggrieved about their industrial loan procedure than I, for I prevailed upon some of the industries in my district to spend $2,000 for an audit, and then went to the regional office of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, only to find that the loan could not be made. But we learned exactly what the gentleman from Massachusetts has doubtless found before, and that is that too often the money was to be used to pay taxes; too often it was to be used to liquidate old debts; too often it was to be used to retire some delinquency that showed up in the report of the corporation; and too often the money was not to be used for the purpose of stimulating employment. Very properly, therefore, under the language of the law, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation turned them down.

They have done a pretty fair job here, I should say. I fancy if you will examine most of these applications for industrial loans you will find there was probably good reason for turning them down. I will say to the membership of this House if you want to dip into the Federal Treasury and you want to broadcast the taxpayers' money into all corners of the 48 sovereign States, then there is only one thing you have to do, and it is within your power. Strike out the word "loan" in all Reconstruction Finance Corporation authorizations and supply the word "give", and then you have done it. That is all that is necessary.

We were trying somehow to define the line between "loan" and "gift", make them generous and at the same time have proper regard for the Nation's purse. I say to you that it cannot be done, but if you want to spend this money like drunken sailors, then you use the word "give" instead of "loan", and the job is done.

It is no easy matter to administer a corporation of 2,600 people, making mining loans, fishing loans, catastrophe loans, closed-bank loans, and a half a hundred other kinds of loans. To the huge task of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation must be brought a rare degree of discernment in order to discharge the responsibilities that go with that Corporation.

When Mr. Jones comes before the committee and says he turned into the Federal Treasury $190,000,000 in interest, and made $225,000 in profits out of the bonds that he took from the Chicago school district, when he shows a splendid record of earnings, and a proper regard for the administration of public funds, I doubt whether we are on good ground when we seek to reproach the operations and administration of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. But if you want them to be generous, if you want them to throw the money everywhere, if you want them to disregard the taxpayers of the country, all you have to do is to substitute the word "give" for the word "loan", and you have done the job. That, however, is our responsibility and not his. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW] to strike out the enacting clause.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ENGEL: On page 2, line 10, after the word "advisable", strike out the period and insert the following: "Provided further, That no loan shall be made to any individual or corporation for the purpose of engaging in any business not heretofore engaged in".

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WITHROW: On page 2, line 10, strike out the period, insert in lieu thereof a colon and the following: "Provided further, That hereafter, except with the approval of the President in each case, the corporation shall not make any loan to any borrower if the aggregate amount of the loans by the corporation to such borrower already exceeds $1,000,000 or would exceed $1,000,000 if such loan were made."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. (a) Section 7 of the act approved January 31, 1935 (Public, No. 1, 74th Cong.), is hereby amended by striking from the first sentence thereof "April 1, 1937" and inserting in lieu thereof "the close of business on June 30, 1939"; section 1 of the act approved March 31, 1936 (Public, No. 484, 74th Cong.), is hereby amended by striking from the first sentence thereof "February 1, 1937" and inserting in lieu thereof "the close of business on June 30, 1939"; section 9 of the act approved January 31, 1935 (Public, No. 1, 74th Cong.), is hereby amended by striking from the first sentence thereof "June 16, 1937" and inserting in lieu thereof "the close of business on June 30, 1939".

(b) The agencies referred to in the acts referred to in subdivision (a) of this section, and the Reconstruction Finance Construction Mortgage Co., shall be deemed to be established by or pursuant to law within the meaning of section 7 (a) of the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1936.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota is recognized.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, the people of the Northwest are very much concerned about putting some supervision over the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. You will recall that in 1932, when this Corporation was organized to serve the Northwest, there was established at Minneapolis, Minn., a branch bank of that institution.

Mr. Chairman, on March 19, 1935, I gave the whole history of this Government finance set-up in the Northwest in the following statement:

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was organized February 2, 1932. Capital stock, $500,000,000 paid by the Treasurer of the United States. Limit of indebtedness, $3,750,000,000 plus the following:

A. One hundred and twenty-five million dollars available for stock in Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

B. Such amounts necessary for:

(a) To purchase preferred stock in banks or to make loans on such stock.

(b) To make loans to Secretary of Agriculture on cotton.

(c) To provide funds for Federal housing.

C. Amount not to exceed $50,000,000 to purchase preferred stock and notes of insurance companies.

D. The sum of $500,000,000 to enable the Federal Relief Administration to make grants to States and Territories for relief work.

E. For $300,000,000 to be allocated to the Federal Land Bank Commissioner for loans to joint-stock land banks and to farmers.

F. Not to exceed $200,000,000 to allocate funds to Secretary of the Treasury to make payments for subscriptions to capital stock of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

G. Not exceeding $250,000,000 to purchase at par value of debentures and other obligations of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

H. Not exceeding $250,000,000 to purchase marketable securities acquired by the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works.

It will thus be seen that the purposes and provisions of this act were far-reaching and extended into every phase of relief, and therefore should have always remained nonpartisan and in the hands of the people. No one could possibly conceive that this great institution was to be prostituted to the private banking and business interests of the Northwest to be used and operated by their agents and representatives for their own interests and not for the people. No one dreamed that the two bank organizations of the Twin Cities, namely, the Northwest Bancorporation and its twin sister, the First Bank Stock Corporation, were soon to fasten their tentacles around the throat of this great public enterprise. Yet in the Northwest such was the fate of this Government corporation.

When the office was set up in the city of Minneapolis we find in control, and with minor changes they still control the destinies of this great public benefactor in the Northwest:

Joseph Chapman, of the Northwest National Bank of Minneapolis and the Northwest Bank Corporation. Was the first manager and served to September 30, 1934. Republican.

Ben Maynard, acting manager. Formerly with the First National Bank of Minneapolis, the originator of the bogus holding company known as the First Bank Stock Corporation. Republican.

T. F. Wallace, advisory committee; director, First National Bank of Minneapolis, and member, First Bank Stock Corporation. Republican.

Elmer E. Adams, president, First National Bank of Fergus Falls, member of First Bank Stock Corporation. Republican.

E. S. Bice, banker, Michigan. Republican.

E. W. Decker, president of the Northwest Bank Corporation. Republican.

C. T. Jaffray, advisory committee, former chairman, board of directors of First National Bank, Minneapolis; president of Soo Line Railroad Co.; one of the organizers of the First Bank Stock Corporation. President of the Minneapolis Trust Joint Stock Land Bank. Republican.

John Oace, vice president of the First National of St. Paul; director of the First Bank Stock Corporation. Republican.

Here we have the direct proof of the fact that representatives of these two bank-holding companies gained and still have control of the Government's Finance Corporation.

Through the control of this organization they could serve the following institutions:

First. Buy bank stock and obligations.

Second. Direct grants for relief.

Third. Grant loans to Land Bank Commissioner.

Fourth. Allocate funds for purchase of stock in Home Owners' Loan banks.

Fifth. Allocate fund for Federal Deposit Insurance.

Sixth. Purchase securities acquired by the Public Works Administration.

No greater power over the people could have ever been usurped by this designing band of financial racketeers.

While these chief officials of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in Minneapolis were acting as officers of this institution, they were, at the same time, organizing a chain-bank monopoly in the Northwest through the instrumentality of the Northwest Bancorporation and the First Bank Stock Corporation. They traded stock of these two corporations to bank stockholders in the Northwest for control of these banks; and while they disposed of their stock for 60 and 90 cents on the dollar, that stock has been practically worthless for the last 4 years. Being in a position to extend financial relief to the Northwest through their connection with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, they practically forced 90 percent of the best banks of the Northwest to submit to their manipulated control.

These men gained their position through appointments during the Hoover administration, and nearly every one of them was a reactionary, hard-boiled, and stand-pat Republican, and it has been a difficult job to dislodge them. Many of them are still in control.

Are the people of the Northwest willing to let institutions of this character determine the loaning policy of the Government? Do you not think we should exercise some control of these institutions and give and delegate to the President the power to determine from the facts when the terms and rates of loans are just?

It would be a most dangerous thing for this Congress to take the position that an appointive board, such as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, should determine the policy of that Government agency. This Congress can constitutionally give this Corporation directions and authorize it to carry out the purposes of the act, but to say that this appointive board shall have power 3 months from now or 9 months from now to determine absolutely the policy of the administration of the act would not only be wrong in principle but it would also, I believe, be unconstitutional.

This Congress does not always sit—it adjourns—and hence it is necessary to have the supervisory power of these corporations always active. This power can be exercised by the executive department of the Government, which, under the Constitution, is charged with the duty of carrying out the laws passed by Congress. The President is that Executive officer. Under the Constitution he is responsible for the execution of the laws. He is responsible to the people of the whole country. He is the people's agent as well as the agent of Congress, and the only agent authorized by the Constitution to carry out the laws passed by the people.

In this bill we are giving the President the power to examine the facts for us and determine when a condition has arisen when the private interests of the country are able and willing to advance credit that shall be just in terms and rates. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, under this authority given the President, will proceed to loan when the conditions require it and will suspend when private loans are available under just conditions. It is a power over private credit that should have long ago been exercised by this Government.

This act extends the life of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation until June 30, 1939. The provisions of the act may or may not be exercised during this period, depending on the ability and willingness of private business to extend credit on terms that are just as to time and rates. If private business can perform the service, then it may be free to do so; if it fails, this Government agency will step in to perform that service. I do not see how a single Member of Congress can find any possible excuse for not supporting this feature of the act.

I am, therefore, in favor of the act and trust that the protests offered by the disciples of the private banking oligarchy of the country will not prevail.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include what I said upon this subject a year ago.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not need the 5 minutes allowed me under the rules, for I only want to read the original section about loans for school districts and the payment of teachers' salaries in the earlier set-up for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to explain how the amendment which I shall then offer without debate will restore it to life.

Section 16 of the act, Public, No. 417, that was passed by the Seventy-third Congress, provided as follows:

> The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized and empowered to make loans at any time prior to January 31, 1935, out of the funds of the Corporation upon full and adequate security, to public school districts or other similar public school authorities organized pursuant to law, for the purpose of the payment of teachers' salaries due prior to June 1, 1934: Provided, That the aggregate amount of such loans at any time outstanding shall not exceed $75,000,000.

That was the law passed by the Seventy-third Congress. In the Seventy-fourth Congress an act was passed to authorize loans up to $10,000,000 to school districts, but that was restricted to construction, operation, and maintenance. Maintenance might seem to provide for the payment of teachers' salaries, but a special section was added at the end of Public Act No. 325, of the Seventy-fourth Congress. Under the provisions of this section:

> No loan shall be made by the Corporation under this act where any part of the proceeds of such loan are to be used for purposes authorized by section 16 of the act approved June 19, 1934, Public, No. 417, of the Seventy-third Congress.

In other words, the last section put a particular construction on the act. The money could be used to pay the salaries of janitors or for construction, but its use for the payment of teachers' salaries was denied.

The purpose of my amendment is to restore the original authorization for the R. F. C. to lend money to pay teachers' salaries. It does this simply by putting in new dates, the same way these other powers are extended. I do not think anyone in this Chamber will want to debate it. The only opposition I have heard is that perhaps it might delay the bill and throw it into conference. The answer to that, however, is found in the President's inaugural address when, after speaking of the denial of opportunities for education, after having painted that picture, he said:

> If I know aught of the spirit and purpose of our Nation, we will not listen to comfort, opportunism, and timidity. We will carry on.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that I for one am unwilling that this Congress shall go on record as saying, "We will continue loans for speculating in cotton, we will continue loans to reorganize banks, to reorganize insurance companies that are on the verge of insolvency, but we will deny aid to the school districts of the country."

At the proper time I shall offer my amendment without debate, and I hope it will be supported.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts: On page 2, line 19, strike out "Section 9" and all of lines 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered is very simple and would deny the extension at this time of any powers to the Export and Import Bank. I offer this amendment solely upon information which was given to the committee by Mr. Jesse Jones, who has been proclaimed here today as an expert on Government matters.

Mr. Jones said all this agency had ever done could be put in your vest pocket. He further stated it was not being used at the present time and he did not know of any use it might be put to in the immediate future. He wanted the continuance so he might have the power if he desired to use it.

Mr. Chairman, in the meantime we have three high-salaried officials, a good many clerks, and other help who are drawing pay.

I can see there can be no expectancy of any abolition of commissions and bureaus if this one is continued under the evidence presented. If we are going to have any economies, let us begin with an agency Mr. Jones says is not doing anything. Let us make a start.

Mr. Chairman, I hope my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. Is it not a fact that the President states the depression is over and there is no need for these emergency powers? Is it not time we recall these emergency powers, particularly when they are not being used?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I find the emergency is over when you are making a speech, but when you want legislation it still exists. I have noticed that frequently of late.

Mr. FORD of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FORD of California. Does the gentleman recall that Jesse Jones said he was going to use this as a shotgun in the corner?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I do not know anything about the California-Texas language in this respect.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts has quoted Mr. Jones, but he does not properly present Mr. Jones' attitude in reference to this matter. Therefore I want to call to the attention of the Members of the House certain statements made by Mr. Jones in the hearings. The volume of business conducted by the Export-Import Bank, as compared to the enormous volume of business done by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, is trivial; but Mr. Jones urged the continuance of the Export-Import Bank and pledged the support of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the Export-Import Bank as an important part of this machinery to promote recovery to the business interests of the country.

Mr. FORD of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FORD of California. Did not Mr. Pearson, president of the bank, state in your presence this morning that in the last 8 months its profits were $399,000?

Mr. STEAGALL. Oh, yes; it has operated at a profit, and the business is increasing. I simply wanted to correct the impression in reference to Mr. Jones.

Mr. SPENCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Jones stated in answer to a question by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]:

> It is a good piece of machinery to have if we ever get to where we can move some of our commodities over there.

Mr. STEAGALL. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I offer this pro-forma amendment for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee a question. There is some concern among certain banks of the country as to the preferred stock held by the R. F. C. and with reference to what disposition the R. F. C. will probably make of those stocks. Can the chairman give us any information with reference to that matter? I refer to preferred stock held by the R. F. C. in State banks, the cost of which is being amortized, but which may be disposed of by the R. F. C. along with the mortgages, bonds, and debentures that are being sold. Is there any information on that subject which the chairman could furnish us?

Mr. STEAGALL. I think I am justified in assuring the gentleman it is the policy of the R. F. C. now, and it has obtained up to the present time, to have those loans worked out constructively and in cooperation with the banks as far as possible, with the State banking authorities in the case of State banks, and along with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. I think we are justified in saying the services of the Corporation in this connection have been of great value to the country, and we certainly have no reason to believe that its policies will not be as wise and as helpful in the future.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the chairman feel there is any chance whatsoever of the R. F. C. disposing of these stocks to parties who may attempt to dominate in an adverse manner the State banks involved?

Mr. STEAGALL. I think I can assure the gentleman that no such policy is in contemplation.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota: On page 2, line 24, strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon and the following: "section 16 of the act approved June 19, 1934 (Public, No. 417, 73d Cong.), is hereby amended by striking out 'January 31, 1935' and inserting in lieu thereof 'June 30, 1939', by striking out 'June 1, 1934' and inserting in lieu thereof 'June 30, 1938'."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CASE of South Dakota) there were—ayes 39, noes 92.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 415) to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 79, he reported the same back to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Missouri opposed to the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes, Mr. Speaker; in its present form.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Mr. COCHRAN moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency with instructions to that committee to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment: On page 2, line 10, insert the following:
>
> "SEC. 2. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, is hereby amended by inserting, after section 5 (e) thereof, the following new section:
> " 'SEC. 5 (f). The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans to any public or private hospital organized under the laws of any State upon the same terms and conditions and subject to the same limitations as are applicable in the case of loans to financial institutions specified in section 5 of this act, as amended.' "

On motion of Mr. STEAGALL, the previous question was ordered on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COCHRAN) there were—ayes 9, noes 176.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and forty-one Members present, a quorum.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. STEAGALL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina, Mr. SPENCE, Mr. CONNERY, Mr. ENGEL, Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts, Mr. DONDERO, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. FISH, Mr. CASE of South Dakota, and Mr. WITHROW asked and were given permission to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a resolution adopted by a group of Congressmen this morning on the subject of public power.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

FOREIGN SERVICE RETIREMENT AND DISABILITY SYSTEM (H. DOC. NO. 135)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State showing all receipts and disbursements on account of refunds, allowances, and annuities for the fiscal year ended

June 30, 1935, in connection with the Foreign Service retirement and disability system as required by section 26 (a) of an act for the grading and classification of clerks in the Foreign Service of the United States of America, and providing compensation therefor, approved February 23, 1931.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 22, 1937.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday when my friend and colleague from New York [Mr. BOYLAN] asked for permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and print a speech of George Henry Payne, a member of the Radio Commission, I asked him if it was not a fact that we had a speech a few days ago printed in the RECORD, and he said that was the first time this session. I thought I was right then, but, of course, I might have been wrong. I find that I was right. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] a week ago asked unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech of Mr. Payne's.

I simply wanted to show that I was right when I reserved the objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN].

S. 415

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Speaker may be authorized to sign the bill S. 415, notwithstanding the House is not in session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ROBERTSON, for today (at the request of Mr. BLAND).

To Mr. HIGGINS, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. ELLENBOGEN, for 1 day, on account of business.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 4. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the original Norfolk, Va., land grant and the two hundredth anniversary of the establishment of the city of Norfolk, Va., as a borough; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. WOLFENDEN: A bill (H. R. 3585) for the relief of Cora G. Schrader; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3586) for the relief of Domenick Piano (Pappano); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PETERSON of Florida: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 146) granting insurance payments to Hugh H. Newell; to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

80. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Goldsmith Fruit Co., of Fort Pierce, Fla.; to the Committee on Agriculture.

81. By Mr. CROWTHER: Petition of residents of Gloversville, N. Y., favoring enactment of neutrality legislation; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

82. By Mr. POLK: Petition of Prof. Walter G. Rhoten and 10 other teachers in the Whiteoak rural schools, of Morristown, Ohio, urging the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs for public education, etc.; to the Committee on Education.

83. By Mr. MOTT: Petition signed by Frances W. McMillen and 42 citizens of Douglas County, Oreg., urging early consideration and enactment of the bill embodying the provisions of the Townsend national recovery plan; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

84. Also, petition signed by Willard Smith and 31 citizens of Douglas County, Oreg., urging early consideration and enactment of the bill embodying the provisions of the Townsend national recovery plan; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

85. Also, petition signed by Lillie M. Stewart and 29 citizens of Lafayette, Oreg., urging early consideration and enactment of the bill embodying the provisions of the Townsend national recovery plan; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

86. By Mr. COFFEE of Washington: Petition of Farmers Union, Local No. 258, Puyallup, Wash.; to the Committee on Agriculture.

87. Also, petition of Benston, Wash., Grange No. 892; to the Committee on Agriculture.

88. By Mr. CASE of South Dakota: Petition of James Hawkins, chairman, and other members of the seed committee of Spink County, S. Dak., praying for action now so that seed can be shipped in and on hand for planting before seeding time, March 1, 1937; to the Committee on Agriculture.

89. Also, petition of K. E. Brown, president, G. Prunty, secretary, and other businessmen and farmers of Hanson County, S. Dak., meeting at Alexandria, praying for immediate action to make seed loans available and also that the loans be repayable on a commodity basis, bushel for bushel, and other provisions for forage-crop planting and harvest; to the Committee on Agriculture.

90. Also, petitions of O. H. Bergeleen, of Alpena, and Ray Eagle and Ernest P. Holcomb, of Wessington Springs, S. Dak., all referring to the need of 80 percent of the farmers in Jerauld County for seed loans and praying for immediate action; to the Committee on Agriculture.

91. Also, petition of S. S. Judy, of Woonsocket, S. Dak., and other members of the seed committee of Sanborn County, reciting that delay in previous years caused severe crop loss and praying for action to make seed grain available by February 1, 1937; to the Committee on Agriculture.

92. Also, petition of D. F. Baughman, of White Lake, S. Dak., and other members of the Aurora County seed committee, stating that action is needed now to provide seed loans so that a normal crop can be had to place that area on a self-supporting basis again; to the Committee on Agriculture.

93. Also, petition of Walter Pascoe, Fred Ferris, and K. R. Ferris, of Spearfish, being the Lawrence County soil-conservation committee, stating that 90 percent of the 300 farmers surveyed need seed loans and praying for early action; to the Committee on Agriculture.

94. Also, petition of E. F. Gronert, A. B. Levy, F. C. Morgan, and others, being the Pennington County seed committee, asking immediate action that seed loans be made available for early seeding, which spells the difference between crops and crop failure; to the Committee on Agriculture.

95. Also, petition of C. J. Larson, of Eagle Butte, S. Dak., asking speedy action to provide seed loans and giving the results of a seed survey in Ziebach County; to the Committee on Agriculture.

96. By Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota: Petition of Bernice Henry, chairman, and Clarence Daubenspeck, secretary, of the Workers' Alliance unit at Frazee, Becker County, Minn., praying for an amendment to the social-security law that will give the unfortunate the proper medical, dental, and the optical care that they are rightfully entitled to; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

97. By Mr. COLDEN: Resolution submitted by I. Tovar, secretary, urging the appropriation of $1,250,000,000 for the continuance of the activities of the Works Progress Administration; to the Committee on Appropriations.

98. By Mr. STEFAN: Resolution of West Point (Nebr.), National Farm Loan Association, urging Congress to pass a law making 3-percent interest the permanent rate charged borrowers of Federal land banks and reducing principal payments to not to exceed 1½ percent a year; to the Committee on Agriculture.

99. By Mr. PLUMLEY: Petition of some 10 residents of Brandon, Vt., requesting favorable action on the McGroarty Pension bill (H. R. 10); to the Committee on Ways and Means.

100. Also, petition of citizens of Brandon, Vt., requesting favorable action on the McGroarty bill (H. R. 10); to the Committee on Ways and Means.

101. By Mr. HILDEBRANDT: Petition of Ziebach County seed committee, requesting legislation so that the farmers receive their seed in ample time for planting; to the Committee on Agriculture.

MONDAY, JANUARY 25, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Bow down Thine ear, O Lord, for we are poor and needy. Thou art a God full of compassion, gracious, long-suffering, plenteous in mercy and truth. Almighty God, we are feeble, sore broken, and our strength faileth. Make haste to rescue, succor, and help the homeless, the suffering and the struggling countless thousands of our flood-stricken area. O Lord God, suffer not their hearts to languish, nor let them be dismayed. Bring a speedy release from the deathly clutches of the storm and the waves. God bless the American Red Cross with its deeds of heroism and glory. May its spirit surge through every heart. Again, Heavenly Father, we are in the shadow of death. Another Member has left us; a fine type of citizenship, a statesman of ability, a cultured Christian gentleman has gone to his eternal home. At the last may we pass on in the breath of God, through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, January 22, 1937, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 462. An act to permit the exchange of used parts of certain types of equipment for new or reconditioned parts of the same equipment; and

S. 767. An act for the relief of the Charles T. Miller Hospital, Inc., at St. Paul, Minn.; Dr. Edgar T. Herrmann; Ruth Kehoe, nurse; and Catherine Foley, nurse.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER

Mr. LANZETTA appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL—1937

Mr. BUCHANAN, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 3587, Rept. No. 19) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, and, together with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all points of order on the bill be waived.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. TABER. I reserve the right to object, to ask the chairman of the committee to tell us why he wants all points of order waived.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, all money for relief and for the C. C. C. camps carried in the bill is subject to a point of order. The money for relief will be exhausted on February 1, and it is essential that this bill be passed or all of those on relief in the crowded cities, as well as in the country, will not have any relief, and gentlemen can well imagine the result. We have only until the 1st of February for the Senate and House to pass this bill and to have it signed by the President.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the only point I can see that would be served by an objection to this request would be that it would require the Committee on Rules to bring in a rule making the bill in order. In view of the fact that we might better spend our time in finding out what there is in the bill when it comes on the floor in the time within which we have to discuss it than in considering a rule making it in order, I do not believe it would serve any good purpose to object. I do not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday, February 12, 1937, after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table and the reading of the Journal, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] may have 30 minutes in which to address the House on the life and character of Abraham Lincoln.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, January 28, 1937, I be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes on the subject of the Constitution, following the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, after the reading of the Journal tomorrow and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, I be permitted to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I trust my friend from Indiana will not insist on that request. Tomorrow we expect to take up this appropriation bill for relief, and if we were to yield to the gentleman for 5 minutes, someone else would want 10 minutes, and it might be embarrassing.

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. I do not want to embarrass the gentleman any more than he would want to embarrass me. Is there any order for the next day?

Mr. RAYBURN. On Wednesday the calendar may be called. I am sure the gentleman can get 5 minutes tomorrow under general debate on the appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls attention to the fact that already there is a special order for tomorrow.

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting therein an address made by my colleague [Mr. JONES] over the radio recently.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting in the RECORD a short letter from the Federal Farm Bureau of Bedford County, Tenn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. To whom is the letter addressed?

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. It is addressed to me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LOANS TO FARMERS FOR CROP PRODUCTION, 1937

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 80.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 80

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 1545, a bill to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1937 and from year to year thereafter, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 80 is an open rule permitting debate and amendments on the bill H. R. 1545, coming from the Committee on Agriculture, for the purpose of providing loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting for the year 1937 and succeeding years. These loans are to be used for the purchase of feed, seed, and supplies in putting out crops. The bill carries an authorization of $50,000,000. No loan is to exceed $400, and any delinquency in the payment of previous loans shall be considered in the $400 limitation. It is to be administered by the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration.

The Rules Committee felt that this was an emergency measure. It will not be a great while until the cropping season will begin in the Southern States, and the advantages to be obtained by farmers who need this source of credit will be available.

This credit is furnished to a class of farmers not able to obtain credit along other lines. Many of them are tenant farmers who have no land or specific resources whereby their credit is sufficient for them to borrow. This will carry them over both in the drought area and now in this flood district, where many of them will have their property and their seed and livestock and feed swept away by the floods. They will need the advantages of this particular credit. Those people without resources always have to pay a higher rate of interest and oftentimes a bonus in order to get a small loan for the purpose of putting in a crop. In order to help the class of farmer who is most in need, the provisions of this bill provide for these loans up to $400 and will appropriate $50,000,000 for this purpose.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Did I understand the gentleman to say that persons who made loans previously and had not paid them would not be eligible for another loan?

Mr. GREENWOOD. The amount they owe will be carried over and considered in the limitation of the $400.

Mr. SNELL. Suppose I borrowed $400 last year and had not repaid that loan, I could not borrow again?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I do not understand you could have a second loan. I may be in error about that, but I do not think so.

Mr. SNELL. I noticed in the report filed by the committee that practically 66 percent of the loans have been repaid to the Federal Government.

Mr. GREENWOOD. That is true.

Mr. SNELL. Has the gentleman any break-down of those figures or any information for the committee to show what parts of the country have not paid those loans and what States have repaid them?

Mr. GREENWOOD. The general information that came before the Rules Committee just gave us the lump-sum figures which the gentleman gave. I presume the Committee on Agriculture, when they handle the bill, can give more definite information about that. Most of it was in the drought area and places where payment could not be made.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. I notice the interest rate is 5½ percent. Does that compare favorably with loans to other classes of people?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield on that point?

Mr. GREENWOOD. That compares very favorably when you take into consideration the rates these people have to pay to these loan sharks and loan companies. Five and a half is a wonderful rate for this kind of security.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. JONES. The committee this morning agreed to make that interest rate 4 percent instead of 5½. The Senate committee has taken the same action.

Mr. GREENWOOD. We have information from the chairman of the committee that the interest rate will be reduced to 4 percent.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. COX. I want to say by way of reply to the question asked by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] that it has only been in the flood and drought areas where the percentage of repayment has been so small. In the other areas of the country the loans, as a rule, have been paid in full. The Government has suffered no loss whatever on that account.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. If I understood the gentleman correctly, I believe he was in error in his reply to the question propounded by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL]. This $400 limitation applies to only one calendar year. A person who was in default a previous calendar year would not be precluded from getting another loan. He cannot get more than $400 in any one calendar year.

Mr. GREENWOOD. That was my understanding. If there is a delinquency hanging over from last year, that is merged in the $400 loan, as I understand it.

Mr. BOILEAU. No. As I understand, that does not affect any delinquency left over from a previous year.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I may be in error. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. Failure to pay a loan made in a previous year can be used and is used by the agents in rejecting loans. That is one of the reasons why, under the regulation, the agents reject loans, if they do not pay in the previous year. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] is correct in regard to the legal situation.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. May I call the gentleman's attention to the exact language of the act?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Yes. It says not more than $400 in any one calendar year.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It says:

Nor shall a loan be so made in any calendar year which, together with the unpaid principal of prior loans so made to such borrower in that year, shall exceed $400 in amount.

Not a prior year but the year in which he gets the $400 loan.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman is correct in that.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I stand corrected on that.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. EATON. Can the gentleman give us any information as to what becomes of these delinquent loans? Are they written off as a total loss, or does the Government take action to collect?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I do not understand that they are written off. I understand that they will continue to attempt to collect them in future years. How much will have to be written off eventually, I do not suppose anyone can tell.

Mr. EATON. Are they reported to Congress as one of the assets of the administration?

Mr. GREENWOOD. That is a facetious question, as is usual from the gentleman from New Jersey. He can think about that himself.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that there is little or no controversy so far as the merit of this legislation is concerned, I probably shall not tax your patience by using all the time that has been allotted to me.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a new agency of the Government; neither is it a New Deal agency. The giving of aid to the small farmers of the United States was initiated in 1921 and has been in practice ever since. It has grown a great deal since the depression. From 1921 to 1930, including the latter year, 121,350 small farmers participated in the administration of this fund in a total amount of $15,193,788; and of this sum 72.8 percent has been repaid to the Government.

I know of no agency of the Government that possesses more merit than this seed-loan agency. It is as popular as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. You will recall that on last Friday everybody was loud in his acclaim of the virtues of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; and, by the way, that is not a new activity and neither is it a New Deal agency. Both these agencies, crop loan and Reconstruction Finance Corporation, were created during Republican administrations. However, the present administration has adopted both of them, has enlarged each of them, and has worked them overtime. About the only criticism we heard of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation a few days ago was the charge that they gave preference to large industry. Such a charge cannot be successfully made against the seed-loan agency, because it is confined to the sharecroppers, the renters, the tenants, and the small farmers of the country. It has performed a remarkable function, because it affords aid to these small farmers, these tenants, and sharecroppers who could not obtain credit elsewhere. A great many of them would have been forced onto the relief rolls of the Government during this period of depression had it not been for this agency.

The pending bill provides—and, by the way, it has the unanimous support of the Committee on Agriculture and, as I said at the outset, I do not believe any measure was ever presented to Congress that had less opposition than this—this bill provides for a maximum loan of $400. Year before last, 1935, the average loan to farmers was $88. Last year the average loan was $135. While the maximum prescribed in this bill is $400, yet under certain conditions, by Executive action, this amount may be increased; and I have an idea it will be, due to the terrible calamity that has recently befallen the country—I refer to the unprecedented floods that are raging at this time.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. COX. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman's statement regarding the good this activity has done to the class of our farmers throughout the country who had absolutely no other source of credit; but does not the gentleman agree with me that it is probably unfortunate that the rate of interest provided in this bill has been cut from 5½ percent to 4 percent?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I do not understand that it has been reduced to 4 percent; it is still 5½ percent.

Mr. COX. I may say to the gentleman from Tennessee that it was intended that this agency should make its own way; in other words, that the Government should sustain no loss as a result of this particular activity. Because of the relationship that has been built up between this agency of the Government and borrowers throughout the country, this particular class of borrowers have developed a very keen sense of their contractual responsibility and take pride in living up to the contracts they make with the Government. Five and one-half percent is as cheaply as one could be expected to make small loans. Cutting the interest rate from 5½ percent to 4 percent necessarily insures, or makes certain at least, that the Government will sustain a loss as a result of this particular kind of loan; and this ought not to be, because it would soon bring the activity to an end.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The gentleman understands that this bill provides for an interest rate of 5½ percent?

Mr. COX. I understand, however, that the Senate has reduced the rate to 4 or 4½ percent, and that possibly it is the intention of the chairman of the House committee to concur therein by moving to amend the House bill. In other words, possibly accepting the Senate bill as it has been reported back.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. This is the first information I have had on that subject. However, the chairman of the committee has indicated to me just now that is what he has in mind.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman permit me to make a further observation. I can think of nothing more unfortunate, speaking from the standpoint of these people who have been dealing with the Government in this particular manner, than to have them brought to the notion they are getting something for nothing. In other words, their interest and their good demands that they have the sense and feeling that they are paying for the money they use, and that there is no obligation on the part of the Government to furnish them with credit without a charge to them and with a certain loss to the Government. We want to maintain this source of credit for those of our farmers who have no source of private credit on fair terms.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I think the gentleman's position is quite sound.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, as I said, I think the position of the gentleman from Georgia is quite sound, indeed. As a matter of fact, these loans would not be at all attractive to the banks throughout the country and it is only because of the fact that the Government has provided this aid that these people are allowed to get along at all.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. May I ask the chairman whether or not the interest rate reduced to 4 percent will be retroactive to previous loans made or will apply only to the bill before the House?

Mr. JONES. It is intended to apply to the provisions of this bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any other activity of the Government that has been carried on any more economically than this particular facility. I notice from the hearings that during the period from 1921 to 1930 the cost of the administration of this act was only about 5 percent, which is indeed very remarkable.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. May I ask the gentleman with reference to the percentage of repayment. Does the gentleman have these statistics by States or just in gross?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. There will be found in the hearings held before the Agricultural Committee in reference to crop loans for 1934, H. R. 7521, a tabulation of the States and the loans which have been made to the farmers of each State, as well as the amount that has been recovered.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, just a word from a member of the Committee on Expenditures of the Government. I may say I am heartily in sympathy with the purposes of this bill. I want the farmers to have the seed loans, but I think the true picture ought to be presented clearly.

I find this morning upon inquiry that it costs 10 percent—not 5 percent, according to the last speaker—to administer this act. I find also that the Solicitor General in trying to collect the money should also be charged with some little expense. The fact that I wish to bring out very clearly, as suggested by the questions of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON], is that we should keep the report of our assets and liabilities constantly before us. Last year these overdue loans were carried in the Treasury in the amount of about $140,000,000 as assets. This morning, if you will read the report of the committee, you will find it is $160,000,000, which is some little increase during the last year.

These loans date back to 1921. A greater proportion of them are, of course, absolutely worthless. How can the Farm Credit Administration like to have the people told every year that they are supposed to have assets of $140,000,000 to $160,000,000? Why can we not have the true picture of the assets of our Government?

Mr. Speaker, I began this sort of talk the other day and shall expect to continue it. No more fireside chats to the people of the Nation telling about recoverables that we know do not exist. The R. F. C. recoverables were spoken of the other day. It will be necessary to call attention to the so-called recoverables in the Treasury reports and have them corrected if we are to believe these statements any more.

My recommendation in the few remarks I shall make this morning—and I am sure the Farm Credit people ought to wish it done—is to revalue these securities, these notes of the farmers, and have the Treasury reports show as nearly as possible their true value. If it needs legislation of the Congress to tell the Treasury that they should revalue these notes and give us the true picture, let us have the legislation presented. It may be said that this will be difficult. It is suggested that very recently a loan of $180 made in 1921 was repaid. This is, of course, an isolated case, very much isolated. It is no argument that an effort should not be made to revalue these securities. But let us not say its administrative costs are only 5 percent. It is 10 percent. That is the correct information. Very many cases have been referred to the Solicitor General, and I have been told that many employees and much time has been spent in that office trying to at least by letters from the legal department to impress upon the farmers that they are supposed to repay these loans. It would be interesting to know the expense, actual suits entered upon, and amount of such enforced collections.

Mr. Speaker, I am bringing out these particular points so that we may be a little better informed regarding this appropriation. I want the farmers to have these seed loans. It is far better for them to have this money than to spend money on so many other things of so much less merit.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I said from 1921 to 1930 the cost of administration was 5 percent. Of course, that included interest that was collected. Since 1930, under the New Deal, I do not know just what the cost has been, but I have an idea it has been rather extravagant.

Mr. GIFFORD. In this report there is no mention made of cost. This gives you only the number of loans and how much has been repaid. If we include the legal expense, we might as well say that since 1921 it has cost the $40,000,000 extra, and it probably has. I insist on the true picture being given, although I do not oppose the appropriation.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] 2 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to take a moment to express a thought that came to my mind while the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] had the floor. The gentleman pointed out that the seed and crop loan law is not a New Deal measure, that it had been established in 1921 and had been continued ever since. I remarked to my colleague the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE], who was sitting beside me, that it was a "devil of a note" that the Federal Government had to establish a permanent policy of furnishing the food producers of this Nation with the seed and feed to put out their crops. We all recall that in 1929, when the crash came, agriculture was already bankrupt. The panic of 1929 did not hurt agriculture because it did not have anything left then to lose. The fact remains that during the period 1922 to 1929, which we all agree to have been the greatest period of prosperity in the history of this or any other nation, the farmers of the country went bankrupt. Pretty much the same picture is to be seen with respect to the workers in industry. It is a well known and indisputable fact that during this period of time, when industrial prosperity reached its all-time peak in this country, permanent unemployment, technological unemployment was on the increase, until it got so that in 1928 and 1929, and before the panic, a man could not get a job in the most prosperous country in the world.

These two phenomena, in my judgment, are simply two different phases of identically the same thing, and they raise identically the same question to be answered by the people of this country. It may be that the seed for the cure of these things is in the program of this administration. It remains for history to answer this question. Until this question is answered certainly, we are confronted with the fact that neither agriculture nor industry—the men who produce the foodstuffs of this country and the men who manufacture all the things in this country—can make a living out of agriculture and industry. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture.

I assume that the language in section 5, paragraph (a), beginning at the bottom of page 3, is general language which makes it unnecessary for the Farm Credit Administration to have regard for the civil service or the Classification Act.

Mr. JONES. Not the Classification Act. They can disregard the civil service. There has been, from year to year, this annual provision. When it was started it was thought it would not be made permanent. They have an organization now and I may state to the gentleman that they use practically the same people. They are required to comply with the Classification Act; that is, their salaries are limited.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me say to the gentleman from Texas that I would not be so alarmed about that language if it applied to any agency where civil service does not exist at the present time, but here you pick out the Farm Credit Administration, which is one of the 13 new agencies of the Government that is under civil service.

Mr. JONES. If the gentleman will permit, the Farm Credit Administration is under civil service. It has four divisions—land banks, cooperative banks, production credit, and intermediate credit. The seed loans for years were handled by the Department of Agriculture, but, inasmuch as this was a credit agency, it was decided to let the Farm Credit Administration administer it because they would use in its administration many of the officials and facilities of that administration. It is simply administered by the Farm Credit Administration and is not an integral part of the Farm Credit Administration.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Is there any particular reason why, with respect to the clerical, administrative, and fiscal grades, this agency or this part of the agency should not be amenable to the civil-service law?

Mr. JONES. The difficulty is that this work has been continued from year to year and there are men in the organization who have been there for years and who are thoroughly equipped and trained and yet do not have a civil-service status. I have never heard any complaint about the administration of this particular agency. It has been one of the most efficient agencies of the Government. One field man, may I state to the gentleman, handles on an average about 1,500 loans. I know of no other agency of the Government that does just that fine a job.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I would say to the gentleman that, in view of the major emphasis that was directed to the Congress in connection with the President's message on reorganization and the interest that has been manifested in civil service and in the recommendation that it be extended outward, upward, and downward, this would be a good place to begin.

Mr. JONES. I think this should be made a permanent activity; and if it should ever be made so, I am thoroughly agreeable to making the provision which the gentleman suggests. However, they now have an agency that is well trained, and I think it would be most unfortunate to insert a provision into a law that is only going to be operative for 1 year requiring the discharge of a number of efficient men in order to apply the civil-service requirements to an agency that is only authorized to operate for a year.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Of course, it has been operated over a period of years.

Mr. JONES. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that I am a thorough believer in the civil service or the merit method, and I wish to take this opportunity to state that in applying the civil service or merit system to the other agencies of the Government, which I favor, there should be a provision that would require that examinations be held and selections made from the States and regions where people reside and not have them transferred from one section of the country to another. When the merit system is applied I certainly think this should be done. There should be provision for regional and district examinations, with opportunity for qualified men who live in and who understand the habits and character and nature of the problems of the people of each locality to administer the projects and activities of those localities.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me ask the gentleman another question with reference to the language at the bottom of page 6, dealing with expenditures for printing and binding which can be made without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes. I see no reason why this should be classed as an emergency or as a requirement necessary on account of haste so that it should be taken out from under the provisions of section 3709. The reason I say this is because one of the greatest abuses in the departments that are not amenable to the Appropriations Committee of this House with respect to printing and binding is that they will run up expenditures amounting to almost a million dollars for propaganda and printing and binding and we have nothing to say about it.

The Federal Housing Administration to expend $500,000 in printing and binding. The Resettlement Administration has expended $800,000. This constitutes a grave abuse, and yet we can do nothing about it, except those agencies have to parade before the Appropriations Committee and its specific jurisdictions with respect to printing and binding. Similar language will get into other bills that come along later and there will be other abuses, and it is wholly unjustifiable.

Mr. JONES. I think the Farm Credit Administration is one of the least advertised and most efficient of all the agencies of the Government. They have had a very small expenditure for administration, and they have made loans of millions.

Mr. DIRKSEN. They have spent $130,000 for printing and binding.

Mr. JONES. Most of that was for the regular organization, which is handled in the usual way. May I say to the gentleman that there is very great need for them to secure early action in this matter. In the southern section there is great need for these loans. The pending bill for the Farm Loan Administration is very small. All these requirements will delay the actual making of this amount available.

This provision will enable them to facilitate the small loans that average only about $100 to the individual farmer.

Mr. DIRKSEN. If we do not stop them now we cannot stop them later, and abuses will creep in.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I have received several letters and resolutions urging the passage of this seed-loan bill. I am glad that the House is considering it. We need immediate action. Not only does the farmer need to know what he can count on but there must be time to ship the seed in.

I have received House Concurrent Resolution No. 3 just passed in the twenty-fifth session of the South Dakota Legislature on this subject, which I wish to place in the RECORD. I wish to read and emphasize one paragraph of that resolution:

> Therefore, be it
> Resolved by the house of representatives of the twenty-fifth session (the senate concurring), That we respectfully urge the Congress of the United States to enact such legislation as may be necessary so that the seed grain so furnished shall be paid for by a return bushel for bushel for the seed so furnished, and that your action be speeded so that seed may be had for early seeding.

In the interests of speedy action, I shall not press the bushel-for-bushel plan of repayment at this time, but call it to your attention and earnest consideration. It should be considered in connection with any long-time plan that includes a normal granary. But right now we need immediate action to insure getting seed for planting time. Early seeding is the difference, many times, between a fair crop and possibly no crop.

I offer the full resolution for the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. This is the resolution in full:

> House Concurrent Resolution 3
> Concurrent resolution memorializing Congress for the passage of legislation relating to the furnishing of seed grain to farmers in the drought-stricken areas
> Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That—
> Whereas the agricultural territory in South Dakota has suffered severe drought for the last many years, and it will be necessary for the farmers of this State to secure aid in the purchase of seed grain for seeding purposes in the year 1937; and
> Whereas, the financial condition of the said agricultural district is such that the farmers are unable to pay cash for this seed grain, and there will be need for some settlement otherwise than by cash payment: Therefore be it
> Resolved by the house of representatives of the twenty-fifth session (the senate concurring), That we respectfully urge the Congress of the United States to enact such legislation as may be necessary so that the seed grain so furnished shall be paid for by a return bushel for bushel for the seed so furnished, and that your action be speeded so that seed may be had for early seeding; be it further
> Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house be instructed to send a copy of this resolution to the South Dakota delegation in Congress.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I represent a territory in eastern Montana which is in almost a destitute condition. We are suffering the seventh consecutive drought year in my territory. The farmers there have absolutely nothing with which to buy feed for their livestock, what little is left. They have absolutely nothing with which to buy any seed grain. I can take you into counties in eastern Montana in which they have not even raised a vegetable. There is scarcely any animal life left in the territory. Personally, I would like to see the amount provided in this bill increased to $600, as I know the people of my State are in need of it, and I hope the Members of this House will pass this measure immediately and give the farmers a chance to produce another crop. After all is said and done, if the farmer did not produce, there would be no work for the railroad man who transports the products of the farm to market, as well as livestock. Neither would there be any sale for the manufactured article. As my friend the distinguished gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] said a few moments ago, the depression beginning in 1929 did not break the farmer—he was already broke.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Montana has expired.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that indefinite leave of absence be extended to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday next, McKinley's birthday, I be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein a speech on social security which I delivered in Philadelphia last Thursday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LOANS TO FARMERS FOR CROP PRODUCTION, 1937

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks on the bill H. R. 1545, under discussion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1545) to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1937 and from year to year thereafter, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 1545, with Mr. Cox in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Without objection, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the resolution 1 hour's time is set apart for general debate, to be divided equally between the chairman of the committee [Mr. JONES] and the ranking minority member of that committee. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas for 30 minutes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I shall take very little time to explain this measure briefly. I believe that this particular activity of the Government does about as much good as any of its other many activities. That fact is almost universally recognized. I happen to have my name on the bill, but I think there is as much interest by different Members of the House in this measure as in any measure that I have ever handled, and I am simply the instrument of the Members of the House on both sides. All of the members of the committee have been helpful in working out the provisions of the bill. Practically every Member of the House feels the same way about the measure, and many outside of the committee have introduced measures along similar lines, as, for instance, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN], who has a similar bill and who has always taken a great interest and has been very helpful. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER], the ranking member of the committee, and others have also materially assisted. A great many have spoken to me about the need for early provision of this character.

The bill provides the type of credit that for many years has been very greatly needed. For a long period of time this type of small loans for the individual farmer was furnished at a very high rate of interest. The facilities of banks were suited to commercial needs. Instead of making a loan for a year they would make it for 60 or 90 days, charge 10 percent and a bonus for making out the papers, compound the interest every 60 or 90 days and figure interest as only a good banker can. This made it a burden upon the particular type of farmers who are served by this character of loans. I think a remarkable showing has been made in the way of collection in the history of these transactions. Over a period of years about 70 percent have been collected. Loans in the first few years were limited to those areas that were visited by drought or by flood, or by some pestilence. Consequently the collection of loans in those areas was smaller. Then, too, practically every year the loans have operated there have been certain areas where such conditions prevail, and this situation has brought down the amount of collection. The program has been very efficiently administered. One field man handles from 1,200 to 1,600 and sometimes 1,700 loans. They work overtime in many instances. Collections are looked after just the same, and I think that is proper.

Here is an interesting sidelight: We have been told repeatedly by these field men that where loans have been made in the drought areas the farmers will come in voluntarily, after a good crop year, and pay back the loan, because they want to pay their obligations. I do not think there is any type of loan that is more needed or more appreciated.

We have hastened the matter in every possible way because of the need of this provision in certain areas for early crop planting.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I have been sitting here trying to think something about the possible inconsistencies of our administration in trying to help the farmers with this bill and probably trying to curtail production in other directions, but when we consider that with the entire expenditure of a little over $300,000,000 all told there have been more than 3,000,000 loans made, according to this report, it establishes the fact that these are small loans which go mostly to tenants. Seventy-five percent of them do not own any land at all. Therefore they are more beneficial than any other kind of loan that could possibly be made, and more deserving. Has the gentleman any information as to the amount of loans, on the average, taking all loans, which are something more than 3,000,000?

Mr. JONES. The average amount loaned last year was $88. The average for the year before was about $135. That is crop and feed loans together. The drought loans averaged a little more. I do not have the exact figures on that, but they were not a great deal more. The officials have cooperated with the other departments and they have in practically all instances required that the applicant go along with whatever program is fashioned for the farm group. I will say to the gentleman that no matter how much desire a man may have to go along with any orderly or reasonable program, if he does not have the funds with which to finance himself he cannot go along.

Mr. MAY. As I understand it, these are loans made through the county agricultural agents of the different States?

Mr. JONES. Yes; and through field representatives and local committees.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman has said that a great deal of trouble has occurred in the past because these farmers have been unable to secure loans at a reasonable interest rate. I am heartily in accord with this legislation. I think the sooner it is passed the sooner these farmers may have an opportunity to secure their seed. It is necessary for them to secure their seed in order to raise their crops, but is not the interest rate, shown on page 3 of this bill, higher than it should be on the loans?

Mr. JONES. I may say to the gentleman that the committee has agreed to offer an amendment making the rate 4 percent instead of 5½ percent. I will say to the gentleman, however, that the interest rate is not of as much importance in this particular instance as it is in many instances because of the small amount of the loan and the limited time which it runs. For instance, sometimes it only runs a few months. At any rate the committee of the House and of the Senate also decided to offer the 4-percent provision.

Mr. DOWELL. But, Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the gentleman that a dollar to the small borrower, who is under the necessity of securing money to buy his seed, is just as important as many dollars would be to a heavy borrower.

Mr. JONES. I agree with the gentleman entirely.

Mr. DOWELL. The Government, as I understand it, is borrowing money at much less rate than 4 percent. The Government is getting all the money it wants at a much lower rate, if I am not mistaken. Why should the Government want more interest than it must pay?

Mr. JONES. I will state to the gentleman that the Government does not make any profit on this. The gentleman realizes that the cost of administering small loans is heavy. For that reason the local banks charged these high interest rates which I mentioned awhile ago. The Government does not get back the cost of administering the loans with this small interest payment, even if there were no losses of principal.

Mr. DOWELL. That may be. It is in the cost of administering, however.

Mr. JONES. I just wanted to correct the impression that the Government is making any profit on this.

Mr. DOWELL. But the Government is securing greater interest than it pays, and while the cost of Government administration is one item, the interest rate is higher than the Government pays.

Mr. JONES. But the Government is paying a part of the cost of administering, and also any losses. They are making loans that the applicant cannot secure elsewhere. I do not think it is a matter that involves any great discussion. I think the arrangement to cut the interest rate to 4 percent should be satisfactory to the gentleman.

Mr. DOWELL. I understand, of course, there will be some loans that will not be repaid and there will be some loss in administering, but here is a case of necessity, and the Government is undertaking to provide the means by which a farmer may raise his crop and feed his family.

Mr. JONES. I will state to the gentleman that we have never had any particular complaints from the farmers themselves.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. TARVER. As far as the question of profit, which the gentleman has been discussing, is concerned, may I ask the chairman if it is not true that some of the States have repaid as little of the principal as 2.9 percent, and if, under the percentages of repayment had from all States, there is any possibility of the Government even regaining the money loaned, much less making a profit?

Mr. JONES. That is correct. However, I do not think any of them have run as low as 2.9. There are some in the drought areas that have reached as low as 15 or 20 percent. In the gentleman's own State it runs nearly 90 percent. In the particular showing the gentleman has been looking at there is one that runs as low as 2.9 percent; but a lot of these loans are wheat loans not yet due, and they will not be due until the harvesting season.

Mr. TARVER. May I request the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, in connection with his remarks, to place in the RECORD at this point the statistics showing the number of loans, the amount of the loans, and the collections thereof by States? The chairman has them in his possession.

Mr. JONES. I shall be pleased to do so.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, in connection with my remarks, to place these statistics in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to pursue my questioning for one additional moment?

Mr. JONES. Yes; but I promised to yield to others.

Mr. TARVER. Directing the gentleman's attention to section 4 (a), relating to recording fees and limiting the amount of recording fees to 75 cents——

Mr. JONES. Will not the gentleman kindly withhold his questions about that until we reach that section? I shall be pleased to answer him under the 5-minute rule. I promised to yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN].

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. So that there may be no misunderstanding, will the gentleman kindly explain subparagraph (c) of section 2 on page 2 with reference to prior liens and the availability of liens under this act, should there be prior liens during past years?

Mr. JONES. This particular provision has reference to areas in which there may be two loans in the same year. This limitation applies only to the year in which the loan is made; in other words, the present calendar year.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Then, should there be a lien of $400 from 1934, 1935, or 1936, funds would be still available to such a man up to $400?

Mr. JONES. Insofar as the law is concerned, there would be; and I expect those things may be taken into consideration in determining the amount of the loan. There is no limitation, however, so far as the law is concerned, and the loan could be made regardless of loans in prior years.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. It is also stated in the proviso of the same paragraph that where there is an emergency situation, such as drought or crop pestilence, that these limitations may be waived and any amount may be loaned.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture has very properly referred to the efficient and splendid way in which this agency has been conducted and I heartily concur in his words of commendation. Is it not also a fact that the average employee of the seed-loan office receives about the lowest salary of any employee of any Government agency?

Mr. JONES. I think when one considers the character and responsibility of his work he is probably the lowest paid of any.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Does not my friend the distinguished chairman feel that there should be some encouragement to these men in recognizing their efficient services by way of some reasonable increase in salary to meet the increase in the cost of living? I understand that the average salary of a supervisor or field agent is less than $150 a month; and many of the incumbents have been serving 4 or 5 years with no promotion and increase in salary.

Mr. JONES. I should not want to speak for the Farm Credit Administration.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Surely no Member of the House is better qualified to speak for them than the distinguished gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JONES. Inasmuch as this is simply a temporary provision for the year, I would rather not go into that subject at this time. When a permanent credit provision is made under the new set-up, if we have one, I think provision should be made to pay these men on the same basis as other Government employees.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Section 2 (b) provides that the borrower shall give a first lien or an agreement to give a first lien. Everybody knows what a first lien is and how it operates, but what about this agreement to give a first lien? Will the gentleman from Texas tell us how that will work?

Mr. JONES. That language was incorporated for the reason that in certain States the State constitution forbids or the law forbids the giving of a crop mortgage before the crop is in the ground or before it is grown. In order to extend this aid in those States, the agency simply takes an agreement from the beneficiary to give a lien, and the agency takes the lien after the conditions have been met which enables the beneficiary to give a legal lien.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Would it not be practicable to shift this work of certifying emergency areas from the President to somebody else? It seems like too small a matter to worry the President about.

Mr. JONES. I assume that in matters of this kind the President usually takes the recommendations of the administrative authority.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. I note that the bill provides for a maximum loan of $400 to any one borrower. Is there anything in the bill that would prohibit several tenants of one landlord from borrowing?

Mr. JONES. No; there is not. It has been the custom in the past to place a limit because a good many large insurance companies and mortgage companies have got hold of some of the land and they like to use this method of finance. In order to keep from financing them it has been thought wise in the administration of the act to make such a limitation. I have always been a little doubtful as to the wisdom of that limitation, but it was considered desirable because we have nearly always had a limited fund and it was thought the money ought to be spread out.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. This further question, if the gentleman will permit—the gentleman may have discussed it, but I did not hear it—in this case will the landlord be required to waive his lien as in previous years?

Mr. JONES. That is a matter we have discussed from year to year.

If the landlord were not required to give a waiver, especially in certain areas where the average unit is small, the Farm Credit officials claim it would be difficult to collect from the tenant. The landlord gets the benefit of the production just the same.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. In connection with the fall crop loans of several years ago, the title, referring to a particular year, could be construed as a limitation. In view of the amendment proposed to the title, providing for crop production loans and harvesting during the year 1937, I understand that it is not intended to limit it so that the Government cannot make fall crop loans.

Mr. JONES. No; this is intended to cover fall crop loans as well.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. It is intended that crops planted in the fall, even though the harvest may go into another calendar year, are covered by this act and loans may be made?

Mr. JONES. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. And this title does not limit the agency in that respect?

Mr. JONES. No.

Mr. WARREN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the gentleman if this is the same as a bill that was vetoed last year?

Mr. JONES. It has been broadened from a seed loan to a crop-production loan bill, and has been further safeguarded.

Mr. WARREN. Does not the gentleman think he has met in this bill the objections that were made in criticism last year?

Mr. JONES. I hope so. I may say to the gentleman I feel confident if the bill is passed in its present form it will probably be allowed to stand. Of course, I do not know.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN].

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, this bill is emergency legislation for two reasons. In the first place, it is necessary to secure the funds authorized in the bill so as to include the amount in the first deficiency appropriation bill if the farmers of the country are to have the benefit of the legislation and procure their seed loans and seed in sufficient time for spring planting.

In the second place, it is emergency legislation, particularly in the drought areas up in the Northwest, where there was a complete crop failure last year. Thousands of families on the farms are on relief, and unless they get a loan through this means they will not be able to secure seed to plant crops and take their families off relief. At the present time the thousands of families who are on the relief rolls receive from $30 to $70 a month from the Federal relief agencies for themselves and their livestock.

Those of us who are interested in this legislation feel it is a most worthwhile measure to provide funds so that these people may rehabilitate themselves, produce their own crops, and again become self-sustaining.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MASSINGALE. The gentleman mentioned the fact the main importance of this act is to make funds available to tenant farmers and the like so that they may begin to plant their seed. I think he is right. I want to call attention to this, however: I believe there is nothing in the pending bill which facilitates the making of these loans. It just simply gives authority to the various offices to make the loans. Now, we are confronted with this kind of a condition in Oklahoma.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Will the gentleman ask his question, because I only have 5 minutes?

Mr. MASSINGALE. Would the gentleman support an amendment, or will the committee offer an amendment, providing that these agencies shall immediately make the loans—for instance, for such purposes as planting oats, which must be planted in our part of the world immediately?

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. I surely would, if it were necessary, but the loans to be made under this bill cover all kinds of seed and general crop production as well, so that the seed may be put in the ground, whether it be wheat, oats, barley, or other crops that are planted in the spring.

Up in the Northwest section, where there was virtually a complete crop failure last year in the spring-wheat areas, it is necessary to secure from three and a half million to four million bushels of seed wheat. Good spring wheat is not available in this country. The only place our farmers can secure this seed will be up in Canada. They will have to go over on the Canadian side in order to secure the necessary seed with which to plant crops in our section this year. This is also true in the States of Montana, North and South Dakota, as well as Minnesota. The funds should therefore be made available just as quickly as possible and not, as in the past, compel us to wait until the latter part of March or April before the money was sent to the farmers.

We have the assurance if the funds are provided this month, within a few days after the appropriation is made the agency will begin to function and lend the farmers the money so that they may buy their seed.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I think the gentleman and I are in accord. There are certain regions of the country where oats will have to be planted right away or not planted at all.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KINZER. I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. MASSINGALE. If oats are not planted now, they cannot be planted at all. That is the condition for which I am trying to make provision in this bill. That is why I made the suggestion that this should operate right now.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. I may say to the gentleman that they have promised that they will operate immediately, and as soon as the appropriation is available. That is why we are interested in getting this authorization in the first deficiency bill, which will be considered this week and undoubtedly be passed by both Houses, becoming law within the next 2 weeks. I do not suppose down in the gentleman's country they start planting before the middle of February, and if they do not begin before then, I feel satisfied the department in charge of the administration of this act will see that they get the money.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Will the gentleman support an amendment to that effect?

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Yes; I will support an amendment.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I agree with the gentleman in his remarks concerning the urgency for this legislation. However, he stated that the farmers in the Northwest were receiving from $30 to $70 per family. In my State they do not receive that much. They receive from $12 to $28 per family.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. What State?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. South Dakota. These are subsistence grants, and there is no margin allowed for the purchase of seed.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. The gentleman is correct, but it is my understanding that prior to November 3 they received considerably more in South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes, before November 3, some did.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK].

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, it is very seldom I raise any objection to legislation that is progressive. I am pleased to see the majority of this House further progressive legislation. I think the intent of this bill is to further a progressive act of Congress, but I want to point out some of the dangers in the bill that we will face soon after it is passed and put into operation.

One mistake we have made is found on page 2, line 1, beginning "upon such terms and conditions, and subject to such regulations, as the Governor may prescribe." We have had experience with this Governor before, and when we delegate to him the power to make regulations and prescribe such conditions as he may see fit, our experience in the past has been that the farmers cannot comply with such regulations.

I think the Congress should be definite and give the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration instructions as to what he shall do. We could well take time enough to outline a set of rules and regulations that would permit these farmers to actually get the grain and plant it in time.

Then there is the provision on the same page, in lines 18 and 19, with respect to the purchase or production of feed for livestock providing for a first lien upon the livestock to be fed.

This is the reason we are losing thousands of head of cattle in North Dakota at this very moment. Yesterday it was 38 below zero out there. They have not had any grass for 7 years and cannot comply with these regulations, and we know the result will be the loss of thousands and thousands of head of cattle. They cannot get this relief, because those who hold the first or second mortgage will not release, and it does not make any difference whether it is a Government agency or not. The Agricultural Production Credit Corporation will not release, and some of the other organizations, financed by the Government, will not release. The result is the farmer goes home unable to secure these releases and his stock dies.

I have not any fault to find with the interest rates, although the Government itself is borrowing money all the way from 2 percent to 2⅞ percent, and it seems to me if we charged the farmer 3 percent we would be charging enough. However, the point I wish to make to the membership of this House is that we are going to pass this legislation tied up with rules and regulations which will be promulgated by the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, and it will be impossible for these farmers to actually get the seed.

It seems to me it is not just to have all the stir we hear every year in this Congress about always giving aid to the farmers. Last year under the seed regulations we only furnished the farmers with $16,621,000. It costs $51,000,000 to build one battleship, and with all the seed money we gave the farmers of America last year we could not build the tail end of a battleship; and the security of this country does not lie in battleships. The security of this country lies in the food granaries of this country—the food supply of the country. If we do not give them seed, if we do not strip this legislation of the rules and regulations which will prevent them from getting aid, you can just add some more millions to those who will have to have Government aid upon which to live.

While I wish to compliment the committee for bringing out a bill providing for $50,000,000, I think it will take at least that amount, and probably more, and I want you to understand it comes with a little bit of delicacy on our part to say much about this bill, because for 7 years we have had to come back to this Congress and ask for aid, although this period is the first time we have had to do such a thing in half a century. Aid us when we need aid, and make the rules fair and just. Let us cut out red tape and get down to business.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER].

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I am sure those of you who represent agricultural districts appreciate the promptness of the Committee on Agriculture in reporting this very meritorious bill and in securing prompt action thereon.

There has been something said about the losses in connection with the administration of a loan of this type. In some instances this has been brought about because of the delay in making the loans. I know in my own State of South Carolina, unless they can get this money in time to buy fertilizer and get started, it is impossible to make a fair cotton crop.

The making of this type of loan has been going on ever since 1921, but it may be of interest to some of the newer Members to know that the first time a seed loan was passed in the interest of the South was in 1929. In speaking for my bill at that time I stated that in making this type of loan to cotton farmers of the South it would prove to be the best type of loan made by the Government to any class of people, as far as repayments were concerned. I am pleased to state to you that the record since that time, including 1936, has proven that my statement was correct. In other words, the farmers of the South have paid anywhere from 85 percent to 100 percent.

For instance, the record for 1936 will show that the four States, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida, doing business through the Columbia, S. C., seed-loan office, have paid up to December 31, 1936, 90 percent of the total amount borrowed in the spring of 1936, and there will be some additional payments on the balance due.

In other words, some of these States will pay 100 percent of the amount borrowed.

I realize that in a great many States, including the State that the gentleman who just preceded me represents, perhaps they have not paid as a whole over 30 percent, but this is largely true, as I understand, because of droughts, floods, and so forth.

We have in the South three types of borrowers. A class of farmers well able to make their own crops without borrowing or who can go to the banks and get all the money they need. Then we have a second class of borrowers, who are unable to borrow from the banks, but who have a sufficient amount of security to qualify for loans from the Production Credit Corporation. Then there is that large class of people living in poverty, through no fault of theirs, but because they are living under a program we have permitted to go on during all of these years, whereby they have not had any say-so whatsoever as to what they may get out of their crops in the way of prices, and therefore are forced to get a seed loan or to go to the relief agency or Rehabilitation Administration.

I may say here that unless you provide for this type of loan they will go to the Rehabilitation Administration or relief agency, where it will prove very unsatisfactory to that class of people, as well as proving to be very costly to the Government.

Now, the only opposition to this legislation is a class of farmers well able to take care of themselves. Naturally, because of their selfish interest, in that they will be permitted to increase their production of cotton if loans are not made to this class of farmers who, because of not receiving loans, would be unable to produce more cotton, which is certainly purely a selfish interest and does not deal with the real merits of the loan.

We have people on this side of the House perfectly willing to make loans to relieve corporations and railroads to the extent of millions of dollars, but unwilling to take care of the little farmers who are not able of taking care of themselves.

I say to you that unless Congress works out a program whereby this great class of people will be able to make a sufficient income with which to pay their taxes and their obligations, as well as to be able to market their products so that they will have a profit, then it will be useless to try, and stop making this type of loan for many years to come.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. I yield.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. From my association with the gentleman on the Agricultural Committee, I know of his interest in farmers and agriculture. He made the statement about in the future there being some prospect to do away with these seed loans. What measure does my colleague have in mind that is more effective in a small way?

Mr. FULMER. When we passed the Triple A and the control bill it was done for the purpose of helping farmers solve their farm problems. This legislation went a long way in doing this. The only thing that was wrong was that the Bankhead bill was administered very unfairly as far as Tennessee cotton farmers were concerned. However, the United States Supreme Court canceled the Triple A, claiming that this legislation was unconstitutional, and the Bankhead bill was repealed.

Until you bring about the passage of legislation whereby we can have a reasonable control over production in line with supply and demand, with a reasonable surplus always on hand to be fed into the market during short-crop years and at times when speculators would attempt to fix prices, as stated, you will have to continue to make this type of loan, as well as carry on under the Rehabilitation Administration, and, in a great many instances, spend lots of money under the relief program. [Applause.]

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILCHRIST].

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, much has been said here to the effect that we are always helping the farmer. On the authority of an ex-Member of Congress, I want to present these facts.

For every 34 cents income made by the 32,000,000 people on the farms this past year, everybody else—including those on relief, on the average—had an income of $1. How long would your business last if every other person in the country got a full dollar every time you got 34 cents?

From 1921 to 1936 the farmer's whole property dropped twenty-nine billions while all other property increased forty-seven billions in value. Where would you be if this happened to the business you are in?

At the present time in many parts of this country farmers are in great distress.

In some parts of my district the thermometer is down to 20° below zero. In 1934 we had a drought in certain parts of Iowa which was unprecedented. In 1935 the grasshoppers destroyed the crops in the same section of the country, and in 1936 in these same places the drought was worse than ever before. I have a bushel basket of telegrams from the folks out there, from chambers of commerce, boards of supervisors, farm agents, and others, who say that there is positive distress and that the relief so far extended has been slow and inadequate. I read the morning papers and see that the flood areas are to be helped and I am glad of it. I shall vote for aid wherever distress exists. I am glad to know that the Army and the President are to give relief to those flood areas; but in these farm areas of which I speak we must also have adequate help and have it at once. W. P. A. has quit functioning out there and Resettlement has been slow and inadequate. If your cattle have no feed, and if the snow is 15 inches deep and the thermometer stands at 20° below zero, they might as well be drowned in a flood. What are you going to do with your cattle if you have no feed to give them? We must pass some kind of adequate relief and get this money for these distressed people at once. Interest charges should not be above 4 percent. Low interest is all that the farmer can pay. I have in my hand a study as to the amount of interest that the Government is paying. There are 57 different varieties of interest and all but one of them under 4 percent, most of them at 2 and at 1 percent, and some under 1 percent. So that when the committee proposes in this bill to charge 4 percent, it is then making a rate which is perhaps more than it ought to be. My friend from North Dakota speaks about regulations. At one time there were regulations which provided that certain governmental authorities would take chattel mortgages, and at that time I called attention to the fact that those chattel mortgages required the poor devil—and I use that word as an expression of endearment—to mortgage everything he had, even the Bible on his center table. The mortgages were so written. I have been furnished with copies of mortgages which are used in the present case, and I find no criticism of them. The crop loan is to be a simple loan on the crop to be raised. That seems to me to be fair and equitable. I think some features of the bill are not going to work, but it is much better than nothing. So I am going to vote for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes additional to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILCHRIST. Yes.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. The gentleman is aware, no doubt, of the fact that unless this bill is put through and a liberal construction placed upon the loaning of this money the applicants will have no other source from which to make loans. If they did have it, they would go to their financial institutions and get the loans, without the Government red tape generally insisted upon.

Mr. GILCHRIST. That statement is quite true. Speaking about what has happened in some of these areas that are suffering, I report that a meeting was recently held in one of the counties in my district. It was in the nature of a sit-down strike. The people gathered in the courthouse and demanded that there should be some further relief. The sheriff of that county, I think inadvisedly, dispersed that crowd with tear gas. On the next day they met again, and a little low-voiced sweet woman got up and proposed to the same crowd a method of administering the law, and by a soft word, which always turneth away wrath, she was able to make a compromise with the relief committee of that county and to provide a means of administering the law so that it would be satisfactory to those in deep distress—and that occurred only last week. But they have no money and they cannot get the money. They need food for the people, the children, and the families. Just now they need fuel for their families. These things are to come before us tomorrow. Now we are talking about feed for the horses, the milk cows, and perhaps a few chickens. Feed they do not now have, and they must get it in order to preserve life on these farms.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILCHRIST. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. The experience of the past has been that very, very few loans have been made for feed for livestock. Does the gentleman believe there is any likelihood of the policy being different in the future? Does the gentleman hope that there will be any loans under this bill for livestock? Personally I do not.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Personally I do hope there will be. Last week the Resettlement Administration extended its regulation in that respect in my country.

Mr. BOILEAU. They must all give a first lien under the provisions of this bill on their livestock, and I submit in my area there is not a single farmer who would want this help who has not already got a first mortgage on his cattle, and to get the mortgagee to waive his first lien is impossible.

Mr. GILCHRIST. The gentleman knows that we discussed that in the committee and came to the conclusion that perhaps the gentleman was right about that, but that the seed now reserved can be replaced under this bill and be used for feed.

Mr. BOILEAU. Yes; but a representative of the Department also admitted that very few loans have been or are likely to be made for feed for livestock.

Mr. GILCHRIST. The proposition this afternoon is simply that distress must be met. Iowa has not been a drought State, but during the last 3 years certain parts of Iowa have suffered because of what I spoke of a while ago—the drought and the grasshopper. There are perhaps only two counties in my own district that are in this condition.

In an adjoining district many of the counties are in that situation. It is only a humanitarian thing we are doing here today. We must go forward with it, and although I know the better treatment under the bill will go to the States farther west, we are not jealous of them. We want them to be relieved from the distress and suffering they are now under. Give feed, give seed, give fuel, and give food to worthy farmers.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILCHRIST. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. The observation of the gentleman concerning the interest rate is interesting to me. Does not the gentleman look upon these loans to the small farmers at a low interest rate as a species of crop insurance? There has been some discussion as to whether 5½ percent or 4 percent is preferable.

Mr. GILCHRIST. The farmer, of course, must have seed before he can have a crop, and in that sense it insures crops.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR].

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I hope this House will unanimously pass this resolution. Representing as I do one of the great agricultural sections of the South, I know how the farmers feel about these Government direct crop loans. I unhesitatingly state there is no legislation that has been passed in this Congress in a great number of years that has so directly benefited the farmers as have these seed and crop loans. Our people are enthusiastic for the continuation of this loan. They feel as though they are under obligation to no one when they know the Government will make a small loan to them which will enable them to make their crop; it makes them feel independent. There is nothing that assures a man more than independence. Confirm him in the belief that this Government has confidence in him and that he is a part of it and you contribute worthwhile material to the cornerstone of this Republic. I know of nothing that has contributed more to the independence of the agricultural interests than the assurance that the Government itself is willing to loan them money when years of experience has demonstrated that it is hard to get money from other sources—and even getting credit and accommodation from other sources has been most oppressive for the average small farmer.

These loans not only help the farmer but they help business in every community. They help the fertilizer man. They help the small merchant; when these businessmen know the Government is going to put into the hands of the farmers checks to make their crops and buy their supplies, they do not have to pay large sums of interest at borrowing places in order to accommodate the farmers. These items which the farmer must have can be purchased at cash prices, which subserves both the farmer's as well as the merchant's interest. It has been a wonderful and outstanding piece of legislation, and I am much gratified to feel that this Congress will pass this without any opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] such time as he may desire.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Chairman, this bill authorizes an appropriation of $50,000,000 for crop production, harvesting, and feed for livestock for the year 1937, to that class of energetic and helpless farmers who are unable to secure credit from banks or elsewhere. These farmers are not responsible for the plight in which they find themselves. In 1933 corn was selling for approximately 15 cents per bushel, wheat was selling for 30 cents per bushel, and cotton 5 and 6 cents per pound. This class of farmers remained on the farm at these prices and year after year became deeper in debt. With better prices for their commodities during the last 3 years they have paid their past-due taxes and liquidated much of their indebtedness, however only a small percent can furnish security required by bankers for a loan. In many rural sections there are no banks or lending institutions. Thousands of banks closed all over the country, and in one day prior to the banking holiday 68 banks were closed in Georgia. Necessarily, the banks and lending institutions require more adequate security than they did prior to 1933.

It is true that the Production Credit Associations are supplying credit to a large number of farmers and rendering a splendid service, but the object of this bill is to continue to serve that class of farmers in every section of the country who are not in position to avail themselves of the lending facilities of these associations. Farmers as a general rule are in much better financial condition than prior to 1933, but there still exists a need for continuance of the policy of loaning direct to farmers who are unable to receive benefits from the Production Credit Associations or from private lending agencies.

I regard the feed and seed loan to farmers who are unable to obtain credit elsewhere the most helpful service this Government has rendered to a particular class of farmers, and this class of borrowers in my district and State have paid back from 97 to 100 percent annually on these loans. Without this act, thousands of our farmers would have been unemployed and forced to abandon farm life, many of whom have no experience in any other line of work.

Under this act the borrower cannot obtain more than $400 and the loan must be secured by a first lien on the crop. To be eligible, the applicant must establish that he is unable to procure a loan elsewhere adequate to meet his needs. Preference is given to applications of small cash requirements.

Continuance of the feed and seed loan, together with continuance of the activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Commodity Credit Corporation which was reported unanimously from our committee and passed almost unanimously by both branches of Congress last week, is most helpful to all classes of our people. Loans by the Commodity Credit Corporation have been quite beneficial in stabilizing the price of cotton and other commodities. It is true that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Commodity Credit Corporation did not make extensive loans last year, but encouraged banks and private sources to make loans. I think it is a wise and good policy to keep these agencies with machinery intact as "stand-by" agencies to meet emergencies which may arise in the future.

I hope we can get this bill through immediately and have loans made available to farmers before planting season.

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON].

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Chairman, I asked for this time in order to propound a question or two to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture.

I would like to ask if it is to be the policy this year to make all seed and feed loans through the Farm Credit Administration?

Mr. JONES. It is the intention of this legislation to place that again in the Farm Credit Administration.

Mr. CARLSON. The gentleman well knows that last year we had considerable difficulty in securing seed loans because there was a question as to whether the loan should be made by the Farm Credit Administration or the Resettlement Administration. This delay caused much anxiety and also loss, as the farmers were unable to secure seeds when needed.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman will recall that those provisions were made by Executive order, and the legislation did not become effective last year.

Mr. CARLSON. The Resettlement Administration last year did make seed and feed loans. Will they be in position to make them this year to farmers who are in need of them?

Mr. JONES. Of a certain type, I understand; but they do not cover this particular field.

Mr. CARLSON. I want to compliment the chairman and the members of the Committee on Agriculture for bringing in this bill at this time and trust that it will be hastily passed by the Senate and signed by the President in order to furnish seed and feed needed by farmers for spring planting. In the last session of Congress I contended that a $200 loan limit was not sufficient for farmers in my section and am happy to note that this bill carries a $400 maximum.

Mr. JONES. I thank the gentleman.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 2½ minutes.

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I know of no legislation that has come before Congress that seems to meet with such general approval as this measure. It puts the little man without banking credit in a position to borrow from the Farm Credit Administration small amounts of money necessary to purchase seed for his crops and feed for his cattle, or for the general employment of help on his place. I know of nothing that contributes so well, and it is infinitely better than money expended for relief, because it helps the farmer to help himself. While the amounts are small as compared to many large bank loans, yet to the individual to whom credit is extended it means his very business. As such, I think when we help that farmer we are helping to find employment. We are helping to produce and we are helping agriculture itself.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, the answer to the criticism of the gentleman from Massachusetts, wherein the farmers who had not paid their loans were criticized, and to the question raised by the gentleman from Colorado is to be found in the statement that we have not solved the farm problem. This is just a shot in the arm, but we must take it. We can do nothing at this time except to pass this bill, and I hope it passes without a dissenting vote. Let us remember, however, that this will not solve the problem. The facts of the case are the farmer has not been getting enough for his produce for years. I have for years refused to go along with the group that believed in fixed prices for basic farm commodities, but I see no permanent solution except by fixing prices on basic farm commodities, and this can be done only through control of production. We find our hands tied in this direction, however, by decisions of the Supreme Court. I am, therefore, earnestly in favor of a constitutional amendment giving this Congress the power to legislate in an effective way to keep the farm group of America from drifting into peasantry. If we are to have an agriculture that receives the cost of production plus a fair profit, I can see no solution except along these lines.

This bill has been carefully drawn. I believe the interest rate provided should be even lower. I think interest has been one of our troubles. It must be still lower. Looking through a long series of years, the farmer has not made his ends meet; he has not received enough for his produce to balance the cost of production and leave him any profit. As long as the farmer could raise the price of his land and sell it to his neighbor or somebody else who came along he managed fairly well, but when there was no further rise in the price of land or no buyer for the land, then came the collapse. This bill should be passed. Even though we lose a quarter of the money, it will prove to be money well invested.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. In addition to the solution of the farm problem as presented by the gentleman from Oregon, another problem, a related problem, must be solved, the problem of unemployment, so that the people who work in our cities may be reemployed. But here again we run up against the same obstacle mentioned by the gentleman, the opinion of the court. To solve the farm problem and the unemployment problem we must have further Federal authority.

Mr. PIERCE. The only way to provide that Federal authority is through a constitutional amendment, and this should be the pressing problem of this Congress.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Oregon yield to permit me to ask the chairman of the committee a question?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. I call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture to the latter part of subsection (b) of section 2, relating to money borrowed for the purchase or production of feed for livestock, and the requirement that a mortgage on the livestock must be given.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, hereinafter in this act referred to as the Governor, is hereby authorized to make loans to farmers in the United States (including Hawaii and Puerto Rico), for fallowing, for planting, for cultivation, for production of crops, for harvesting of crops, for supplies incident and necessary to such production or harvesting, and for feed for livestock, or for any of such purposes. Such loans shall be made and collected through such agencies, upon such terms and conditions, and subject to such regulations, as the Governor may prescribe.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I did not consume any time in the general debate on this bill. I rise at this time, however, to express my deep interest in this legislation .

Mr. Chairman, in my judgment, no relief granted by the Government through its various relief agencies has accomplished more real good where benefit was needed than these loans to the small farmers of America. I know from experience that many of those who have received loans of this character have been kept off relief rolls because the loan has enabled the farmer to raise his crop and to make a living for himself and his family.

The question of repayment of these loans was mentioned in debate; while in some sections of the country, due to drought and other conditions, there may have been small repayment of the loans, yet in many other sections of the country the loans have in large measure been repaid. In the congressional district which I represent, while I do not have the figures as to repayment in 1936, as I recall, in 1935 practically 90 percent of the loans in my district have been repaid. I doubt if there is another lending agency of the Government which has experienced a higher percentage of collections than the Farm Credit Administration on these small loans.

This bill authorizes an appropriation of $50,000,000 for the making of these crop loans. Under the terms of the bill, loans may be made to farmers for fallowing, for planting, for cultivation, for production of crops, for harvesting of crops, for supplies incident and necessary to such production or harvesting, and for feed for livestock, or for any of such purposes.

To be eligible for such a loan the bill provides that an applicant must first establish to the satisfaction of the representative of the Farm Credit Administration that the applicant is unable to procure from other sources a loan in an amount reasonably adequate to meet his needs for the purpose for which loans are authorized under the act, and preference is given to the application of farmers whose cash requirements are small, the maximum loan to any one farmer being $400. The interest rate prescribed is 5½ percent per annum.

I congratulate the Committee on Agriculture for presenting this bill for early consideration, as crop conditions in Texas and other Southern States will require that these loans be made available at once.

The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, my colleague from Texas [Mr. JONES], is to be commended for the valuable work which he has done, not only in this instance but in previous years, in securing the enactment of legislation of this character.

The small farmers of America were the first to feel the effects of the depression, and I fear they will be the last to be relieved therefrom. For many of them there will always be more or less a depression, and the Government in helping the unfortunate who need help cannot find a class that is more needy and more deserving of help than those tenant farmers who farm on a small scale and who without these loans during the past few years would have been wholly unable to earn a livelihood. The need still exists, and this bill should be immediately enacted into law.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

I ask the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture whether my understanding is correct that the Senate has reduced the interest rate to 4 percent?

Mr. JONES. The Senate committee reported out an amendment to that effect, and our committee is going to offer a similar amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. So the Committee on Agriculture wants the interest rate reduced to 4 percent?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. What about increasing the amount of the loan? I understand the other body has increased the limit to $600. Is this correct?

Mr. JONES. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the limit be raised?

Mr. JONES. We had hoped to keep the present limit inasmuch as the fund is limited. We want it as widely available and as widely spread as possible. If a great emergency arises the President may increase it.

Mr. RANKIN. I agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON], that no money appropriated by this Government does more good than these small loans. I am very glad to see the interest reduced to 4 percent, and as far as I am concerned I am willing to reduce it still further.

There is another matter to which I call the gentleman's attention, however, and that is that I doubt whether this amount will be sufficient for the actual needs of some of these farmers. I am wondering if the committee would consider raising that to $800 or $1,000?

Mr. JONES. I may say to the gentleman we would rather not. I think there are certain apparent reasons for not agreeing to the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. RANKIN. The committee will go along with us up to the amount set forth in the Senate bill, $600, will they not?

Mr. JONES. I would rather not make a commitment.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the provision of the Senate bill will be agreed to, and when I say that I am not quarreling with the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture nor with any other member of the Committee on Agriculture. However, I am of the opinion that we should raise this amount to $600.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I may say I propose to offer an amendment increasing the sum from $400 to $600, which is in accordance with the proviso in the Senate bill.

Mr. RANKIN. I may say to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] that I shall be glad to support his amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I endeavored to propound a question of the chairman of the committee a few minutes ago with reference to subdivision (b) of the act, which provides that any money which may be borrowed under this act for the purpose of buying feed for stock or for the purpose of feeding stock shall be lent only upon a mortgage being given on the stock that the feed is to be fed to. This is in order to secure the repayment of the loan.

In the eastern part of Oklahoma, and I think this is true throughout a great portion of the Southwest, I doubt if today, after 2 years of drought in addition to the other effects of the depression, there is a farmer in that section who has a cow, mule, or horse that at this moment has not a mortgage on it. With that predicate, may I ask the chairman of the committee if it is contemplated in this legislation to make it possible for that farmer who already has his stock mortgaged to be able to get the benefits under the feed provisions of this act.

Mr. JONES. I may say to the gentleman this bill requires a first mortgage on the livestock. There are many instances similar to the one to which he refers that have been handled under the Resettlement Administration by allocation from the Public Works or relief bills. If we open up that particular field it will take most of the other loans probably that may go to crops. I understand provision will probably be made for continuation of loans of that character in emergency areas through the resettlement or through some administrative agency similar to that.

Mr. NICHOLS. The committee was not attempting then by this legislation to reach the farmer who was really in the most dire need at this time? In other words, it is contemplated that the Resettlement Administration will probably carry on in some way with their feed and seed loans as they have in the past year?

Mr. JONES. I understand it is contemplated some provision will be made. Of course, I do not know how much; but some provision will be made along those lines.

Mr. NICHOLS. Unless the gentleman's assurance is pretty good, I would support an amendment making it possible for these fellows who have been forced on account of the depression to mortgage everything they have, to secure benefits under this bill.

Mr. JONES. I cannot give the gentleman direct assurance, because I do not have control of that matter, but I understand it is proposed to make such provision.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, while we are discussing the distress in the western part of the United States, may I humbly call your attention to a great catastrophe that is striking the Ohio River Valley at this time. We of Ohio and neighboring States would like to impress upon the Members of the House, if we can, that this great flood is a disaster not only to our vicinity but to the whole of the United States. In the past we have found when the flood waters receded enthusiasm and sympathy receded with the flood waters. Mr. Chairman and my colleagues, I am going to ask you not to become tired of me in my humble effort to try to have continued a program for the lessening of the possibilities of these great catastrophes in the future. The doctors of our country have attacked some of the great diseases that were heretofore thought incurable and have found cures. We have found in the district around Dayton, Ohio, that these floods can be stopped, which at one time we thought we could not stop. May I ask you, my colleagues, to cooperate in supporting any reasonable appropriation which may be brought in here for the alleviation of flood sufferers or for a program which will make impossible the recurrence of such catastrophes.

We have ample legislation at this time. We have the Weeks law, which, with some slight amendments, could be made applicable to a situation of this kind. We could also help through our navigation laws. We can help through our soil-conservation measures and through our flood-control measures. I had the privilege of playing a very humble part in the last war and I also had the sad experience of being a young civil engineer with the Pennsylvania Railroad during the great flood of 1913. May I say, Mr. Chairman, that I feel this flood catastrophe leaves in my mind as horrible memories probably as does the war. I trust that those Members who have not had to live in a flood section will cooperate with us, as we are glad to cooperate with the farmers of the West and as we were glad to cooperate with those of New England who were recently stricken by flood, and help us.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWEENEY. I yield to my colleague from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman state, if it is a fact, that the flood now visiting the Ohio Valley is by far the most destructive of any flood in our previous history?

Mr. McSWEENEY. It is 7 feet above any previous high. The gentlemen from Cincinnati and other Members know what a terrible plight those people are in down there. As I lay comfortably in bed last night I realized that darkness was over Louisville, Cincinnati, and many of the neighboring communities. I realized that families were separated, mothers and children not knowing where they were being washed or swept. I say it is a catastrophe, Mr. Chairman, and I hope you will not get tired of me during this session of the Congress in my continued efforts to have suitable appropriation made so that a recurrence of this terrible catastrophe is impossible. I know I will have the cooperation of the gentlemen from Ohio and the Members from Kentucky, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Illinois, and the neighboring States. I am grateful for the opportunity to make this statement, and I thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] for his courtesy.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment and ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I shall not object to the request to speak out of order in this instance, but in view of the necessity for haste I hope that other Members will not make a similar request.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I spoke to the gentleman from Texas about my request.

Mr. JONES. Yes; the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McSWEENEY] both spoke to me, and I agreed in both instances, but I hope that any others who may desire to speak out of order will refrain from making a similar request.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it is most appropriate that my remarks should follow those just made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McSWEENEY].

The remark of the gentleman from Ohio that made the most vivid impression upon me was the statement that we get excited over a great flood like this today and next week or next month we allow our excitement to die.

Last March 16, 17, and 18, throughout the Eastern States and in western Pennsylvania, we had a disastrous flood. Most of us older Members remember the disaster to the city of Johnstown in 1889, when thousands were drowned and the property loss amounted to something like $20,000,000. Last year this section was inundated and the estimated property damage was $50,000,000. We were very much excited about it. We held hearings in the Flood Control Committees of the Senate and House and the President made a visit to this section during the past summer. But today there is no authorization for any money to take care of the flood-control situation in the Johnstown district.

The water that floods the Johnstown area originates in my congressional district, and this is the reason I am now addressing you. I was born and reared in this district, and I know what these floods mean.

May I say further, Mr. Chairman, when I was a boy the hillsides in this section of our country were covered with millions and millions and even billions of feet of timber, and under these trees were leaves 3 and 4 inches deep, and the roots of these trees penetrated the hillsides, and excess water was largely absorbed. The records will show we had as much rain back in 1889, 1908, and 1916 as we had last year, but we had these forests which absorbed a certain portion of the rain. These hillsides are now bare, and great gullies have formed which destroy a lot of the farm land that is without any protection whatever.

Like the gentleman from Ohio who has just preceded me, may I ask that we make flood control one of the major issues during the Seventy-fifth Congress, so we may get the necessary appropriations and begin this important work and not talk so much about what we are going to do. We must do something, and we should do it now. [Applause.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is it not true that the Army engineers have already made a very exhaustive survey, and that if we would support this survey of the Army engineers at a total expense of about $280,000,000 we could prevent about 90 percent of the trouble from floods that we are having continually?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. May I state in addition that we have about 50 Army engineers who have made this survey, and by spending about one-fourth of what the destruction was in the Johnstown district last March we could prevent floods for all time in the Johnstown district. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. (a) No loan shall be made under this act to any applicant who shall not have first established to the satisfaction of the proper officer or employee of the Farm Credit Administration, under such regulations as the Governor may prescribe, that such applicant is unable to procure from other sources a loan in an amount reasonably adequate to meet his needs for the purposes for which loans may be made under this act; and preference shall be given to the applications of farmers whose cash requirements are small.

(b) There shall be required as security for any such loan a first lien, or an agreement to give a first lien, upon all crops of which the production of harvesting, or both, is to be financed, in whole or in part, with the proceeds of such loan; or, in case of any loan, for the purchase or production of feed for livestock, a first lien upon the livestock to be fed.

(c) No loan made under the provisions of this act to any borrower shall exceed $400, nor shall a loan be so made in any calendar year which, together with the unpaid principal of prior loans so made to such borrower in that year, shall exceed $400 in amount: Provided, however, That in any area certified by the President of the United States to the Governor as a distressed emergency area, the Governor may make loans without regard to the foregoing limitations as to amount, under such regulations, with such maturities, and in such amounts as he may prescribe.

(d) Each loan shall bear interest at the rate of 5½ percent per annum.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES: Page 3, line 6, after the word "of", strike out "5½" and insert in lieu thereof "4."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana: Page 2, line 15, after the letter "a", strike out the word "first"; page 2, line 15, after the letter "a" where it occurs the second time, strike out the word "first"; page 2, line 19, after the letter "a", strike out the word "first."

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, the reason for my proposed amendment is that this bill has been referred to repeatedly as a seed-loan bill. It has a dual purpose. It is a feed-loan bill as well as a seed-loan bill.

In my territory we farm or raise cattle or sheep on a pretty large scale or we do not do it at all. A few hundred dollars, such as $200 or $300, is scarcely enough to furnish even seed and much less to furnish feed for livestock. If we are going to do the people in the western section of the country who raise cattle and raise grain any good they have got to have a substantial amount of help. They farm over a sparsely settled territory, where it takes the fastest train of the Northern Pacific Railroad all day to cross, with a population of only about 600,000, and to carry on their operations to any extent whatever they have got to have substantial aid by way of money with which to purchase seed and also purchase feed for livestock.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield.

Mr. FULMER. Is it not a fact that the Resettlement Administration is making additional loans and even grants to that type of farmer?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. To a certain extent that is true, but it is not meeting the situation. My office has been flooded with telegrams during the last 3 or 4 days calling upon us here to use our influence to secure money from the United States Government to enable these people to feed what few cattle there are left, and I ask you to bear this fact in mind: There is not a cowman or a sheepman in the State of Montana or in any of the Northwestern States who has been through this drought period that has anything today that is unmortgaged. If you are going to make it obligatory upon the part of the Government to secure first liens upon this livestock, you might just as well not include feed in the bill, because it will not mean anything.

I ask you, in the exercise of your duties here, to strike out the word "first" and leave it up to the Government to make this type of loan to a man even though he may have a small mortgage upon a team of horses or upon a few cows or a few cattle which the banks will not release. It has been my experience with banks that they never release anything.

So you may have, if you please, a few horses and some livestock, mortgaged for a small amount, but under the strict letter of this law he cannot get any loan because he cannot secure a release of the other existing encumbrances.

I am informed that what is true in my territory is true throughout the West. There are farmers and livestock men that have these encumbrances because they have produced no crops, and what they did produce they did not get anything for.

So I beg you gentlemen to support this amendment striking out the word "first" and leaving it to the maker of the loan to use his discretion.

The moral risk is something I have had to do with in banks, and good moral rick is almost as safe as any security.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, the adoption of the gentleman's amendment would demoralize the whole situation and we would not have any bill at all. This whole program from 1921 has been based on the philosophy that there are a certain number of good farmers who cannot secure a loan and provision should be made for that type with a first lien.

If you do away with that provision, it would take a good deal more money than we can get for them. As a matter of fact, there are plenty of farmers, not only in the area represented by the gentleman from Montana but others, who can meet the test and absorb all of this loan. There was a serious problem occasioned by drought, and $72,000,000 was loaned in 1934 and 1935 that carried just such a provision as the gentleman suggests. If he will look at the record, he will see what the situation was; $1,672,000 was loaned in the State of Minnesota where they could not qualify and could not meet the test.

I know the gentleman has offered his amendment in good faith, but I know that if he had read the record he would not have offered it.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. BARDEN. I do not know that my question bears especially upon this particular amendment, but in applying for a loan, would it be possible for a borrower to pay off a balance due on a first mortgage that might already exist on his property?

Mr. JONES. That might be done in some instances. If he is able to do it, he could do it.

Mr. BARDEN. I notice here that the bill provides for the buying of livestock.

Mr. JONES. Oh, no; there is no provision for buying livestock. There is a provision for the purchase and production of feed for livestock. There is no provision for buying livestock; that has been handled heretofore under Resettlement.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. HULL. In section 1 of the bill it is provided that loans shall be made and collected through agencies on such terms and conditions and under such regulations as the Governor of the Board may prescribe. If the Governor of the Board is to be allowed so much latitude in regulating amounts and number of these loans, why is it necessary to restrict him by putting in this word "first"? If we can trust him that far, why can we not go further and allow the Governor to lay down regulations and even permit him to make them simply first lien on crops?

Mr. JONES. I am afraid that he would have such a drive that he would not have time to make the loans.

Mr. HULL. Let us try it out.

Mr. JONES. I do not want to wreck a system that every Member of the House agrees has rendered wonderful service by experimenting in a field already covered by an agency of the Government.

Mr. HULL. I do not want to wreck any system, but we have a pretty sadly wrecked farming system in the Northwest, and I would like to see this measure made broad enough to alleviate that situation to some extent.

Mr. JONES. I agree there are some difficulties, but this bill does not cover the entire field and undertake to cure all the ills of agriculture.

Mr. HULL. Let us make it broad enough to cover it.

Mr. JONES. I would rather not at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HULL and Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana) there were—ayes 13, noes 120.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BURDICK: On page 2, line 22, strike out "$400" and insert in lieu thereof "$600"; on page 2, line 25, strike out "$400" and insert in lieu thereof "$600."

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I have already spoken on this subject under general debate. In the judgment of our people, we think that the limit should be extended to $600, because circumstances will arise in the development of this subject where the Resettlement does not function. If this Resettlement referred to every few moments is doing the job, why are we receiving telegrams right now, since this debate started, telling us our livestock is starving and that the farmers have gone to town and are going to get something to eat somewhere? I say to you that the Resettlement cannot be depended upon. They are not doing the job. If we want to give these farmers seed, let us make an arrangement so that we can do it.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes.

Mr. GILCHRIST. The gentleman has spoken about a telegram. I just got one since I spoke reading as follows:

Fifty percent Crawford farmers out of feed. Deep snow; extreme cold. Some livestock starving. Seed grain fed up. Credit exhausted; farmers desperate; many quitting farm to town for relief. Aid needed now. Sixty percent will need feed and seed loans for spring. Grain and hay prices high.

Mr. BURDICK. That is a fair sample of the numerous telegrams that I have received today and that many of my colleagues from Montana and North Dakota are receiving.

Mr. GILCHRIST. This is from a county agent.

Mr. BURDICK. Any time a county agent will report a situation of that kind you can figure that it is true.

If we extend the maximum to $600, that does not mean that in every case $600 will be loaned, but this limit will enable many farmers to pay off some prior indebtedness that may prevent them from getting any credit at all under this limit of $400.

At best I will predict that the farmers will have a difficult time to arrange for their feed. We are leaving the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration free to make any rule or regulation he sees fit, and, besides this, the act will be administered in North Dakota through the Farm Credit Administration set-up in the Twin Cities. This institution has been, and no doubt still is, manned by bankers of the reactionary type, who cannot see the element of help and service to humanity, but who can only see the cold-blooded business side of the transaction. If the loan does not look like a good business loan, they will reject it under their rules and regulations. I insist that any loan is a good business loan which will put a farmer on his feet and take him and his family off the relief dole of the country. These bankers see it otherwise. There are instances where they have foreclosed on everything the farmer had and turned the family over to relief. I ask you how such an asinine policy can be expected to work? What is the use of making more relief clients just because some manager of a Government finance set-up wishes to make a record for himself? Our policy should be to forget the business rules for a while and apply common sense, justice, and humanitarian principles. Let us try the plan of rendering service and forget profits. Let us give the farmers a chance to help themselves instead of reducing them to a condition where they will become public charges.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will not adopt this amendment. There is a $400 limit, and in the distressed areas the limit may be waived in case of extreme distress. The average loan over a period of years has ranged around $100. If you put the limit up they will absorb a great deal of this fund. In North Dakota they loaned nearly $1,000,000 out of these funds, and they made a loan of several million dollars in 1934 and 1935, about nine or ten million dollars, for feed. The extreme conditions depicted in the telegram referred to are in the relief-need classification and provision has been made for them. I hope gentlemen will not jeopardize the measure by adopting any such amendment.

Mr. HILL of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Oklahoma. In order to clarify the situation and save argument, why not read a little further from the bill?—

Provided, however, That in any area certified by the President of the United States to the Governor as a distressed amergency area, the Governor may make loans without regard to the foregoing limitations as to amount.

That takes up the situation being discussed here.

Mr. JONES. I think the gentleman from Oklahoma is right, and I thank him for his suggestion.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is it not a fact that during last year just a little over $16,000,000 was loaned?

Mr. JONES. Oh, no. It was only that amount loaned by this particular agency, but the gentleman remembers that this bill was vetoed last year. It was not quite the same terms as this bill, but it was vetoed, and an allocation was made and loans were made through another agency. Last year this agency only made one-hundred-and-sixty-thousand-odd loans. The year before they made 600,000.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is it not a fact that if we had a limitation of $600 rather than $400, considering the policy that has been pursued in the past, it is likely the $50,000,000 would be ample, even with that provision, to make all the loans that they would otherwise make?

Mr. JONES. I do not think so. I think this entire amount will be absorbed under the terms of this bill.

Mr. BOILEAU. It has not been the experience of the last 3 or 4 years.

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes; all except last year, when we did not have any provision.

Mr. BOILEAU. I am sure if the gentleman will check into the year previous, he will find there was a substantial balance then.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. What has been the policy as to the amount of the loans in the past?

Mr. JONES. Under the Executive order it was $200 last year, but heretofore it has been from $300 to $500, varying in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I have the same amendment to the bill as that offered by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK].

The CHAIRMAN. In view of the action taken by the Committee on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota, does the gentleman from Montana insist upon his amendment?

Mr. JONES. May the gentleman's position be registered? It would be subject to a point of order now.

The CHAIRMAN. In view of the gentleman's statement to the effect that the amendment he offers is identical with the amendment which the Committee has just rejected, the Chair holds that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GASQUE: After the word "loan" on line 18, page 2, strike out all of lines 18, 19, and 20.

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Chairman, no legislation has ever been passed by this Congress during my 14 years of experience that has meant more to rehabilitate the small farmers of this country, especially in the South.

This provision, the chairman will bear me out, is a new provision. In my section of the country it will cut out about 50 percent of those who are now benefiting under these loans. A large number of the small farmers who would get about $200 a year are farming with somebody else's stock—either rented stock or the landlord's stock—or stock that is already mortgaged. In other words, I would say that 50 percent of those who would be eligible for loans, if they had to give a mortgage over the livestock to which the feed was fed, could not get a loan.

I want to say, further, the crop-production loan organization has that same provision in it, and a man who could do that could go to the crop-production loan organization and get his money without having to go to the seed loan.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GASQUE. I yield.

Mr. JONES. I would suggest to the gentleman that this does not cover livestock. It simply covers feed for livestock.

Mr. GASQUE. That is what I am talking about, but you cannot feed it to the livestock without mortgaging the livestock. That would absolutely kill the effect of the loan.

Mr. JONES. Oh, that is a separate provision from the crop-loan provision. The crop-loan provision is taken care of in the first part of the paragraph. That is, he has to give a first lien on the livestock in the event he is buying feed for that livestock.

Mr. GASQUE. But has not the loan heretofore provided that that was one of the provisions—it was to buy feed for the livestock?

Mr. JONES. In those loans it is a first lien on the crops to be grown.

Mr. GASQUE. But I do not think that is clear. That would be very misleading.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GASQUE. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. It provides "or in case of any loan for the purchase or production of feed for livestock, a first lien upon the livestock to be fed." That is either if you are buying it or producing it.

Mr. GASQUE. The gentleman is correct, and that provision is preceded by the conjunction "or", which makes it coordinate with all of the preceding. This makes it a separate and distinct provision, and provides that any money, as I understand it, used to buy feed for livestock with which to produce feed or crops, he would have to give a mortgage over the livestock.

Mr. JONES. I think if the gentleman will read carefully, he will see those are divided; that he only has to have a first lien on all crops which the production, or harvesting, or both, is to be financed. This refers purely to where a man is growing feed for livestock primarily. However, in order to obviate any doubt, unless there is some objection by some of the other members of the committee, I am willing to strike out the words "or production" in lines 18 and 19, and say it is for the purchase of feed for livestock.

Mr. GASQUE. How about the feed for livestock which he is using to make his crop with?

Mr. JONES. That would simply be the purchase of feed, not production. The other would cover the production end.

Mr. GASQUE. Does the gentleman not think that is very misleading?

Mr. JONES. I will state that a similar provision has been in the bill for 3 or 4 years, and it has always been construed that this refers to a man who is in the business of growing feed or purchasing feed. In order to obviate any question, if the gentleman will modify the amendment so as to strike out the words "or production", I will agree to that.

Mr. GASQUE. If the gentleman can assure me that this bill would not require a mortgage over the livestock with which he produces his crop, I will agree to the suggestion.

Mr. JONES. I can give the gentleman that assurance.

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Chairman, I accept the assurance of the chairman of the committee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment and offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GASQUE: On page 2, line 18, after the word "purchase", strike out "or production."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the fact that the amendment may be broader than he realizes. Some of these loans may be made for the purpose of seeding land to clover or alfalfa to produce feed for livestock. If "production for feed" is stricken out the dairy farmers of this country will be barred from getting any money to seed clover and alfalfa.

Mr. JONES. I was only agreeing to something that seemed much in demand. The only thing I had in mind was not to jeopardize the other loans. They never have been jeopardized. What the gentleman from Wisconsin refers to is not done in my part of the country. He would be more familiar with it than I am. If it is being used for that purpose, loans could be made in the gentleman's district.

Mr. HULL. The principal crops in Wisconsin are raised to provide feed for livestock.

Mr. JONES. I think, inasmuch as it has always been construed the other way, that we should leave the language in the bill as it appeared originally. If the gentleman wants to insist on his first amendment let him reoffer it; but as I suggested a while ago it has always been so construed, and I give the gentleman the assurance that it is the intention of the committee that where simply a crop-production loan is made that the applicant should not also give a first lien on his livestock even though some is used for the feeding of livestock.

Mr. GASQUE. That is all I want to be assured of, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question.

I am heartily in favor of this legislation. The purpose of the legislation is to help the small farmer. I am wondering, however, if the bill is not likely to create some conflict between the man who holds a mortgage or a deed of trust on a small farm and the Government itself. Let us suppose a farmer owns an 80-acre tract on which there is a deed of trust or mortgage for the approximate value of the land. Under the laws of Missouri, and I think of many of the other States, the man who holds the mortgage against the farm has the right under his security to the emblements or the crops growing upon it until the crop is ripened or matured. Let us assume there is a corn crop on this small farm not yet ready for gathering, and about the 1st of October, long before the crop is ready to harvest, the man who holds the deed of trust decides to exercise the right he holds under the mortgage and forecloses. Suppose the Government has lent the farmer $400. The man who owns the land has given a contract, given a right to be foreclosed. The holder of this prior lien steps in and exercises his right of foreclosure and thereby becomes entitled to and does lay his hand upon possibly $400 of the Government's money.

I think the bill ought to be clarified somewhat and be made certain. Otherwise there will be conflict between the private lender on this farm and the Government. The sole purpose of this legislation is to help the man who has borrowed and not to help the lender make his debt more secure.

Mr. JONES. If the gentleman will glance at section 3, he will see that in order to keep such a situation from arising we have provided that—

The proceeds of each loan made by the Government under the provisions of this act shall be impressed with a trust for the purposes for which loans may be made under this act, and may be used only for the purposes stated in the application therefor.

We provide also that wherever such a loan is granted the Government is given a first lien. I think we protect it in these two provisions insofar as it is practicable to meet the situation referred to by the gentleman.

Mr. ROMJUE. I am not speaking of the landlord, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman is speaking of the mortgagee. We think we have met the situation so far as it is possible to be met.

Mr. ROMJUE. In many cases the money lent on a mortgage is lent by a banker and not by the landlord. The banker is not the landlord, he is simply the man who holds the lien. His contract gives him a right to foreclose under certain conditions. I think we ought to find some way, if possible, to keep the hands of the banker off this money.

Mr. JONES. I think if it were apparent that there was to be a foreclosure the administrative authorities would probably try to have some sort of an agreement; but to try so to amend the bill as to meet all these situations would probably encumber it a little too much.

I have just been handed a document called Waiver and Agreement, which contains the following language:

The undersigned (whether one or more hereinafter referred to as the undersigned) does hereby:

(1) Subordinate to the lien(s) held or to be held by the Governor, all or any rights, liens, claims, shares, title, and/or interest which the undersigned now has or may hereafter have, under whatever claim of right, in or to the crops or livestock mentioned in the foregoing instrument, or the proceeds from the sale thereof, to the extent of the claim(s) thereto of the Governor;

(2) Consent and agree that the enforcement of his rights, liens, claims, and/or interest in the said crops or livestock—

I do not believe this section covers it completely, but by requiring the waiver it certainly would accomplish the purpose.

Mr. ROMJUE. Of course, the waiver would be all right, but in case the man who has lent the money on the farm is not willing to sign away his rights or execute the waiver, some difficulty might arise.

Mr. JONES. The Government probably would not make a loan in a case of that kind.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. JONES. Will not the gentleman permit us to proceed to the next section?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MASSINGALE: Amend paragraph C of section 2, page 3, by striking out the period after the word "prescribe", on line 5 of said paragraph, inserting a comma, and adding the following: "and loans for seed oats shall be immediately available in localities where it is customary that sowing or planting shall be done in the late winter or early spring months."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment just offered.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered with the hope that, if adopted, the agencies of the Government will make these loans to the borrowers in time to do them some good. Last year down where I live there were applications made for seed wheat, but the money with which to buy this seed was not made available in time and the checks were returned. I believe this was the Resettlement Administration. At any rate, it did not do the farmers any good, because it was past our planting time.

Mr. Chairman, down in our State, pasturage is a very important matter to the people. Last year they did not get the seed wheat in time to make fall pasturage. I cannot feel any assurance, so far as I am personally concerned, that this bill will cover the matter unless the attention of the lending authorities is directed particularly to this important matter for our people. Otherwise I do not believe we will get any assistance out of the pending act.

Mr. Chairman, it does no good to authorize someone to lend money unless you tell them to go down there and proceed in such a way that our people can get the money with which to plant oats before it is too late to plant them. Otherwise we will not have an oat crop, and when we do not have an oat crop down there it materially affects the entire farming section of Oklahoma.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASSINGALE. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GREEN. In that connection the gentleman's suggestion would allow the vegetable growers in the warmer climates to plant their fall, early winter, and spring vegetables also?

Mr. MASSINGALE. The gentleman is correct. The point I want to make is that we should call attention of the lending authorities to the fact that they have to get busy in order to do any good. Maybe if we do that they will go down there and put the money into the hands of those people so that they may sow their oats in February. We have to sow our oats in February down there if we are to get an oat crop. Probably up North they do not have to look after it immediately, but I am sure in north Texas and in west Oklahoma, if this money is not made available right away, you might just as well not make any loans or attempt to make any.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASSINGALE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JONES. May I say to the gentleman that one reason we have pressed for action on this bill is we cannot make the appropriation. We can only pass the authorization.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I know that.

Mr. JONES. I am hoping we may get this measure through the House and Senate in time to make provision for these funds immediately available in the deficiency appropriation. I do not know whether we are going to succeed or not, but we are going to make every effort. The administering authorities are very anxious that this money be made available as soon as possible.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I believe in the sincerity of purpose of the chairman of the committee, but we had the experience last year which I just mentioned, and intentions do not do us any good. We did not get the seed wheat.

Mr. JONES. May I say to the gentleman that last year the bill was passed early, but the gentleman will remember the experience we had at that time. The matter was delayed by a veto and the funds were not made available. The best step we can take at this time is to pass this measure as soon as possible and get provision made immediately. If we do that I do not think there will be unnecessary delay, and I assure the gentleman I shall be glad to help him in every possible way in urging that the funds be made available both by appropriation and by the administering authorities.

Mr. MASSINGALE. May I suggest to the gentleman from Texas how he can help me?

Mr. JONES. I would be glad to have the gentleman do that.

Mr. MASSINGALE. By agreeing to this amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to have to disagree with the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE].

Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's amendment would amount to inserting an appropriation in a legislative bill. I also make the point of order it is not germane, because it singles out a specific commodity under a general provision of the act. Therefore it is not germane to the paragraph. The gentleman's amendment reads:

And loans for seed oats shall be immediately available in localities where it is customary that sowing or planting shall be done in the late winter or spring months.

I think it would be unfortunate to single out one particular commodity or crop in connection with a general provision of a legislative act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the gentleman's point of order insofar as the point of order is based on the ground that the amendment involves an appropriation.

The Chair does, however, rule that the amendment is not germane to this section. It might have been germane to section 1 of the bill, which the committee has passed. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. The proceeds of each loan made by the Governor under the provisions of this act shall be impressed with a trust for the purposes for which loans may be made under this act, and may be used only for the purposes stated in the application therefor, and such trust shall continue, and the proceeds shall be free from garnishment, attachment, or the levy of an execution, until such proceeds have been used by the borrower for such purposes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MARTIN of Colorado: On page 3, line 9, after the word "act", insert "and crops financed hereunder"; page 3, line 13, after the word "proceeds", insert "and crops"; page 3, line 14, after the word "execution", insert "for private debts"; page 3, line 14, after the word " proceeds", insert "and crops."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is not as involved or as formidable as it may sound when read from the Clerk's desk.

This bill provides that the proceeds of the loan shall be exempt from garnishment, attachment, or levy of an execution. I take it that the word "proceeds" in the bill means money advanced by the Government on the loan. There is language in the bill, outside of my construction of the word "proceeds", which clearly distinguishes between proceeds of the loan and crops raised on the land.

My amendment touches a matter concerning which I understood the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROMJUE] raised some question a moment ago, but it takes in a little more territory. My amendment, in effect, simply exempts the crops raised by the proceeds of the loan from levy of execution or garnishment or attachment. By insertion in line 4 of the words "for private debts", after the word "execution", I leave the Government loan untouched and I only exclude private creditors.

The section as amended would read:

SEC. 3. The proceeds of each loan made by the Governor under the provisions of this act, and crops financed hereunder, shall be impressed with a trust for the purposes for which loans may be made under this act, and may be used only for the purposes stated in the application therefor, and such trust shall continue, and the proceeds and crops shall be free from garnishment, attachment, or the levy of an execution, for private debts, until such proceeds and crops have been used by the borrower for such purposes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Does not the gentleman feel we would not have the right to exempt crops from execution under State authority, the State controlling the actual production?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I get the gentleman's question, and, as my time is limited, I may say that my amendment introduces no new element whatever into the law of exemptions. It is a well-settled rule of law that, as to any exempt fund or money, pensions, insurance, or what not, property in which such money is invested is entitled to such exemption as long as the fund can be followed or identified or as long as its identity is not extinguished. You cannot garnishee a Government employee, no matter what may be his wages. You cannot garnishee any of the 2,000,000 people who are getting salaries and pensions or anything else from the Government. Most private insurance and all pensions and other similar funds are exempt from levy under execution or garnishment, and also the property in which they are invested. Then why should we furnish a farmer with a little drib to raise a crop under a law under the provisions of which, after the Government has got its part, his creditors can come in and take the rest. Someone asked a while ago how much of a farm would $400 seed, and the other man said, "Not much of a farm."

Under the W. P. A., for instance, I have had merchants and others put it up to me time and again and holler pretty loud because they could not collect their debts out of W. P. A. wages. I would say to them, "This is relief money and where would we get if the Government would allow the creditors of these W. P. A. workers to come in and take their wages away from them. The Government would still have them on its hands to feed them in some way." It would be an endless chain.

This involves the same proposition. This is simply an application of existing principles involved in the philosophy of exemption from execution, to crops raised by these needy farmers with a seed loan from the Government. If the creditor wants the farmer to pay him, let him finance the farmer and furnish him the seed and the feed. If the creditor will not do it and the taxpayers of the United States have to do it, why should we finance farmers simply to put them in a position to let their creditors take it all away from them in the collection of old debts, leaving them just where they were before and still on the hands of the Government.

There is nothing revolutionary, there is nothing novel about this. It is a plain, common-sense proposition of justice, to my mind. The language of the amendment may be a little inartificial, as it has been hastily drawn, but it would not require any other change in the bill than perhaps some little clarification which could be made by the committee if the amendment is adopted.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order——

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order? I would like to support the amendment. I have a similar amendment that I shall not insist upon if I can be heard at this time.

Mr. JONES. Does the gentleman want to speak on the merit of the amendment or on the point of order?

Mr. NICHOLS. I want to speak on the merit of the amendment, and I am asking the gentleman to withhold his point of order.

Mr. JONES. I reserve the point of order, Mr. Chairman, to let the gentleman from Oklahoma be heard.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I hope the chairman of the committee will not seriously insist on his point of order, and I hope he will not seriously oppose the adoption of this amendment. I have on the desk now an amendment almost identical with the pending amendment.

The way I reason this out is that if there is any excuse for the Government to throw a cloak of protection around money that the Government lends to a farmer until the money is invested in seed, then there is certainly just as strong reason for the Government to continue to protect that money when it has been transferred from coin or currency to feed to feed cattle or stock that are starving.

In the first place, unless you do this and protect the money until the feed is growing, then a debtor may come along and, by execution or some other means, take the feed away, and the very purpose for which this bill is passed has been defeated and you have not helped one single bit the farmer who borrowed the money in order to raise a crop to feed his stock.

In answer to the chairman's question as to whether or not this would be constitutional or whether or not we would have authority to impose this restriction, I would reply in this way: Certainly it would not, and there is plenty of precedent for this. The Government today buys Indian lands for restricted Indians, takes the land from the tax rolls, and impresses with a restricted character everything produced from the land. In Oklahoma we have unlimited quantities of oil, just as you do in Texas, produced from restricted lands, and the Government says that you cannot tax the land or the produce therefrom, and the courts of this country have ruled on this question time and time again.

Unless you go ahead and protect the crop that is grown from the investment of this money, if you leave it open to execution by private lenders, you might just as well not pass this portion of the bill at all, because there is no use protecting the money until it gets into the farmer's pocket and then as soon as he buys the seed, turn it loose. Unless this amendment is adopted an unscrupulous creditor who would levy on the crop will destroy the labor put on this bill by the Congress of the United States.

Gentlemen of the Committee, I sincerely trust that you will support this type of amendment, and I sincerely hope that the chairman of the committee, whose heart I know is in this measure, will see the light, and know that unless we do this the very purpose of the act which we pass will be defeated.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. How does the gentleman reconcile his position with the language in section 2, which gives the lien on the crop and stock?

Mr. NICHOLS. There is no analogy between the two propositions.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the language in the provisions here, that it covers a subject not only not covered by the bill but over which the Government has no jurisdiction.

I am not sure about the meaning of the language as this is written, but insofar as the effect the gentleman desires to obtain, such a provision is out of the realm not only of the limit of this bill but the jurisdiction of the Government.

The Government simply makes a trust fund of this Federal money. As to the matter of crops and land, that is within the jurisdiction of the State. That has been determined by the Supreme Court. The only control the Government has over the crops is the mortgage being given by the owner of the crops. The State has control of the crops. As far as the producer of the crop is concerned, when he executes the mortgage, of course, he is waiving this right. The Government might be able to make any condition to the granting of a loan, but it cannot affirmatively cancel the rights of other citizens who are not parties to the contract. This bill deals with the conditions of the granting of a loan. It does not touch the question of canceling the affirmative rights of citizens.

When you get beyond that you invade the province of State government and the locality. I wish it were possible to protect the crops that were grown, but the National Government has its interest here, and this only makes a trust fund out of funds furnished by the Government. When a man mortgages his crop to secure that, he does not surrender title to his crop. He cannot surrender State jurisdiction or the jurisdiction of other citizens that have an interest in that crop; and, however desirable it might be, it certainly would undertake to add the word "crops" to a provision that provides only for a trust on the funds which the Government lends to go into crops.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman admits that the fund is invested with a trust.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. And he will admit my amendment does not impair the Government's lien.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It will only prevent a private creditor taking what is left, if anything.

Mr. JONES. Does not the gentleman recognize the distinction; that that is a matter for the jurisdiction of the State? We cannot cancel liens or judgments of other citizens who are not parties in any way to the contract.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The Government protects everybody that works for it from garnishment and execution. I get a salary of $10,000 a year, and a man cannot attach $10 of it for a grocery bill.

Mr. JONES. The Supreme Court has decided specifically that the matter of production of crops is a local matter. I mention this merely to show that this amendment undertakes to go into a wide field not touched by the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to be heard in opposition to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, insofar as whether or not this amendment goes outside of the scope of the meaning of this paragraph and injects any new matter, let us see. The language of the section as it is now reads:

> Shall be impressed with a trust for the purposes for which loans may be made under this act, and may be used only for the purposes stated in the application therefor, and such trust shall continue—

And so forth. The act then places a limitation on how far the trust shall continue. They say it shall continue only to the money. All this amendment does is to say that it shall continue to the crops, and I submit to the Chairman, in all fairness, that that is not a matter that is strange to the paragraph.

Answering the gentleman's argument about whether or not this is an intrusion of State rights, and whether it comes within the ruling of the A. A. A. decision, I say to the gentleman there is more precedent for doing this very thing than all of the language contained in the A. A. A. At this minute the Government can under precedents galore loan money for the purchase of any kind of property, real or personal, and impress that property with a protection by the Government which says it is not subject to execution.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Does the gentleman insist that the Government can make a loan, say, of $4,000 on a $10,000 farm and then say that that farm cannot be subject to execution so long as that loan is made on the farm?

Mr. NICHOLS. No; I do not.

Mr. JONES. It is the same proposition.

Mr. NICHOLS. No; it is not.

Mr. JONES. That is exactly what this tries to do. It provides that so long as this Government has a lien on his crop, thereafter the crop shall not be subject to execution.

Mr. NICHOLS. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. It goes further and provides that not only shall it not be subject to execution but it shall not be subject to execution even after the loan is paid.

Mr. NICHOLS. And I say that the Government could let a man have the money and take a mortgage on something foreign to the crop and leave the crop absolutely clear; and because the Government money had been furnished to raise the crop, the Government could then say that the crop is not subject to execution.

Mr. JONES. That would be a voluntary waiver.

Mr. NICHOLS. Not a voluntary waiver at all.

Mr. JONES. That is a matter of contract.

Mr. NICHOLS. It is simply something that the Government does itself in order to protect the Government money.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Does the gentleman contend that the Government can go further than to collect its debt? In other words, can the Government, by reason of having established a relationship of debtor and creditor between itself and an individual, prevent another individual from pursuing this property and collecting his debt when he could not impair the Government security?

Mr. NICHOLS. My answer is that the Government in Oklahoma and all the Indian territories does it every day, and has been doing it for a long number of years.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Cox). The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

The gentleman from Texas, in presenting his views on the point of order, developed his views on the legal bearing of the amendment which has been offered. The Chair thinks that the position which the gentleman from Texas takes on the constitutionality of the amendment is entirely correct, although that is a matter upon which the Chair does not rule. The amendment may be unconstitutional and still be germane. It is simply an elaboration or enlargement of the language used, and that is all, as the Chair interprets the amendment. For that reason the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question? Does the Chair then hold that the legal effect of this would be not to prevent execution?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not undertaking to pass on the legal effect of the amendment but solely on its germaneness.

Mr. JONES. May I ask this question of the Chair? I am doing this for the purpose of clarification and not for argument. Does the Chair mean to hold that it would be germane to undertake to exempt the crop itself from execution through local citizens by a State or subdivision thereof?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the amendment is germane to this section. As to the legal effect of the amendment, the Chair does not wish to make a ruling. The Chair will state, however, that he is unable to see, in the language used in the amendment, that it in any wise enlarges the privileges of borrowers under the original language of the bill; but the Chair does not pass upon the legal effect of the amendment.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I make one suggestion to the Chair, with all deference?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. As I understood the amendment, it only undertakes to protect the Government and insure the collection of the Government's debt, and in that connection property against execution, but goes further than the scope of this bill and seeks to protect the property of the individual against execution of a private citizen.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may be entirely right.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. My point is, would it be germane in this legislation to undertake to protect the property of a private citizen against execution by another private citizen?

The CHAIRMAN. Such an amendment would be germane, but the Committee of the Whole will pass upon the merits of the question.

The Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas.

CROP-PRODUCTION LOANS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the agent for the feed and seed loan will make an arrangement with a farmer whereby the Government will let him have a certain amount of money, usually a small amount. The average last year was about $80. In order to make this arrangement, in order to protect the Government's interest, this farmer who owes other people, many of whom have a mortgage on his crop, on his team, or such tools as he has, persuades these people who are his creditors to subordinate their rights and claims in order that he may get the Government agent to make the loan. They are willing to waive their rights so the Government can get its money back, but they are not willing to waive their lien forever. They are willing to make their claims second to the Government, but they are not willing for their claims to be canceled.

According to the amendment offered by the gentleman, if a loan is made to this farmer who owes the Government $100, and then he makes a crop from which he nets $300, $100 goes to the Government to pay the debt and then he has $200. According to the gentleman's amendment, the Government would protect that $200 and not allow any creditors to either garnishee it or attach it or get possession of it in any way on back debts or any other debts. It occurs to me it would be unfair to those who have accommodated that man and who also have accommodated the Government. The Government has never spent money for a better purpose than this. From 95 to 100 percent of the loans in my district have been paid back. No law is administered better than this one.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman is correct in his interpretation of my amendment, that if this poor cuss happens to have $200 left, it is his as long as it lasts, instead of taking it away from him and putting him back on relief.

Mr. PATMAN. What if he owes honest debts? Are we in this bill to try to protect him against his creditors? Is it for us to say which debts he should pay and which debts he should not pay, or that he should not be permitted to pay any debt except what is owed to the Government?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Your bonus bill provided——

Mr. PATMAN. We are not talking about a bonus bill now.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Well, the bonus bill made it a crime for a creditor to come in and claim anything on the bonus, no matter how honest the debt was. It was absolutely protected in the hands of the veteran, and the proceeds of it were protected in the hands of the veteran.

Mr. PATMAN. This is a case where a farmer owes a just and honest debt, and where those people will only waive payment of that debt during that year because they believe he can possibly make enough to not only pay the Government but pay them, too. If they do not have that assurance, they will not waive. It is not a case of protecting the earnings of one who rendered war service, earnings that should have been paid 19 years ago.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. BARDEN. I will ask the gentleman if this amendment is adopted, will it not drive from the field everyone else who might desire to assist that farmer who had borrowed?

Mr. PATMAN. Worthy people could not get help because those who had prior liens would not waive those liens. There would be no inducement in the world to waive those liens. Furthermore, if the Government did not furnish enough money, an individual could not assist him in finishing his crop, since he would have no protection on a second lien.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. I want to ask the gentleman from Texas if, after sober thought, just exactly the reverse would not be true? If this amendment were adopted and if a man did not waive any mortgage he had, the Government would not make the loan, would it, because it could not be protected?

Mr. JONES. No.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If this amendment is adopted, the Government could make the loan to the man despite his prior debts.

Mr. PATMAN. Oh, no; at least not unless the Government wanted to run the risk of losing the money. The farmers want to pay their debts. They are not asking for the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Am I not correct in stating that if the Government exempted this money from execution and the crop from execution they could lend the man the money regardless of the amount of his prior debts?

Mr. PATMAN. We cannot afford to put the Government in the position of trying to aid and abet people in avoiding their just debts, and the people who borrow this money are not requesting such an exemption.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. This is not a matter of aiding and abetting, for the man is in distress before he gets the loan.

Mr. PATMAN. I hope the gentleman from Colorado understands that I do not mean this as any reflection whatever upon him—he is one of our best and ablest Members—but should the amendment of the gentleman be adopted it may help such a borrower avoid the payment of his just and honest debts; and I do not think we should do it. If we want to help the farmers by granting them these loans that is one thing. If we want to grant the farmers a moratorium on their old debts, that is a different thing.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. The pending bill carries a limitation of $400. Assuming a farmer needed $800 to plant his crop; that he borrowed $400 from the Government and $400 from private sources. Should the gentleman's amendment be adopted, would not the result be that not only would the Government be protected in the matter of its $400 but the borrower would be protected in a refusal to pay the other $400?

Mr. PATMAN. Certainly, if it will protect him against one debt it will protect him against all debts. I believe in all sincerity that the principle is wrong.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Would not one effect be to prevent his getting the necessary credit to make the crop?

Mr. PATMAN. The creditors would not agree and he could not get the money. The ones, therefore, who are the most worthy and deserving would be denied assistance. I hope the amendment is defeated and the bill is passed with the least possible delay. In order for this aid to be the most helpful it must be made available the earliest possible date. Therefore let us rush this bill through and get it approved by the President just as soon as we can.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of Colorado) there were—ayes 9, noes 147.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana: On page 3, line 14, after the word "execution" insert "or injunction, or bankruptcy proceedings."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 6 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the Committee on Agriculture should agree to this amendment quite readily. I should win at least once out of three times this afternoon.

Mr. Chairman, I am desirous, if I can make my purpose understood, of safeguarding these funds lent by the Government under any and all circumstances. The only safeguard we have to date is against garnishment, attachment, or levy on execution. Let us suppose an action were brought against the debtor in which he was charged with insolvency and that the action asked the court for a restraining order to prevent the debtor from disposing of any of his funds or property. The language of the pending bill would not be sufficient to cover such a proceeding. Likewise, if the debtor owed an indebtedness of $1,000 to three or more creditors and he were thrown into involuntary bankruptcy, the proceeds of the Government's loan would not be protected.

I want to make sure that the farmer who gets the small amount provided in this bill—$400—to feed his livestock and to seed his ground is protected. I want to see this $400 protected until the man has a chance to use it for the purpose for which the Government is lending it to him. I want to protect it against injunction proceedings and I likewise want to protect it against bankruptcy proceedings. It seems to me the chairman of the committee should join me in this purpose.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's amendment makes a trust fund out of it. I fully appreciate the gentleman's purpose, but the same purpose is already served by the language of the bill; and it is a trust fund that is not subject to any other use.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Montana.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. (a) Fees for recording, filing, registration, and examination of records (including certificates) shall not exceed 75 cents per loan, and may be paid from the proceeds of the loan.

(b) No fees for releasing liens given to secure loans made pursuant to this act, nor any other fee not specified herein, shall be paid from the funds herein authorized to be appropriated.

SEC. 5. (a) The Governor shall have power, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States, to employ and fix the compensation and duties of such agents, officers, and employees as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act; but the compensation of such officers and employees shall correspond, so far as the Governor deems practicable, to the rates established by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

(b) Such agents, officers, and employees, or any of them, and the agents, officers, employees, and facilities of the Farm Credit Administration available for use in connection with loans made under the provisions of this act or of prior crop production, seed, and feed loan acts of the same general character, may be used by the Governor to perform services for any institution operating under the supervision of the Farm Credit Administration upon such terms and conditions as the Governor may determine; and such institutions are hereby expressly empowered to enter into agreements with the Governor for such purpose.

(c) For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, and for collecting loans made under other acts of the same general character, including loans made by the Governor with funds appropriated by the Emergency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1935, or the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, the Governor is authorized also to use the facilities and services of any agency or corporation operating under the supervision of the Farm Credit Administration, and of any officer or employee of any such agency or institution, or of the Farm Credit Administration, and may pay for such services and the use of such facilities from the funds made available for the payment of necessary administrative expenses; and such agencies and institutions are hereby expressly empowered to enter into agreements with the Governor for the accomplishment of such purposes and to perform the services provided for therein.

SEC. 6. (a) Except with the written permission of the Governor or his duly authorized representative, it shall be unlawful for any borrower to willfully use the proceeds of any loan:

(1) For any purpose other than those specified in the application therefor; or

(2) For the purpose of fallowing, or for the planting, production, or harvesting of any crops on, any land other than that described in his application for such loan.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any person to make any material false representation for the purpose of obtaining or assisting another to obtain a loan under the provisions of this act; or willfully to dispose of, or assist in disposing of, except for the account of the Governor, any crops or other property upon which there exists a lien securing a loan made under the provisions of this act.

(c) It shall be unlawful for any person to charge or accept a fee for preparing or assisting in the preparation of any papers of an applicant for a loan under the provisions of this act.

(d) Any person violating any provision of this section of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 6 months, or both.

SEC. 7. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000,000 for the purpose of enabling the Governor to carry out the provisions of this act.

(b) The moneys appropriated in pursuance of subsection (a) of this section, any amounts collected for services rendered under section 5 (b), and all collections of principal and interest of loans made under this act shall be deposited in a revolving fund and may be used by the Governor for making loans under this act and for all necessary administrative expenses incurred in connection with the making and collection of such loans.

(c) Expenditures for printing and binding necessary in carrying out the provisions of this act may be made without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 6, lines 18 and 19, strike out "shall be deposited in a revolving fund and."

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture a question. What is the reason for not making it a revolving fund?

Mr. JONES. Personally I would like to have seen this a revolving fund, but the Committee on Appropriations objected; and I did not want to fight on that basis, because we have got to go through that channel.

Mr. McCLELLAN. They thought it better to take it up annually?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Cox, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1545) to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1937 and from year to year thereafter, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 80, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded upon any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JONES, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1937, and for other purposes."

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. RICH (at the request of Mr. KINZER), for 2 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. ROBERTSON (at the request of Mr. BLAND), for an indefinite period, on account of illness.

To Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin (at the request of Mr. BOILEAU), for 1 week, on account of death of a relative.

To Mr. DREWRY of Virginia, for 3 days, on account of illness.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 462. An act to permit the exchange of used parts of certain types of equipment for new or reconditioned parts of the same equipment; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 415. An act to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes.

THE LATE HONORABLE ANDREW J. MONTAGUE

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my sad duty to announce to the House the death yesterday of Representative ANDREW J. MONTAGUE, of Virginia. I shall not undertake now to express my personal sorrow or to appraise the loss which his district or the State of Virginia or the Nation has sustained.

No man in public life was more beloved than Representative MONTAGUE. His district has lost an untiring, zealous, and able Representative; Virginia a devoted son; and the Nation a patriotic public servant who sought always his Nation's good. In public service he added new luster to Virginia's record, and he was also true to the finest traditions of her illustrious past.

His funeral will be held tomorrow, Tuesday, at his residence, Urbanna, Va., at 3 p. m., and interment will be at Christ's Church, about 2 miles from Urbanna.

Governor MONTAGUE requested that no special committee should be appointed to attend his funeral, and expressed the wish that such of his colleagues as desired to attend and could attend should do so. Any persons desiring to go should confer as to directions with Mr. Frank Mahoney in the office of the Sergeant at Arms.

Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 82

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. ANDREW J. MONTAGUE, a Representative from the State of Virginia.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the arrangements for the funeral, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the balance of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, January 26, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

SENATE

TUESDAY, JANUARY 26, 1937

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, merciful and compassionate, who art ever ready to hear the prayers of those who put their trust in Thee graciously hearken to Thy children who in this time of trouble flee unto Thee for help. Deliver them, we beseech Thee, from the perils of waters, from the perils of fire, pestilence, and death. Give strength, skill, and a sense of divine pity to all who minister unto their need, that the manifest humanity of man to man may be transfigured by the alchemy of Thy grace.

Rebuke the troubled waters and mercifully restore tranquillity to our land, O loving Father, and in this hour of utmost need grant that we may look not merely for the manifestation of Thy outward power, but especially for Thy heart, which cares; Thy face, which answereth to our own. In Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday, January 22, 1937, when, on request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

A report for the calendar year ended December 31, 1936;

A report for the period from January 1 to January 18, 1937; and

A final report of the association dated January 18, 1937.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 1

Concurrent resolution petitioning the President to extend additional sustenance to provide feed for livestock and seed for spring planting

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the house of representatives concurring):

Whereas due to a total crop failure in more than three-fourths of the counties of the State in 1936, which left our farmers entirely without feeds, both grains and hay, to care for their livestock needs, and which made it necessary for them to dispose of all surplus livestock except a few milk cows, brood sows, poultry, and work horses. Due to the general depression and nonpayment of taxes our State and local governments are unable to cope with the situation; and

Whereas the present available sustenance grants are entirely inadequate to care for the needs of our people during the severe winter season, and in order to prevent suffering and want it is necessary that the Federal Government extend increased aid: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate of the twenty-fifth session (the house of representatives concurring), That we respectfully urge the President of the United States extend to us increased sustenance grants or other form of relief, as well as suitable provisions for livestock feed, and that the necessary governmental machinery be put in operation immediately to guarantee seed for early spring planting; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded by the Governor to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, to the Presiding Officer of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to the Federal Relief Administrator.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Kansas, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

House Concurrent Resolution 3

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States and the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States to include in any soil erosion or conservation measure or program provisions for the payment of benefits for the eradication of field bindweed

Whereas field bindweed is by far the most dangerous and destructive weed found in Kansas; and

Whereas it is causing alarm not only in the State of Kansas but over a large part of the United States, particularly in the West; and

Whereas it now occurs in every county in the State of Kansas and is spreading at an alarming rate; and

Whereas some farms are so completely overrun with field bindweed that crops can be produced only by the expenditure of much additional labor, without which greatly reduced yields are obtained; and

Whereas such farms are regarded by many as nearly worthless in their present condition and would not sell for one-half the normal price if put on the market; and

Whereas loan companies many times refuse to accept mortgages on farms known to be infested with field bindweed; and

Whereas crop production on heavily infested land is rarely profitable: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Kansas (the senate concurring therein), That we request and urge the Congress of the United States and the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States to include, in any soil erosion or conservation measure or program, provisions for the payment of benefits for the eradication of field bindweed; and be it further

Resolved, That sufficient copies of this resolution shall be printed and the secretary of state is hereby directed to transmit a copy of the same to the President of the United States, Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, the President of the Senate of the United States, and a copy to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each of the Kansas Senators and Congressmen.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nebraska, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact into law the Sheppard-Hill bill, commonly called the Universal Service Act, in the interest of world peace

Whereas the existing international situation is threatening the peace of the world to such an extent that every American citizen should be interested in any plan which has as its purpose the keeping of America at peace; and

Whereas veterans of the World War who now form the membership of the American Legion have from their knowledge of the problems and conduct of war evolved a plan known as the Universal Service Act, which plan is approved by all other veterans' organizations, and which provides for the draft of capital, industry, manpower, and all other resources of the country, as well as men to fight, in the event of a national emergency, with equal service for all and special privilege and profit for none, thereby removing one of the greatest incentives for war, the profit motive; and

Whereas it is our belief that in the event of a future war a dollar should not be held of greater value than human lives or human suffering; and

Whereas it will not cost the United States one cent to place the universal service law on the statute books, and if fortune should bless us and there be no more wars, its enactment will not affect the life of the Nation; but should war come, this law would enable us to meet it promptly and efficiently as a united Nation in arms: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Nebraska in fifty-second regular legislative session assembled:

1. That it is the sense of the members of this legislature that it will militate for the best interests of the United States of America if the Congress shall enact into law without delay S. 25 and H. R. 1954, the Sheppard-Hill bill, commonly known as the Universal Service Act, for the sake of the promotion of world peace.

2. That the clerk of the legislature be directed forthwith to forward copies of this resolution, properly authenticated and suitably engrossed, to the President of the United States, to the Vice President of the United States as presiding officer of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to the United States Senators and Congressmen representing the State of Nebraska in the Congress to the end that our representatives in Washington may be speedily advised as to the sentiment of this legislature with respect to the immediate passage of the Universal Service Act.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Kentucky, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Joint resolution ratifying the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States to authorize Congress to limit, regulate, and prohibit the labor of persons under 18 years of age

Whereas both Houses of the Congress of the United States of America by a constitutional majority of two-thirds thereof made the following proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States of America, in the following words, to wit:

"Joint resolution, proposing to amend the Constitution relating to the limiting, regulation, and prohibition of the labor of persons under 18 years of age:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution, when ratified by the legislature of three-fourths of the several States:

"SECTION 1. That Congress shall have power to limit, regulate, and prohibit the labor of persons under 18 years of age.

"SEC. 2. The power of the several States is unimpaired by this article, except that the operation of the State laws shall be suspended to the extent necessary to give effect to legislation enacted by the Congress."

Therefore be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky:

SECTION 1. That the foregoing and above-recited amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be and the same is hereby ratified by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth (State) of Kentucky as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the Governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky forthwith forward to the Secretary of State of the United States an authenticated copy of the foregoing joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the council of the city of Cleveland, Ohio, favoring the making of continued appropriations for the Works Progress Administration, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate the memorial of the Municipal Utilities League, of Bay City, Mich., remonstrating against the confirmation of Louis M. Nims as State administrator of the Works Progress Administration for Michigan, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the board of supervisors of the city and county of Honolulu, Hawaii, favoring Federal action to alleviate the conditions brought about by maritime strikes, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the North Harlem Community Council, New York City, N. Y., favoring amendment of the Social Security Act so as to include as beneficiaries thereunder farm workers and domestic workers in private homes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Moultrie County Council of the American Legion, at Bethany, Ill., endorsing the President's peace pact with the nations of South America, and favoring a policy of neutrality with all nations by the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate the memorial of Headquarters Lodge of the American Society, Shreveport, La., remonstrating against amendment of the Constitution, especially the provision relating to the coinage of money and regulation of the value thereof, etc., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NEUTRALITY—MILITARY AVIATION

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I send to the desk for appropriate reference a resolution adopted at a regular meeting of Johnson-Brown Post, No. 1736, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, at Alexandria, La. It is a short resolution, and I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JOHNSON-BROWN POST, No. 1736,
VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS,
Alexandria, La., January 15, 1937.

At a regular meeting of Johnson-Brown Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, of Alexandria, La., the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"(1) That the Congress of the United States now in session be memorialized to pass the necessary legislations granting unto the President the right, in his discretion, to place an embargo on any and all material that might be used in war to any country at war, whether with another country or a civil war.

"(2) That the Congress of the United States now in session be memorialized to pass the necessary legislations to place the military aviation of the United States under a separate department or branch from the Army or Navy so as to operate as a unit and independently of any other branch or department.

"(3) That the Congress of the United States now in session be memorialized to appropriate the money necessary to build a sufficient number of military airplanes to place the United States on an equal in that respect with any other country."

AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP, ISLAND OF GUAM

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, recently I had the privilege of visiting the island of Guam. At a mass meeting of citizens, arranged with the approval of our very excellent Governor, Mr. McCandlish, in the public square at Agana, the capital of the island, a petition from the people of the island praying for the granting of American citizenship was presented to me by the chairmen of the House of Council and House of Assembly of the Fourth Guam Congress. I ask that a resolution adopted by the council and assembly relating to the matter to which I have just alluded may, together with the letter of transmittal, be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution and letter were referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FOURTH CONGRESS OF THE ISLAND OF GUAM,
COUNCIL AND ASSEMBLY,
Agana, Guam, October 19, 1936.

Hon. W. G. McADOO:

In line with the move the people of Guam have taken to attain United States citizenship through congressional legislation, we take pleasure in sending you a copy of the resolution passed by the Guam Congress in joint session, trusting that you will be kind enough to lend support to our sincerest aspiration, should the same meet with your kind consideration.

Very sincerely yours,

E. T. CALVO,
Chairman, House of Assembly.
B. J. BORDALLO,
Chairman, House of Council.

Whereas the United States of America as a result of the war of 1898, acquired from the sovereign of Spain, among other territories, the island of Guam, said acquisition having been officially recognized under the terms of the Treaty of Paris dated December 10, 1898; and

Whereas the provision of article IX, paragraph 2 of the Treaty of Paris specifies that "the civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territories hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by the Congress"; and

Whereas all the native inhabitants of the territories ceded to the United States under the terms of the said Treaty of Paris, with the exception of the inhabitants of the Island of Guam, have been afforded and granted political rights and privileges which are the heritage of free American Government; and

Whereas during the 38 years that have elapsed since the signing of the Treaty of Paris, the inhabitants of the island of Guam have firmly and consistently remained loyal and lawabiding toward their mother country and have expressed their desire and aspiration of becoming citizens of the United States as evinced by their pledges and petitions and manifested in deeds by their full-hearted cooperation and active support given their mother country in the last World War; and

Whereas President McKinley in his instructions when he placed the island under the control of the Navy Department in 1898 inferred that legislation by the United States would be provided; and the inhabitants of Guam, after 38 years of faithful allegiance to the American flag, are patiently waiting for the only reward they desire—to be accepted to citizenship of their mother country, and to be at least on the same status as the inhabitants of the Virgin Islands; and

Whereas petitions in the past seeking to gain the desired aim for which the people of Guam have striven for 38 years, as submitted to the President of the United States and his several cabinet officers, have proved futile; and

Whereas the petition signed by 1,965 native inhabitants of Guam on December 19, 1933, presented by the Honorable ERNEST W. GIBSON of Vermont, before the Congress of the United States on February 28, 1934, was referred to the Committee on Immigration where it is still pending; and

Whereas it is the consensus of opinion among the people of Guam and their duly elected representatives in the Guam Congress that the cause of the people of Guam, be presented by a delegation or appropriate representation to the Congress of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the people of Guam through their official representatives, the Fourth Guam Congress, petition the Governor of Guam, the official representative in Guam of our mother country, to effect the early consummation of the desire and aspiration of the people of Guam, by the appointment of one delegate elected from each house of Guam Congress to proceed to Washington, D. C., for the sole purpose of representing the interests of Guam and her people; be it further

Resolved, That the chairman of each house of Guam Congress be directed to forward a copy of this resolution to: The Governor of Guam; the President of the United States of America; Committee on Immigration, United States Congress; Committee on Insular Affairs, United States Congress; Committee on Claims, United States Congress; the various Congressmen of the United States; and others interested in the welfare of Guam.

AMENDMENT TO FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. TYDINGS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 3587, the first deficiency appropriation bill, 1937, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill insert the following:
"For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the joint resolution making provision for a national celebration of the bicentenary of the birth of Charles Carroll of Carrollton, approved June 15, 1936, including travel expenses, and subsistence at not to exceed $5 per day, $12,500, or such part thereof as may be necessary."

ALLEGATIONS AGAINST MEMBERS OF THE SUPREME COURT

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I am about to send to the desk a resolution which I will ask to have read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Before doing so, however, I should like to make a few remarks concerning it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator from Pennsylvania will proceed.

Mr. GUFFEY. The President of the United States, with his characteristic frankness and courage, has opened for debate the most troublesome problem which we must solve if we are to continue a democracy.

That problem is, whether the Supreme Court will permit Congress, the legislative branch of our Government, which was equally trusted with the Supreme Court by the framers of the Constitution, to perform its duties in making democracy workable and effective.

No Senator would be frank if he did not admit that he has been greatly troubled by decisions of the Supreme Court in the last few years. Every Senator understands the general feeling of the people of the country that the attitude of the Supreme Court toward congressional legislation is the most serious problem ahead of Congress if it is to carry out the mandate given the administration by the people at the recent election.

I have therefore considered it my duty, as a Senator of the United States, to inform myself as fully as possible about the Supreme Court.

I have considered that my duty required me to inform myself about the individual Justices of that Court. Every realist knows that no human institution is abler or fairer than the men who constitute it. Many public institutions, admirable in conception, have failed the public's trust in them time and time again because, through bad judgment or otherwise, the particular individuals who constituted the institution at such times were not worthy of the traditions of the institution itself.

Any real study of the Supreme Court is a study of the nine men who are the Court and who are our constitutional law.

As Chief Justice Hughes once well said:

We are under a Constitution, but the Constitution is what the Judges say it is.

I have therefore been trying to learn what I could of the men who are the present Supreme Court; how they got there, what kind of men they are, and what their attitude is toward the problems of the Congress. In the course of that study I have come across this book which I hold in my hand [exhibiting]—The Nine Old Men.

This book cannot be dismissed as irresponsible or unimportant. The Nine Old Men is published by the largest and one of the most responsible publishing houses in the United States—Doubleday, Doran & Co. The vice president of that publishing house is a prominent member of the Republican Party, Col. Theodore Roosevelt, Jr. The book is rated by the New York Times reports as a nonfiction best seller, which has already run into thousands of copies.

The American Bar Association Journal for December devotes its principal editorial to a wrathful excoriation of The Nine Old Men.

If it is uttering falsehoods, The Nine Old Men thoroughly deserves that excoriation. It is the most disturbing—I would say shocking—book on public officials I have ever read. Its purported disclosures are sensational.

Unfortunately, The Nine Old Men leaves the reader, however resentful, with an uneasy feeling that there may be plenty of fire beneath so much smoke. No matter how much they may be criticized, the authors of this book have a reputation for accuracy uncommon in a mere gossip column, and they have here set forth an amazing wealth of circumstantial detail which illuminates isolated facts with which many of us are more or less familiar.

There is no use blinking the fact that today the Supreme Court is itself on trial before the whole Nation. Just as in the days after the Dred Scott decision, there is not a man or woman in the street who has not some opinion as to what should or should not be done to the Court. The less the Court can maintain its superhuman position of being above criticism, the more it needs to satisfy the very human requirement that it be at least above suspicion.

The air today is full of talk of constitution amendment—of shearing the Court completely of its power to challenge the legality of an act of Congress. The people—or even Members of Congress—cannot be expected to judge wisely on the problem of the relationship between the Court as an institution and Congress as an institution unless they feel that individual members of the Court are themselves personally above suspicion either as to competence or as to motives.

In 1898 Mr. Justice Brewer, of the United States Supreme Court, said:

It is a mistake to suppose that the Supreme Court is either honored or helped by being spoken of as beyond criticism. On the contrary, the life and character of its Justices should be the objects of constant watchfulness by all and its judgments subject to the freest criticism. The time is past in the history of the world when any living man or body of men could be set on a pedestal and decorated with a halo. True, many criticisms may be, like their authors, devoid of good taste. But better all sorts of criticism than no criticism at all. The moving waters are full of life and health; only in the still waters is stagnation and death.

The Nine Old Men makes sensational charges not only regarding the motives behind the votes of certain Justices on certain cases but regarding their character and how they got on the Court as well. If these statements in The Nine Old Men go unchallenged there will creep across this country an ever-widening suspicion of the motives of members of the Court which will embitter and muddle every attempt at cool judgment on great constitutional issues.

The country needs and has a right to know the truth about this book and its charges and to have the assurance that only an adequate investigation by the Senate Judiciary Committee can give. I am therefore now offering a resolution to ask the Judiciary Committee to inquire into The Nine Old Men and its charges and tell this Congress and the country what they mean.

I ask that the resolution may be read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I understood it to be the desire of my colleague to have the resolution read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the junior Senator from Pennsylvania desire the resolution read?

Mr. GUFFEY. I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 67) was read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Whereas the great constitutional issue of the proper powers of the Supreme Court of the United States should not be obscured by scandalous rumors as to the abuse of the Court's power by individual Justices thereof;

Whereas a book entitled "The Nine Old Men" has been published by the publishing house of Doubleday, Doran & Co. and has attained a large circulation;

Whereas such book makes sensational charges about the abuse of the powers of the Supreme Court of the United States by individual Justices of that Court; and

Whereas such charges, if untrue, are not only scandalous but are conducive to an unhealthy disrespect for the Court by the people of this country: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary shall study the charges made in such book, The Nine Old Men, impugning the motives and character of Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, and make a report to the Senate as to the truth or falsity of such charges.

NEUTRALITY ACT OF 1935 AND PROPOSED AMENDMENTS

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, August 31, 1935, Congress enacted the so-called Neutrality Act. February 29, 1936, certain amendments were adopted to that act. Those amendments do not clearly disclose how the original act would read including the amendments.

Last Friday I introduced a joint resolution (S. J. Res. 51) proposing certain additional amendments to the neutrality act, as amended. It is rather difficult to understand how the act would read if those amendments should be adopted. Therefore I have had prepared a draft showing how the act would read with the amendments adopted in 1936, and also how it would read if the amendments should be adopted which I offered last Friday. I ask that the draft showing how the original act would read with the amendments adopted in 1936 and the amendments which I now propose may be printed in the RECORD. I ask further that the amendments proposed by me be printed in italics.

There being no objection, the act, amendments, and proposed amendments (in italics) were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Amendments adopted in 1936 are included in the draft of the joint resolution. Amendments proposed by Mr. PITTMAN and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations are indicated in italics]

Joint resolution providing for the prohibition of the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerent countries; the prohibition of the transportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war by vessels of the United States for the use of belligerent states; for the registration and licensing of persons engaged in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing arms, ammunition, or implements of war; and restricting travel by American citizens on belligerent ships during war

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whenever the President shall find that there exists a state of war between or among two or more foreign states the President shall proclaim such fact, and it shall thereafter be unlawful to export arms, ammunition, or implements of war from any place in the United States, or possessions of the United States, to any port of such belligerent states, or to any neutral port for transshipment to, or for the use of, a belligerent country.

The President, by proclamation, shall definitely enumerate the arms, ammunition, or implements of war, the export of which is prohibited by this act.

The President shall, from time to time, by proclamation, extend such embargo upon the export of arms, ammunition, or implements of war to other states as and when they may become involved in such war.

Whenever the President shall find that a state of civil war exists in a foreign state and that such armed conflict is of a magnitude or is being conducted under conditions that the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war from the United States to said foreign state would threaten and endanger the peace of the United States, the President shall proclaim such fact, and it shall thereafter be unlawful to export arms, ammunition, or implements of war from any place in the United States, or possessions of the United States, to any port of such state or to any neutral port for transshipment to, or for use in, said state.

Whoever, in violation of any of the provisions of this section, shall export, or attempt to export, or cause to be exported, arms, ammunition, or implements of war from the United States, or any of its possessions, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both, and the property, vessel, or vehicle containing the same shall be subject to the provisions of sections 1 to 8, inclusive, title 6, chapter 30, of the act approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 223–225; U. S. C., title 22, secs. 238–245).

Sec. 1–B. (a) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation or proclamations as provided in section 1 of this act and he shall thereafter find that the placing of restrictions on the shipment of certain articles or materials in addition to arms, ammunition, and implements of war from the United States to said belligerent described in the proclamation issued under said section 1, or to a country wherein civil war has been proclaimed to exist, is deemed necessary to promote the security and preserve the peace or neutrality of the United States or to protect the lives and commerce of nationals of the United States, he shall so proclaim and it shall thereafter be unlawful for any American vessel to carry such articles or materials to any belligerent country or any country wherein civil war exists, named in said proclamation or proclamations issued under section 1 of this act, or to any neutral country for transshipment to, or for the use of, such belligerent countries or within such country where civil war exists.

(b) The President shall by proclamation from time to time definitely enumerate said articles and materials which it shall be unlawful for American vessels to transport.

(c) The President shall from time to time by proclamation extend such restrictions as are imposed under this section to other countries as and when they may be declared to become belligerents under proclamations issued under section 1 of this act.

(d) The President may from time to time change, modify, or revoke in whole or in part any proclamations issued by him under this section.

In the case of the forfeiture of any arms, ammunition, or implements of war by reason of a violation of this act, no public or private sale shall be required, but such arms, ammunition, or implements of war shall be delivered to the Secretary of War for such use or disposal thereof as shall be approved by the President of the United States.

When, in the judgment of the President, the conditions which have caused him to issue his proclamation have ceased to exist he shall revoke the same and the provisions hereof shall thereupon cease to apply.

Except with respect to prosecutions committed or forfeitures incurred prior to the revocation of the proclamation or proclamations issued thereunder, said proclamations shall become ineffective after revocation.

SEC. 1a. Whenever the President shall have issued his proclamation as provided for in section 1 of this act, it shall thereafter during the period of the war be unlawful for any person within the United States to purchase, sell, or exchange bonds, securities, or other obligations of the government of any belligerent country, or of any political subdivision thereof, or of any person acting for or on behalf of such government, issued after the date of such proclamation, or to make any loan or extend any credit to any such government or person: Provided, That if the President shall find that such action will serve to protect the commercial or other interests of the United States or its nationals, he may, in his discretion, and to such extent and under such regulation as he may prescribe, except from the operation of this section ordinary commercial credits and short-time obligations in aid of legal transactions and of a character customarily used in normal peacetime commercial transactions.

The provisions of this section shall not apply to a renewal or adjustment of such indebtedness as may exist on the date of the President's proclamation.

Whoever shall violate the provisions of this section or of any regulations issued hereunder shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $50,000 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both. Should the violation be by a corporation, organization, or association, each officer or agent thereof participating in the violation may be liable to the penalty herein prescribed.

When the President shall have revoked his proclamation as provided for in section 1 of this act, the provisions of this section and of any regulations issued by the President hereunder shall thereupon cease to apply.

SEC. 1b. This act shall not apply to an American republic or republics engaged in war against a non-American state or states, provided the American republic is not cooperating with a non-American state or states in such war.

SEC. 3. Section 9 of said joint resolution is amended to read as follows:

"There is hereby authorized to be appropriated from time to time, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the provisions and accomplish the purposes of this act."

SEC. 2. That for the purposes of this act—

(a) The term "Board" means the National Munitions Control Board which is hereby established to carry out the provisions of this act. The Board shall consist of the Secretary of State, who shall be chairman and executive officer of the Board; the Secretary of the Treasury; the Secretary of War; the Secretary of the Navy; and the Secretary of Commerce. Except as otherwise provided in this act, or by other law, the administration of this act is vested in the Department of State;

(b) The term "United States", when used in a geographical sense, includes the several States and Territories, the insular possessions of the United States (including the Philippine Islands), the Canal Zone, and the District of Columbia;

(c) The term "person" includes a partnership, company, association, or corporation, as well as a natural person.

Within 90 days after the effective date of this act, or upon first engaging in business, every person who engages in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing any of the arms, ammunition, and implements of war referred to in this act, whether as an exporter, importer, manufacturer, or dealer, shall register with the Secretary of State his name, or business name, principal place of business, and places of business in the United States, and a list of the arms, ammunition, and implements of war which he manufactures, imports, or exports.

Every person required to register under this section shall notify the Secretary of State of any change in the arms, ammunition, and implements of war which he exports, imports, or manufactures; and upon such notification the Secretary of State shall issue to such person an amended certificate of registration, free of charge, which shall remain valid until the date of expiration of the original certificate. Every person required to register under the provisions of this section shall pay a registration fee of $500, and upon receipt of such fee the Secretary of State shall issue a registration certificate valid for 5 years, which shall be renewable for further periods of 5 years upon the payment of each renewal of a fee of $500.

It shall be unlawful for any person to export, or attempt to export, from the United States any of the arms, ammunition, or implements of war referred to in this act to any other country or to import, or attempt to import, to the United States from any other country any of the arms, ammunition, or implements of war referred to in this act without first having obtained a license therefor.

All persons required to register under this section shall maintain, subject to the inspection of the Board, such permanent records of manufacture for export, importation, and exportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war as the Board shall prescribe.

Licenses shall be issued to persons who have registered as provided for, except in cases of export or import licenses where exportation of arms, ammunition, or implements of war would be in violation of this act or any other law of the United States, or of a treaty to which the United States is a party, in which cases such licenses shall not be issued.

Whenever a proclamation or proclamations are issued, as provided in section 1 of this act, all licenses theretofore issued under the act, shall ipso facto, and immediately upon the issuance of such proclamation or proclamations, cease to grant authority to export arms, ammunition, or implements of war from any place in the United States, or possessions of the United States, to any port in said belligerent states or to such state wherein civil war has been declared by Presidential proclamation to exist or to any neutral port for transshipment to, or for use in, any belligerent country or for use in any country where civil war is proclaimed to exist; and said license or licenses, insofar as the grant of authority to export to such countries named in such proclamation or proclamations of the President, shall be null and void.

The Board shall be called by the chairman and shall hold at least one meeting a year.

No purchase of arms, ammunition, and implements of war shall be made on behalf of the United States by any officer, executive department, or independent establishment of the Government from any person who shall have failed to register under the provisions of this act.

The Board shall make an annual report to Congress, copies of which shall be distributed as are other reports transmitted to Congress. Such report shall contain such information and data collected by the Board as may be considered of value in the determination of questions connected with the control of trade in arms, ammunition, and implements of war. It shall include a list of all persons required to register under the provisions of this act, and full information concerning the licenses issued hereunder.

The Secretary of State shall promulgate such rules and regulations with regard to the enforcement of this section as he may deem necessary to carry out its provisions.

The President is hereby authorized to proclaim upon recommendation of the Board from time to time a list of articles which shall be considered arms, ammunition, and implements of war for the purposes of this section.

This section shall take effect on the ninetieth day after the date of its enactment.

SEC. 3. Whenever the President shall issue the proclamation provided for in section 1 of this act, thereafter it shall be unlawful for any American vessel to carry any arms, ammunition, or implements of war to any port of the belligerent countries named in such proclamation as being at war, or to the state where civil war is proclaimed to exist, or to any neutral port for transshipment to, or for the use of, a belligerent country, or within the state where civil war is proclaimed to exist.

Whoever, in violation of the provisions of this section, shall take, attempt to take, or shall authorize, hire, or solicit another to take, any such vessel carrying such cargo out of port or from the jurisdiction of the United States shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both; and, in addition, such vessel, her tackle, apparel, furniture, equipment, and the arms, ammunition, and implements of war on board shall be forfeited to the United States.

When the President finds the conditions which have caused him to issue his proclamation have ceased to exist, he shall revoke his proclamation, and the provisions of this section shall thereupon cease to apply.

SEC. 4. Whenever, during any war in which the United States is neutral, the President, or any person thereunto authorized by him, shall have cause to believe that any vessel, domestic or foreign, whether requiring clearance or not, is about to carry out of a port of the United States, or its possession, men or fuel, arms, ammunition, implements of war, or other supplies to any warship, tender, or supply ship of a foreign belligerent nation, but the evidence is not deemed sufficient to justify forbidding the departure of the vessel as provided for by section 1, title V, chapter 30, of the act approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 1; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 31), and if, in the President's judgment, such action will serve to maintain peace between the United States and foreign nations, or to protect the commercial interests of the United States and its citizens, or to promote the security of the United States, he shall have the power and it shall be his duty to require the owner, master, or person in command thereof, before departing from a port of the United States, or any of its possessions, for a foreign port, to give a bond to the United States, with sufficient sureties, in such amount as he shall deem proper, conditioned that the vessel will not deliver the men, or the cargo, or any part thereof, to any warship, tender, or supply ship of a belligerent nation; and, if the President, or any person thereunto authorized by him, shall find that a vessel, domestic or foreign, in a port of the United States, or one of its possessions, has previously cleared from such port during such war and delivered its cargo or any part thereof to a warship, tender, or supply ship of a belligerent nation, he may prohibit the departure of such vessel during the duration of the war.

SEC. 5. Whenever, during any war in which the United States is neutral, the President shall find that special restrictions placed on the use of the ports and territorial waters of the United States, or of its possessions, by the submarines of a foreign nation will serve to maintain peace between the United States and foreign nations, or to protect the commercial interests of the United States and its citizens, or to promote the security of the United States, and shall make proclamation thereof, it shall thereafter be unlawful for any such submarine to enter a port or the territorial waters of the United States or any of its possessions, or to depart therefrom, except under such conditions and subject to such limitations as the President may prescribe. When, in his judgment, the conditions which have caused him to issue his proclamation have ceased to exist, he shall revoke his proclamation and the provisions of this section shall thereupon cease to apply.

SEC. 6. Whenever, during any war in which the United States is neutral, the President shall find that the maintenance of peace between the United States and foreign nations, or the protection of the lives of citizens of the United States, or the protection of the commercial interests of the United States and its citizens, or the security of the United States requires that the American citizens should refrain from traveling as passengers on the vessels of any belligerent nation, he shall so proclaim, and thereafter it shall be unlawful for any citizen of the United States to travel on any vessel of any nation declared in the proclamation provided for in section 1 of this act to be a belligerent or to be a state wherein civil war exists: Provided, however, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to a citizen traveling on the vessel of a belligerent whose voyage was begun in advance of the date of the President's proclamation, and who had no opportunity to discontinue his voyage after that date: And provided further, That they shall not apply under 90 days after the date of the President's proclamation to a citizen returning from a foreign country to the United States or to any of its possessions. When, in the President's judgment, the conditions which have caused him to issue his proclamation have ceased to exist, he shall revoke his proclamation and the provisions of this section shall thereupon cease to apply.

SEC. 6–A. Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation or proclamations as provided in section 1, it shall thereafter be unlawful for any American vessel other than vessels of war engaged in commerce with a belligerent country to be armed or to carry any armament, arms, ammunition, or implements of war except small arms and ammunitions therefor and other weapons as the President may publicly designate to be in possession of the officers of such vessels deemed by the President necessary for the preservation of discipline aboard such vessels and until said proclamation or proclamations are revoked.

SEC. 7. In every case of the violation of any of the provisions of this act where a specific penalty is not herein provided, such violator or violators, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

SEC. 8. If any of the provisions of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 9. The sum of $25,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by the Secretary of State in administering this act.

FLOOD CONTROL

[Mr. BILBO asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Washington Post of Jan. 25, 1937, relative to flood control, which appears in the Appendix.]

SALE OF FOREIGN BONDS IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate at this time to make a few remarks with reference to a proposed sale of foreign bonds to the people of this country. Last Friday, when the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] was speaking with reference to the debts owed our country by foreign governments, he referred, I believe, to several articles which appeared in some of the newspapers published in Washington. When he read quotations from those newspapers, it occurred to me that he might well have referred to an advertisement which no doubt appeared in the very journals from which he was quoting. This advertisement had to do with the sale in this country of bonds of the Government of the Dominion of Canada, a possession and a political subdivision of the British Empire. These bonds are being purchased by several banking institutions domiciled and doing business in the United States and are being offered for sale to the people of the United States.

Because of the cordial relationship that has existed between our country and Canada for over a century, I hesitate to call the attention of the Senate to this sale of bonds. I fear, however, that if the transaction should go unchallenged it might set a precedent, and other of our debtor nations might offer, as exhibit 1, the instant case in their endeavor to sell some of their securities to our people.

I say to you, Mr. President, that, in my opinion, the sale of these bonds in this country is in direct violation of a law which was enacted by the Seventy-third Congress and approved on April 13, 1934, and is commonly referred to as the Johnson Act. This statute was fathered, I believe, by the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. President, these bonds which are being bought and offered for sale in this country are bonds issued by the Dominion of Canada, a possession of the British Empire, one of our debtor nations. That is strictly prohibited by this statute. There is, however, an exception in the statute, viz:

Except a renewal or adjustment of existing indebtedness—

But I do not believe that the sale of these bonds comes within the purview of the exception contained in the statute. In order to refresh the memories of Senators who were here when this act was passed, and that others may become acquainted with the wording thereof, I will read excerpts from it.

The purpose of the act, as stated in the enacting clause, is—

To prohibit financial transactions with any foreign government in default on its obligations to the United States.

The act provides:

That hereafter it shall be unlawful within the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States for any person to purchase or sell the bonds, securities, or other obligations of any foreign government or political subdivision thereof, or any organization or association acting for or on behalf of a foreign government or political subdivision thereof, issued after the passage of this act, or to make any loan to such foreign government, political subdivision, organization, or association, except a renewal or adjustment of existing indebtedness while such government, political subdivision, organization, or association is in default in the payment of its obligations, or any part thereof, to the Government of the United States. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

There is no question about Great Britain owing this country a large amount of money, nor is there any doubt about its being in default. The Dominion of Canada is a British possession and owes allegiance to the mother country. There is nothing to indicate that the issue of these bonds of the Dominion of Canada is to renew or adjust existing bonds owned by the people of this country prior to the approval of the Johnson Act, but on the contrary, everything points to the fact that almost the entire issue is being purchased by banking institutions of this country, and those bonds are being offered for sale to our people.

The advertisement refers to a prospectus. I got hold of a copy of the prospectus, in which it is set out that—

By an agreement dated January 18, 1937, and upon the terms and subject to the conditions therein set forth, the underwriters named above have severally agreed to purchase, and the Government has agreed to sell to them severally, the several principal amounts of bonds set forth above.

The names and addresses of the several underwriters of the $85,000,000 principal amount of these bonds and the several amounts of each maturity underwritten by them respectively are as follows—

And in reading over the names of these underwriters we find but one banking institution located outside of the United States that is fostering the sale of these bonds, and that institution has subscribed for the amount of $2,000,000 out of an $85,000,000 issue.

Mr. President, it cannot be maintained that the sale of these bonds comes within the plain meaning of this statute. If it does, then the statute defeats its purpose, because any possession of one of our foreign debtors could sell bonds in our country and any bonds of our foreign debtor nations issued prior to April 13, 1934, may be sold in this country. If this course is pursued—if our Nation permits Canada, England, or any other debtor nation to sell bonds in this country because of the exception noted in the statute; that is—

Except a renewal or adjustment of existing indebtedness—

I contend that England, France, Italy—in fact, any of our debtor nations—could refinance in this country every bond issued by them prior to April 13, 1934, in spite of the Johnson Act.

No doubt it was the intention of Congress to permit the renewal or adjustment of such foreign bonds as were purchased and owned by the American people when the Johnson Act became effective. To go any further, I say, is a violation of the statute.

When the Senate adjourns today, it is my purpose to secure from the proper authority a ruling on the statute to which I have referred; and if the statute is not interpreted as I have herein indicated, I propose to offer an amendment to the statute prohibiting the refinancing or renewal or refunding in this country of any of the bonds of our debtor nations other than those which were owned and in the possession of the American people prior to April 13, 1934.

Mr. President, I ask permission at this time to have printed, in connection with my remarks, the advertisement appearing in the daily press to which I have referred, as well as a few short excerpts from the prospectus.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

This appears as a matter of record only and is under no circumstances to be construed as an offering of these bonds for sale, or as an offer to buy, or as a solicitation of an offer to buy, any of such bonds. The offer is made only by means of the prospectus.

$85,000,000 Government of the Dominion of Canada bonds; $30,000,000 7-year 2¼-percent bonds, dated January 15, 1937, due January 15, 1944; $55,000,000 30-year 3-percent bonds, dated January 15, 1937, due January 15, 1967.

Prices: 7-year 2¼-percent bonds, 99½ percent and accrued interest; 30-year 3-percent bonds, 98 percent and accrued interest.

Copies of the prospectus are obtainable from the undersigned or from any other underwriter of this issue.

The underwriting agreement provides that if any underwriter, because of financial inability, shall fail or refuse to purchase the principal amount of bonds which it is required to purchase under the agreement, Morgan, Stanley & Co., Inc., will purchase for its own account or find purchasers for such bonds as set forth in the agreement.

CENTENNIAL OF MICHIGAN'S STATEHOOD

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to note for the RECORD—and I do it with great pride—that this day marks the centennial of Michigan's admission as a State.

One hundred years ago this afternoon, culminating the long and dramatic campaign which preceded final action, Congress concluded the process which brought great Michigan into the Union. It has been an amazing century—the swiftest and most colorful in all time—and the development of Michigan is a typical cross section of this area.

We have come from a scattered frontier population of 90,000 to a great, throbbing family of 5,000,000 souls. Twenty-sixth in age among the States, twenty-second in area, seventh in population—we are first in numerous contributions to the life and history of the United States.

It is a glorious Commonwealth, Mr. President, whether estimated in its teeming industry, its fertile acres, its rich forests, its mines, its lakes, or its streams. Probably no other State is so amazingly self-contained. It is a glorious Commonwealth in its incomparable resources, whether assessed in terms of Nature's prodigal bounty, or in the amazing prowess of its commerce, or in the character and quality of its citizenship. It is a glorious Commonwealth in its rugged history under four flags—French, British, Spanish, American—with its traditions and antiquities rooted in times as ancient as those of Plymouth Rock. It is a glorious Commonwealth in its brave aspirations for tomorrow. The motto upon its great seal is justified: "If you would see a beautiful peninsula, look about you."

In common with countless other sons and daughters who love her, I salute Michigan upon the centennial of her statehood.

Mr. President, the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] is of our Michigan soil and ever loyal to it. He delivered an illuminating historical address in Ypsilanti on January 8, 1937. As a further mark of recognition for this day, I ask that his address be incorporated in the body of the RECORD following my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

MICHIGAN, YESTERDAY AND TOMORROW

For one traveling the deep reaches of human history, a century is hardly more than a single day. But the century ending tonight means more to this audience than almost any other similar period of recorded time. Its story is the epic of a pioneer people, struggling against the mud, miasm, and misery of colonial and Territorial days to attain that security in life and property which is guaranteed by one of the truly great States of the Union.

Every citizen, every native of the Wolverine State, has a right to be proud of this century. But it is not in a spirit of shameless boastfulness that we speak tonight. We know the hardships our forefathers suffered and the courage they displayed. With real humility we acknowledge that what we now enjoy they bequeathed to us. We did not earn these blessings; the victories of our ancestors brought us the rewards. They died that we might live.

But because they would wish it, we use what they gave. We reap what they sowed. Of course, those predecessors of ours deserve our respect, our affection, our deepest gratitude. They have all these, but we can be forgiven, I am sure, if tonight we recite and glorify their deeds. Naturally, those achievements mean a little more because our veins carry their blood. Our faces are cast in the mold of theirs. We are their heirs and clasp to our breasts what they handed on to us. Perhaps in reciting what they did that now benefits us, our eyes may be opened to see whether we deserve the fruits of their many sacrifices.

Let us consider the exploits of those men who carved Michigan out of the wilderness and fought for the acknowledgment of statehood. But let us do it in the spirit of introspection, attempting to determine if we are worthy sons and daughters of those noble ancestors of ours. Idle, thoughtless boasting will surely bring rebuke from those who think they see how shallow we really are, and how undeserving, perhaps, of our inherited blessings.

It may well be that no monuments will be built for those of this generation. But, as I see it, there is for each of us something to do that, in the last analysis, is of greater value than to achieve a marble shaft or a bronze memorial. We can carry on, even inconspicuously and in some measure make up for what they gave, by transmitting to our children the wholesomeness and integrity of our pioneer forefathers.

* * * * * * *

To the French goes the credit for the discovery of this part of the world. Adventurers first, and then missionaries, brought the taste of civilization to the Great Lakes region. As early as 1618 Pope Paul IV directed the formation of missions in Canada. Almost immediately missionaries reached the Indian tribes on the eastern banks of Lake Huron, and doubtless were the first white men to see across the water what was later to be the Wolverine State. Before the Pilgrims looked upon Plymouth Rock Frenchmen were in sight of Michigan's shores.

In 1634, Jean Nicollet discovered the Great Lakes instead of the Sea of China, which Champlain had sent him to find. It is probable his feet were the first to tread the soil of this peninsula.

All early settlements were on the shores of navigable waters. The lakes and rivers afforded easy means of transportation. There was practically no travel away from the water. Father Marquette, for example, was probably the first white man to visit what is now Chicago. He had gone from St. Ignace, across the lakes and down the rivers, till he reached the Illinois. Up that river he traveled and by water and land reached Lake Michigan. Taken ill here he was paddled by friendly Indians to what is now Ludington, and there he died.

No one of these early explorers penetrated the interior of Michigan. It remained for La Salle, in December 1679, to make the first passage across the Lower Peninsula. Having lost contact with his sailing vessel, which had been sent east with furs, he set out on foot into the wilds beyond the St. Joseph River. The party struggled through the swamps and forests till the shores of the Huron River were reached. Here they built a canoe and, according to the record, "floated down the stream until their progress was barred by sunken logs and prostrate trunks of trees."

One who lived more than half his life on the Huron knows that in December the ice is likely to choke the stream. Also in that early day there were no student swimmers and canoeists at Ypsilanti and Ann Arbor eager to clear the channel in summertime. So I can well fancy that La Salle was glad to leave the Huron and strike out overland to the Detroit River. Who knows but he disembarked right here at Ypsilanti? But after the lapse of two and a half centuries we can never know.

On the 11th of the previous August, La Salle and Hennepin had sailed into the Detroit River from Lake Erie. The latter recorded that the prospect was every way pleasing. To quote his words: "Those who will one day have the happiness to possess this fertile and pleasant strait will be very much obliged to those who have shown them the way."

It was left to Antoine de la Motte Cadillac to forestall the English, already looking with greedy eyes upon the Detroit region. After several years as commandant at Michelimackinac, Cadillac had observed the many acres of available lands, the opportunities for trade in furs, and the strategic value of the shores of the Detroit River. He convinced the King and Count Pontchartrain, Minister for the Colonies, that he should be sent here, and he was duly commissioned. The King granted Cadillac a tract of land 15 arpents (acres) square, "wherever on the Detroit the new fort should be located." The expedition set forth, landing at the present site of Detroit July 24, 1701.

This date was the beginning of significant movements, the first of which was the settlement of Detroit. That community became the center of all the events that led up to statehood for Michigan, the historical fact we celebrate tonight.

The various Indian wars, the Revolution, and the War of 1812—all these left their mark on Detroit and its hinterlands. Three flags had their ups and downs over the fort. I need not speak in detail of this familiar history, nor of the ordinance of 1787, which provided for the organization of the Northwest Territory. This was under the governorship of Gen. Arthur St. Clair, when, in 1805, the Territory of Michigan was established, with General Hull as the first governor. There are few pleasant things to say of this chief executive, but I assume he did what he thought was wise in surrendering Detroit to the British.

It is urged that Hull dreaded what would happen if he retreated, as he might have done if his responsibility had been exclusively that of a military commander. But he was the civil governor of Michigan as well, and in that capacity had a duty to the entire populace to consider. One writer has said: "We think there can be no doubt that the presence of a large force of savages, supposed to number at least a thousand, who in case of an unsuccessful defense would have turned loose upon the defenseless inhabitants without distinction of age or sex, not only of Detroit but all Michigan, was the real factor that actuated General Hull." It is impossible to know the whole truth, of course, but we need not attempt to settle that argument. Let the dead past bury its dead.

After General Harrison's victory on the Thames, he appointed his aide, General Cass, military Governor of Michigan. In October 1813 President Madison made him civil Governor of Michigan. He was reappointed by President Monroe, who appeared to think highly of Cass. Anyhow, the President made a personal visit to Michigan and to the Governor in 1817.

General Cass continued as Governor until 1831, when he became Secretary of War in President Jackson's Cabinet. His life is really the history of Michigan Territory. Until Governor Mason arrived, after the retirement of Cass, the latter was the mainstay of the struggling Territory. This great character was a product of New England, born in Exeter, N. H.

As a matter of fact, New England and New York contributed most of Michigan's pioneers. While a good many French came with the original settlers and the Army sent others to Detroit, there was no immigration of consequence until the opening of the Erie Canal. This New York project, known as "Clinton's Ditch", contributed greatly to Michigan's population. Eight direct ancestors of my own came from New England and "York State" via the Erie.

The progress of the Territory was seriously interfered with by a perfectly absurd report made by the Land Office. The story begins with an act of Congress, passed in May 1812, to provide bounty lands for the benefit of soldiers who should enlist in the war about to begin.

Millions of modern veterans would have been happy had such a law been passed before the World War. They had to wait nearly 20 years after the war for action.

The surveys for the war bounties were to be of "lands fit for cultivation." Two millions of acres were to be located in the Territory of Michigan. Strange as it may seem, the Congress of 1816 repealed that portion of the original act so far as it applied to Michigan. And why was this done?

In November 1815 a Commissioner of the General Land Office reported to Washington that the country from the border and 50 miles to the north "is low, wet land, with a very thick growth of underbrush, intermixed with very bad marshes. It is with the utmost difficulty that a place can be found over which horses can be conveyed. Taking the country altogether, it is so bad there would not be more than 1 acre out of 1,000 that would in any case admit of cultivation."

Think of the fine farms in Washtenaw and all through the southern tiers of counties. But the ridiculous and utterly false report was official, and the Congress had nothing else to do than to repeal the Bounty Act so far as it applied to Michigan.

But worse than that—the story of the "great dismal swamp" of Michigan diverted from this area we love so much, thousands of settlers who went to Ohio and elsewhere instead. It was a terrible yarn, but it made the Surveyor General, Edward Tiffin, famous, and he became the first Governor of Ohio. It took years to live down the bad name given Michigan's natural resources.

With the opening of the Erie Canal there came a rush of immigrants. The first steamboat arrived in Detroit from Buffalo August 27, 1818. This was the Walk-in-the-Water. She didn't last long, but was succeeded by the Superior and other boats of considerable size. In the last months of the territorial period a thousand passengers a day were landing in Detroit.

All these factors helped to swell the population. This was fortunate for the ambitious Michiganders, because before statehood could be applied for it was provided there must be a population of 60,000. As a matter of fact, the territorial census of 1834 showed 87,273. By the Federal census of 1840 it was found that the new State had a population of 212,267, indicating a gain in 6 years of nearly 125,000.

In gathering material for this address I have found many interesting things about the early days before statehood. Detroit had a very active social life. This was particularly true during the period of Mason's Governorship. He was very young, not yet of age, when he first served under the territorial system.

Likewise Miss Harriet Martineau, in her three-volume account of Society in America, devoted pages to life in Michigan. That writer landed in Detroit at 7 a. m., June 13, 1836, and went immediately to the American Hotel, reaching there just in time for breakfast. "I had the pleasure of seeing," she said, "the healthiest set of faces that I had beheld since I left England. The breakfast was excellent, and we were served with much consideration; but the place was so full, and the accommodations of Detroit are so insufficient for the influx of people who are betaking themselves thither, that strangers must patiently put up with much delay and inconveniences till new houses of entertainment are opened. We had to wait till near 1 o'clock before any of us could have a room in which to dress."

Being something of a psychologist, as well as a doctor, I am convinced the "excellent breakfast" mentioned helped a lot. I think this because 4 or 5 days after the entry just read was made, Miss Martineau's diary shows this: "At Ypsilanti I picked up an Ann Arbor newspaper. It was badly printed; but its contents were pretty good; and it could happen nowhere out of America, that so raw a settlement as that at Ann Arbor, where there is difficulty in procuring decent accommodations, should have a newspaper."

It surely was the breakfast, because Miss Martineau had the same difficulty about accommodations in Detroit, yet did not complain. As a former mayor of Ann Arbor and long-time resident of that charming community, I resent this reflection on the county seat of Washtenaw!

Anyhow, I fear that Miss Martineau was a bit of a snob. Listen! "The society of Detroit is very choice; and as it had continued so since the old colonial days, through the territorial days, there is every reason to think that it will become, under the new dignities, a more and more desirable place of residence." Then Miss Martineau spoils it all; speaking still of Detroit, she continued: "Some of its inferior society is still very youthful." Detroit debs please register displeasure!

The battle for statehood was on, and really it was more than a battle—it was a war. Indeed, the story of the "Toledo war" is embalmed in history.

You recall the circumstances: In the ordinance of establishment there were certain ambiguities, or alleged ambiguities, in the description of the boundaries of the States which were to be carved out of the vast land area of the Northwest Territory. Toledo had suddenly decided to grow to the Maumee, which river had always been regarded as the dividing line between Ohio and Michigan. The terminus of a proposed canal, real-estate speculation, and the inevitable politics offered all the necessary reasons for a conflict.

Governor Lucas, of Ohio, and Governor Mason, of Michigan, felt they had much at stake. Consequently, when the dispute grew hot both officials ordered their militia to Toledo. New enlistments and new commissions added many soldiers and titles to Michigan's possessions.

When I was a boy there was a man in our town who was called "colonel." Inquiring about the title, I learned he had been a colonel in the Toledo war. Gold braid and brass buttons made their appeal then, as now.

The troops from both States marched for the Maumee, and real trouble seemed imminent. At that point President Jackson intervened and insisted that a Federal survey should be made to determine the exact line of boundary. The Ohio Governor agreed, but our Governor Mason rattled his saber and said he would die first. "Michigan is in peaceful possession of this territory now, and I will never agree to anything that will compromise her rights, or surrender jurisdiction here." It was a thrilling moment.

The Ohio Governor disbanded his army, and, with the disappearance of the foe, Mason withdrew his soldiers. They returned in triumph, boasting that the Ohio troops "slunk to their homes like curs, lacking courage, afraid to face the gallant men of Michigan."

President Jackson, quick tempered always, was offended by Mason's attitude and removed him from the Territorial governorship. But that didn't matter, because almost immediately the people of Michigan elected Mason Governor under the newly adopted constitution.

In this connection it will not be amiss to mention an earlier and different feeling toward President Jackson. The members of the territorial council originally had to be approved by the President, but at the beginning of the Jackson administration a new plan went into effect. The electors of Michigan Territory were authorized to choose all members of the council, who should be seated without Presidential approval. In appreciation the legislature immediately organized a group of new counties and named them after the President, Vice President, and the members of the President's Cabinet—Jackson, Calhoun, Ingham, Eaton, Barry, Branch, Van Buren, Cass, and Berrien.

November 3, 1835, Stevens T. Mason was inaugurated as first Governor of the State of Michigan. On the 10th the legislature elected two United States Senators—Lucius Lyon, of Bronson, and John Newell, of Detroit. These officials were chosen in harmony with the action of the constitutional convention which met in Detroit May 11, 1835. The people ratified and adopted the proposed constitution at an election held in October. The vote was 6,299 for and 1,359 against. The action of a remarkably able body of men was approved by a vote of better than four to one.

Once more there was trouble. I can imagine the discussions in the Senate. When the bone of the Constitution is thrown to that body the Senators will gnaw on it for weeks. But in this case there were grave questions involved and they had to be answered.

Some of the questions were these:

"Could a new State be organized without the authority of an enabling act by the Congress?"

"Could the language of the Ordinance of 1787, which had been approved by the Congress, be considered the equivalent of an enabling act? And, in view of the early action, could a State be admitted as a matter of right?"

"Who could determine, except the Congress, whether the new State was so organized as to guarantee a 'republican form of government', as required by the Constitution of the United States?"

The newly elected Michigan Senators and Representative knocked at the doors of Congress. Senator Benton, of Missouri, moved that the courtesy of the Senate be extended to them by assigning seats to the new Senators. Senator Ewing, of Ohio, immediately objected and his motion to lay that of Senator Benton on the table was carried. On the 15th of December Benton called up his motion, but Senators Henry Clay and Clayton, of Delaware, succeeded in blocking action.

On the twenty-first Senator Ewing introduced "A bill to define and settle the northern boundary of Ohio." This move made it very clear that Michigan statehood and the Ohio boundary were linked together. This was recognized to be the situation, and the next day it was determined that a special committee should be selected to deal with the "Michigan matter." This consisted of Benton, chairman; Wright, of New York; Clayton, of Delaware; Crittenden, of Kentucky; and Preston, of South Carolina.

After the special committee was appointed Senator Benton renewed his motion about seating the Michigan Senators as "spectators"—"observers" we would call them these days. Ewing moved to strike out the words "on the floor of the Senate." All the bigwigs participated in the debate, including Hendricks, Benton, and Buchanan. Finally the Michigan men were extended the same privileges as Delegates of Territories have in the House. Enemies of statehood kept them from the floor, and the Senate itself dodged the words "State of Michigan."

We come now to the year 1836. On January 26 the memorial of Michigan's Legislature was presented, praying for admission into the Union. After debate this matter, too, was referred to the special committee. In the House, the elected Representative, Mr. Isaac E. Crary, was admitted as a spectator, on motion of Mr. Beardsley, of New York.

By this time it was apparent to everybody that Michigan couldn't have its cake and eat it, too. It could not summon enough votes to ride into statehood without making material concessions about the boundary.

Likewise, there were new obstacles: Michigan lost the support of the Indiana Members of Congress by challenging the northern boundary of that State. That particular boundary had existed for 20 years. Naturally, Senator Tipton, of Indiana, who had spoken for Michigan and urged her claims, now turned against her and gave his voice and vote to Senator Ewing. Another Presidential election was on the way; Senator Benton was the administration leader and felt obliged to find an acceptable compromise, one that would satisfy the three Democratic States of Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio, all involved in the Michigan issue.

In view of the political situation it is not astonishing that Benton's committee reported in favor of Michigan's admission to the Union, with a proviso. Whenever there is half-hearted support of legislation there is always a proviso. The act provided that Michigan should elect a convention of delegates for the express purpose of giving their assent to the boundary proposed. This boundary was to be that contended for by Ohio, and the northern boundaries of Illinois and Indiana were to be undisturbed. As compensation for the loss of what is always called the Toledo strip, Michigan was to be given what is now known as the Upper Peninsula.

What we call in the Senate dilatory motions were now made, the opponents of statehood taking advantage of every opportunity to postpone action. Michigan had good friends, among whom, I am glad to say, was one of my predecessors, Silas Wright, of New York. He wanted the admission to take place automatically when the convention in Michigan should assent to the conditions imposed. Motions to amend, motions to adjourn, motions to postpone, with debate of every sort—all these parliamentary moves were made. The slavery issue was injected into the debate. The claims of Arkansas, a proposed slavery State, were urged as a reason to postpone action on free Michigan's petition. The southern Senators were against admission.

The Senate battle ended on April 2 when the friends of Michigan voted down every opposing motion. The bill was placed on its final passage and carried without a record vote. Its senatorial enemies were forced to abandon the contest.

The concluding act in the drama began on June 9, 1836, when another determined effort was made to defeat admission by further dispute over the boundary between Michigan and Ohio. John Quincy Adams, then 70 years of age, arose as the champion of the original bill, which, as we know, was so framed as to admit the State of Michigan to the Union apart from all questions of boundary.

Mr. Adams said he believed the people of Michigan had a right to admission and wanted the question of the disputed boundary left for future adjustment. The fiery old gentleman successfully fought off several amendments. There was a week-end adjournment, and on Monday, June 13, Mr. Adams succeeded in forcing a vote in Committee of the Whole, and defeated the boundary amendment by a vote of 81 yeas to 126 nays.

Mr. Adams then made one of the most famous speeches of his career. For 3 hours he contended that the bill before the House worked an injury upon Michigan and was in violation of the original compact. There were many parliamentary interchanges, but on roll call the motion to amend as introduced by Mr. Adams was agreed to—yeas 109, nays 43. The vote call on admission was then begun and proceeded with for some time, when on motion of Mr. Huntsman, the call was dispensed with. The bill was then moved to third reading and passed—yeas 153, nays 45.

But now the people of Michigan must act. A "convention of assent", authorized by the legislature, met in Ann Arbor on September 26, 1836. But the entire State was indignant over the treatment accorded by the Congress and felt it was being robbed of its possessions. The delegates voted overwhelmingly against assent.

After a few weeks, however, there came a change of feeling. I suspect that the National Democratic Committee, if there was one, exerted its influence. Anyhow, on October 29 the Democrats of Wayne County met in convention and voted in favor of another "convention of assent." Washtenaw followed suit. Then a conference of Democrats selected what they called a "committee of the people" to call a second convention.

This was done, and meeting in Ann Arbor on December 14 and 15 the assent was voted. There was plenty of ill feeling over the matter, and in derision that assemblage was called the "frost-bitten convention." Mayor John R. Williams, of Detroit, presided, and he appears to have carried out the will of his party. Governor Mason, too, was a power behind the movement.

On December 27 the President sent a message to the Senate stating that Michigan had complied with the act of Congress. The matter was debated that day, as well as on January 2, 3, and 4. On the 5th of January 1837 it passed by a vote of 23 to 10.

Then the bill went to the House. After a short debate it passed. So, on January 26, 1837, the State of Michigan was admitted to the Union. The event we celebrate tonight became an accomplished fact. As Senator Tipton had said in the days when he was strongly advocating Michigan's claim for statehood, "We might as well undertake to stay the hand of time as to prevent the growth and power of the freemen who will inhabit the valley west of the Allegheny Mountains between the Great Lakes and the Gulf of Mexico." His prophecy has been abundantly fulfilled, not alone in the words of our motto, "If you seek a beautiful peninsula look about you", but more conspicuously in the achievements of a God-fearing and noble citizenry.

Who were the people who lived here when Michigan became a State? You know all about your ancestors, as I do about mine, who came to Washtenaw County in 1825. But what do the historians have to say in general about the original population?

In one standard history of Michigan, writing of the inhabitants found here on January 26, 1837, about 150,000 in number, I found the following:

"And this population was of the best. At that time the great influx of foreign elements had not begun. The people were largely from New England and New York, either directly or by way of Ohio. There were almost none from the slave-holding States. The ordinance of 1787 kept them away. These settlers brought with them the ideals of their old homes—a love of liberty, law, and order, attachment to church and school. It can be truthfully said that no Western State was settled by a better class of people than Michigan in the Territorial period."

Over the platform of the old University Hall at Ann Arbor was a quotation from the ordinance of 1787. I read those words every time when as a student I sat in that dear old place; they have been the text for countless sermons through a century and a half. This is the familiar language:

"Religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged."

There could be no more appropriate place than the campus of one of the oldest and best normal colleges in America to ask a pertinent question: Are the present inhabitants of the old Northwest Territory and, for that matter, of all the rest of America, committed to the truth of the golden words just quoted?

You will forgive me if I press this thought. The early history of Michigan, from its founding, certainly till statehood was achieved, was intimately associated with religion. The Catholic Church came first with the teachings of the Jesuit fathers. Father Gabriel Richard, not only built the Church of St. Ann, from which he directed the affairs of his Detroit parish, but also he had a large part in the civic life of the Territory.

May I say in passing that Father Richard sat in the House of Representatives in Washington, representing the territory of Michigan as its delegate in the Eighteenth Congress, 1823 to 1825. He was the only Catholic priest ever to serve in the Congress, apparently as active and energetic as a legislator, as he always was in his church work. During his term an act was passed for the building of the first of the Territorial roads. This was from the Maumee Rapids to Detroit. The act provided that the road should be opened and made under direction of the President, who might employ the troops of the United States in its construction.

Here we have the origin of the C. C. C. As one of those who wrote the present law, I was utterly ignorant that there was ample precedent for our bill by reason of an act relating to my native land. By providing this original method of constructing public works, Father Richard builded better than he dreamed.

In the absence in all of Michigan of any Protestant minister Father Richard was invited by the Governor to preach in the council house, which he did every Sunday noon. The Father was French to the core and had hard times with his English, but was listened to with great respect. Pretty soon the members of various Protestant denominations organized a church, of which the Reverend John Montieth, a Presbyterian, was the pastor. The Methodists incorporated in 1822 and the Episcopalians a couple of years later. It was not long before Washtenaw and other outlying counties had an abundance of churches. Long before statehood was achieved religion was taught and practiced throughout the Territory.

A writer on crime calls attention to the relationship between nonchurch attendance and criminal practices. He says, wisely and truly, "When the churches are full the jails are empty." He points to 1850 as the high-water mark of religion in America. In that year in all the jails and prisons in the United States there were but 7,000 inmates. Michigan in that year, as in 1837, too, was one best of the States.

Our Michigan ancestors gave us a wonderful example of the practical value of religion, morality, and knowledge. By their acceptance of the teachings of the ordinance of 1787 they bettered their own lives and passed on to us a precious heritage, but one we have wasted, I fear.

How can it happen in a country where billions of dollars have been spent for education, and where millions are spent annually for religious interests and social service, that the jails and prisons are filled with young people? The average age of all our prisoners is 23 years. The largest age group is 19 and the next largest 18, just misguided boys and girls. In the death house of my State tonight are 27 boys, a half dozen of them under 20, awaiting execution.

More than 30,000 juvenile delinquents are found in public institutions of the United States, and almost that number is admitted every year. I refer to children under 18 years of age. The population of prisons and reformatories for persons of all ages is close to 150,000.

Since 1850 the population of the United States has multiplied by five. During the same period the population of the penal institutions has been multiplied by more than 20. What are we to do about this?

The fathers told us. Those wise men who formulated the Ordinance of 1787 possessed the secret: "Schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged." Education, not only in the formal facts of knowledge but, particularly, education for character development—was it not this thought the authors of the Ordinance had in mind?

It is significant that the early educators in Michigan were preachers. The Reverend John Davis Pierce, a graduate of Brown University, who became the first superintendent of public instruction, heads the list as the founder of the public-school system. The Reverend Joseph Estabrook came to Ypsilanti from Clinton and gave fame to the Union Seminary here. Mr. Pierce, called, in affection, "Father Pierce", was, in reality, the father of the State Normal School, founded in 1849, and had been a prime mover for the establishment of the university. Those of us who love that great institution recall the traditions attached to the careers of Tappan and Haven, early presidents of the university, both of them ministers of the Gospel.

It is apparent that those who organized and established this section of the United States took seriously the admonition of the Ordinance—that religion, morality, education, and good government are one and inseparable. Should they not be as closely linked together today?

As I see it, the school, being society's least common denominator, should be entrusted with the character-building program of the community. This is the logical thing to do, unless each individual church shall establish its parochial school, as the Catholics do, and carry on its own program of character and behavior education. The church must assume the whole burden of guidance if it is unwilling to trust it elsewhere.

If the schools were given this social responsibility, the Sunday and Bible schools would not lose their prominent place in the scheme of things. Attractively presented, the stories of the Bible and, for older children, the more advanced Bible-class work, will go on more swimmingly if there is less necessity for the direct appeal for goodness and godliness. The Bible lessons will serve their highest purpose when they parallel the teachings of the day school.

The church need not fear loss of authority in religious matters. It can have its eye on the quality of service rendered by the teachers. Helpful cooperation by the religious leaders will help the schools to do a fine job. Indeed, this forward-looking cooperation with the schools should make for community righteousness and, when universally practiced, for national betterment.

In any event no thoughtful person can escape the conviction that something is wrong with the youth of our country. While in most respects we are infinitely better off than our ancestors were a century ago, in this particular we are four times as bad off as they were. Is this not because we have forgotten the full meaning of those golden words of the Ordinance of 1787, as well as the teachings and practices of our forefathers?

Michigan now begins the second century of its statehood. It stands in the front rank of the States. It has grown rich through the output of automobiles, lumber, minerals, furniture, and other products. In every field of endeavor its citizens have won fame. Through the graduates of its great schools and colleges of learning, it has contributed to the happiness and welfare of other States and of foreign countries. In short, Michigan has a sure place in the affections and respect of all the world.

Has not the State been making such rapid progress that it should now pause to take its bearings? Why not ponder those ideals that made possible the success it has achieved? How can it do better?

We hear much about "yardsticks"; about establishing standards for this and that. I should be proud indeed if dear old Michigan might decide to enter upon a State-wide campaign for good government, crime prevention, law observance, social uplift, better housing, better health, straighter thinking, and clean living. Why not make the "Michigan way" the yardstick for the Nation?

This is a day of subversive teachings, strange doctrines, submergence of self-reliance, and individual initiative. There will be a struggle if America is to be restored to its original position of individual independence. We must not blind ourselves to this problem.

To celebrate the past is fruitless unless the celebration is associated with plans for the future. The chief value of this occasion is the hope that it may inspire us to higher deeds. Our ancestors displayed qualities of heart and mind that are exactly the qualities of heart and mind we need in this generation. May we have strength of character to make their goodness our goodness and their lives our lives.

Let us keep in mind at least the last stanza of the song we have heard tonight—a song familiar to every loyal son and daughter of this fair State:

"Thou rich in wealth that makes a State, Michigan, my Michigan;
Thou great in things that make us great, Michigan, my Michigan;
Our loyal voices sound thy claim upon the golden roll of fame;
Our loyal hands shall write the name of Michigan, my Michigan."

THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed. The calendar under rule VIII is in order.

The bill (S. 766) to provide for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men and former enlisted men of the Navy for the value of personal effects destroyed in a fire at the Radio Direction Finder Station, North Truro, Mass., on December 27, 1934, was announced as first in order.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 62) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a free highway bridge across the Missouri River at or near Atchison, Kans., was announced as next in order.

Mr. BULKLEY. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

DEGREES TO GRADUATES OF NAVAL AND OTHER ACADEMIES

The bill (S. 368) to amend the act of May 25, 1933 (48 Stat. 73), was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I inquire what are the provisions of this bill and what are its purposes? It is a Senate bill to amend the act of May 25, 1933, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE]. There is absolutely no statement on the record to indicate the nature of the bill or its object; and prior to its consideration I suggest that the Senator in charge of the bill discuss it.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, the bill was handed to me, and a report from the committee, prepared by the clerk of the committee, was filed the other day. A similar measure passed the Senate last year. It is merely a provision to give graduates of the Naval, Military, and Coast Guard Academies recognition on a par with that accorded in some fields by reason of degrees granted by universities.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved May 25, 1933 (48 Stat. 73), be amended by changing the period at the end of the act to a colon and by adding the following words: "Provided, That on and after the date of the accrediting of said academies by the Association of American Universities the superintendents of the respective academies may, under such rules and regulations as the respective secretaries may make, confer the degree of bachelor of science upon all living graduates of the said academies."

FEDERAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, now that the attention of the entire Nation is once again fastened on the tragic plight of the citizens of the Ohio River Valley because of devastating floods, some positive and constructive action should be taken immediately to provide against the recurrence of these annual flood disasters, and also financial provision should be made to furnish relief, which at the present time cannot adequately be afforded through private contributions.

During the years the American Red Cross has won a place in the affections of suffering humanity throughout the entire world. Great honor is due to the Red Cross leaders and to the voluntary workers who have given so generously and worked so valiantly to overcome the ravages of earthquake, tornado, drought, fire, and flood. They have done a noble work. The private-welfare policy which is represented by the Red Cross must be kept alive in our daily living, if the wellsprings of our human sympathy are to be conserved. We cannot afford to deliver over to any agency of the Government the entire responsibility for meeting acute human needs, because the principle of private concern over sorrow and loss must be maintained within us. On the other hand, the catastrophe wrought by fire and flood and epidemic in Louisville, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, and adjoining areas is so vast as to preclude any genuinely and completely satisfactory solution through the unaided strength of voluntary contributions, necessary as they are.

Two major flood disasters such as we have now had in less than 12 months have completely wiped out many business firms, to say nothing of the destruction of the homes of tens of thousands. The flood of St. Patrick's Day last year imperiled the life of many firms which were forced to mortgage their future in order to survive. This second flood has swept away their stake in the future and will result in the loss of employment for many workers. All of us, through reading the newspapers and listening in at the radio, have been deeply touched by the present misery of homeless men, women, and little children. We realize that this trouble has come upon these, our fellow citizens, not because of anything which they have done, but rather—be it said to our shame—because of what we have left undone.

The action of the President in placing the present need on the basis of wartime emergency is in keeping with the thought and sentiment of the Nation. Nothing less than governmental intervention is now sufficiently adequate to meet these desperate needs. According to this program a large appropriation proportionate to the need will doubtless be made at once by the Federal Government to assist and follow through the temporary relief which has been extended so nobly by the American Red Cross, W. P. A. workers, C. C. C. boys, and others. Such a Federal appropriation should not in any sense be construed as a substitution for voluntary efforts, but simply as supplementary thereto.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address which I delivered on Federal Responsibility for Flood Control at the convention of the American Society of Civil Engineers held at Pittsburgh October 13, 1936. What I then said relative to Pennsylvania applies quite generally to New England, New York, and to the entire valley of the Ohio River, now the scene of such unspeakably tragic events, occasioned by the failure of all of us to put first in our proceedings the proper protection of the Nation from our uncontrolled and swollen rivers. The erection of 14 reservoirs on the headwaters of the Ohio, delayed because appropriations were withheld, would have been a step toward the prevention of this major catastrophe. What we delayed doing should now be accomplished with all possible speed and skill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Pennsylvania is divided hydrographically into six drainage basins: 1. Delaware basin; 2. Susquehanna basin; 3. Potomac basin; 4. Genesee basin; 5. Erie basin; 6. Ohio basin.

The State has three important river systems: The Delaware in the east, the Susquehanna in the middle, and the Ohio in the west; while smaller areas drain into the Potomac River in the middle south, into Lake Erie in the northwest, and into Lake Ontario through the Genesee River in the middle north section.

Precipitation in Pennsylvania finds its way into the Atlantic Ocean by the Delaware, Susquehanna, and Potomac Rivers through Delaware and Chesapeake Bays; by the Allegheny and Monongahela into the Ohio, and thence into the Mississippi River and Gulf of Mexico; other streams discharge into Lake Erie and Lake Ontario and flow through the St. Lawrence River and Gulf of St. Lawrence into the Atlantic Ocean.

The Susquehanna River drains 46 percent of the State, the Ohio 34.5, and the Delaware 14 percent.

The average annual precipitation for the 46-year period, 1888 to 1933, inclusive, was 42.29 inches. Within this period the maximum recorded yearly rainfall for the State as a whole was 52.67 inches, in 1889, and the minimum 28.82, in 1930.

There are in Pennsylvania about 870 storage reservoirs, either built or building, each with a capacity of 1,000,000 gallons or more. The aggregate drainage area about these reservoirs is 10,900 square miles, or an average drainage area for each reservoir of about 12.5 square miles. The total storage is 238,000,000,000 gallons, or an average of about 275,000,000 gallons for each reservoir.

Two reservoirs, Lake Wallenpaupack, in Pike and Wayne Counties, and the Pymatuning Reservoir, in Crawford County, have a combined capacity of 133,000,000,000 gallons, or 56 percent of the total. Lake Wallenpaupack has the greatest capacity, 70,000,000,000 gallons, although its water surface area of 5,560 acres is but slightly more than one-third of that of the Pymatuning Reservoir, which has an area of 16,400 acres and a capacity of 63,000,000,000 gallons. The drainage area about Lake Wallenpaupack is 227 square miles, while that above Pymatuning is 160 square miles. Disregarding these two reservoirs, which have capacities far exceeding those of any others in the State, the average storage per reservoir is about 120,000,000.

The importance of storage for conserving water and regulating stream flow is usually not fully appreciated nor understood. Without such regulation the dependable amount of water which may be obtained from a stream for water-supply purposes is limited to the minimum flow prevailing during the driest months. Low flows during the warm summer season likewise govern the design of works for the treatment of sewage and trade wastes and determine the sanitary quality of a stream. Water-power developments require dams to create working head and to equalize the stream flow, although the combination of steam and hydroelectric plants materially increases the average rate of stream discharge which may be put to useful work.

In the case of the typical unregulated stream probably less than 5 percent of the total yearly run-off can be said to be useful and dependable for water-supply purposes. It is possible, with storage reservoirs, to increase a stream's usefulness all the way through the range of minimum flow to practically 100 percent of the yearly yield, depending upon the availability of storage reservoir sites and upon the extent to which such sites may be economically developed.

An illustration of the effectiveness of storage may be found in the Pymatuning Reservoir in regulating the flow of the Shenango River at Sharon. During the summer of 1930 the average flow at Sharon before the reservoir was in operation was 8,725,000 gallons per 24 hours. With the reservoir in operation the summer flow is now maintained at not less than 259,000,000 gallons per 24 hours, almost 30 times the low monthly flow of 1930.

It is estimated that the industrial consumption of water in Pennsylvania is 2,500,000,000 gallons daily. Many steel, iron, coal companies, and other industrial plants use large quantities of water and pump directly from the large rivers if conveniently located. At Johnstown the Bethlehem Steel Co. secures its principal supply from large storage reservoirs on tributaries on the Conemaugh River. One, on Hinckstown Run, in Johnstown, has a capacity of 1,124,000,000 gallons; the other, on Quemahoning Creek, the largest water-supply reservoir in the State, holds 12,000,000,000 gallons. Water is also diverted from the Little Conemaugh River, several miles east of the city.

The Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co. and the Lehigh Coal & Navigation Co. have extensive water-supply systems covering the territory in which they operate. The last-named firm is now using clean water for cleaning its coal from a large storage reservoir which is being built by its subsidiary, the Panther Valley Water Co. on Still Creek, Schuylkill County, with a capacity of 2,500,000,000 gallons.

Railroads are also large users of water. The Pennsylvania Railroad supplies its main line principally through controlled incorporated water companies. Included in this system, mainly in the western and central parts of the State, are 17 reservoirs, with a combined storage capacity of 2,600,000,000 gallons. Cement mills, glass plants, tanneries, paper mills, and dye works likewise use considerable quantities of water, and a large number have their own supply system.

Floods are caused by heavy concentrated precipitation, by prolonged and moderate winter and spring rains over large areas, cloudbursts or rains of great intensity and short duration confined to small areas, and by ice gorges. Other important factors are the shape, topography, and geology of the watersheds, the direction or path followed by the storms, the moisture content of the ground, snow, channel encroachments, and the temperature.

About 30 major floods have been recorded in the Delaware in the past 150 years, 35 in the Susquehanna River, and about 50 in the Ohio. Numerous floods localized on the smaller tributaries of these streams are frequently experienced and cause serious flood damage.

The June 1, 1889, flood is the greatest on record in the Susquehanna Basin. Although the storm was concentrated over the watersheds of the Juniata and the West Branch of the Susquehanna River, the central and eastern section of the State suffered unparalleled losses. At Johnstown, Cambria County, 2,142 lives were lost and a large part of the city destroyed.

The Pittsburgh Flood Commission estimated flood toll to the city of Pittsburgh alone, from 1898 to 1908, at $12,000,000, of which $6,500,000 was caused by three floods of 1907 and 1908. The total financial loss along the Allegheny River resulting from the 1913 flood amounted to $720,000. The Shenango and Beaver Valleys damage from this same flood was $2,100,000. In August 1915, in the city of Erie, 34 people were drowned and damage amounting to $2,000,000 resulted from a flood in Mill Creek. In July 1931 Norristown suffered a loss of $1,000,000 as the result of floods in two small creeks traversing the borough. York lost $260,000 in 1884 and $4,360,000 from floods in Codorous Creek in 1933. The cost of floods throughout the East last spring are variously estimated, ranging all the way from $250,000,000 to $500,000,000.

Floods can be controlled by retarding or storage basins, diversion channels, stream-channel improvements, and by the construction of levees and embankments. The logical and proper method of control is to limit the quantity of water reaching the channel to the discharge capacity of the channel by means of retarding or storage basins. Protection generally may best be secured not by any one single method but by a combination of several methods applicable to each other in a limited way.

The construction of 17 storage basins and certain channel improvements has been recommended for flood protection for the city of Pittsburgh. A combination of channel improvement and levee or dike construction has been suggested along the North Branch of the Susquehanna River to protect the Wyoming Valley. A combination of retarding basin, diversion, and channel improvement has been in successful operation for years at Harrisburg.

Flood control by storage-basin retardation has been effected by the completion of the State Pymatuning Reservoir project in western Pennsylvania. While the primary reason for the construction of this reservoir was to provide sufficient water during the dry season for domestic and industrial use in the Shenango and Beaver Valleys, the capacity of the Pymatuning Lake is sufficient to absorb and hold back the flood flow entering it until the waters from the watershed below have passed downstream and the river receded to below flood level. This is shown conclusively by the protection afforded Sharon this last spring, when it is estimated that the reservoir paid for itself by the protection which it gave.

A carefully determined public policy for control and supervision of the streams of the Commonwealth was adopted and put into effect when the 1933 legislature enacted the Dam and Encroachment Act, which made it unlawful for anyone to construct any "water obstruction" without a State permit. Stream channels with adequate areas to discharge maximum expected floods have been conserved and protected. Streams that have been encroached upon and the channels restricted so as to make them inadequate to pass floods without backwater and overflow have not been allowed to become worse, and where possible, serious water obstructions have been modified or removed and the channel improved for flood discharge.

In communities subject to flood damage the State has made a number of surveys and hydraulic studies. Channel lines limited all new construction along both sides of stream channels, and to which existing encroachments are removed from time to time, have been established in Johnstown, York, Manayunk, Sharon, New Castle, Butler, Reading, Norristown, Scranton, and Erie.

The major flood-control problem in Pennsylvania—flood protection for Pittsburgh and the upper Ohio River—was studied under the direction of the Pittsburgh Flood Commission from 1908 to 1912. The Pittsburgh Flood Commission recommended construction of 17 retarding or flood storage reservoirs distributed over the drainage areas of the Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers and supplemented by a river wall at Pittsburgh. The cost was estimated to be about one-half the direct loss that would otherwise be caused by flood damage to the city within a 20-year period. Between 1924 and 1929 United States Army Engineers studied the problem and developed much additional valuable data. In 1933 the commission submitted a new plan, based upon all the essential data developed to date, providing for the construction of 10 storage reservoirs, 7 in the Allegheny watershed and 3 in the Monongahela watershed, at an estimated cost of $57,500,000.

Legislation approved in 1931 authorized the Water and Power Resources Board to study and develop a plan of flood control. Under the act the Board is empowered to proceed on its own authority, or at the request of some outside person or agency, to improve stream channels, build levees and diversion channels, and to construct retarding storage basins for flood control. The Board and its agencies are further empowered to "enter upon, take, appropriate, or injure any land or lands", and damages sustained thereby are to be paid by the Department of Forests and Waters.

It is natural now to ask, if this project be so meritorious, why the country has not heard more about it. The answer is plain. The Allegheny River has portions of its watershed in two States, New York and Pennsylvania. The Monongahela River has its watershed in three States, Maryland, West Virginia, and Pennsylvania. Reservoir sites have been proposed in several States and affect the flow of the stream in each. It is not possible, therefore, for any city, county, or even the State of Pennsylvania to carry out the project in its entirety, or in the comprehensive way necessary, without assuming more responsibility than it rightly should. National control and action are necessary. Heretofore the consideration of the Federal Government has related to the use of large streams for navigation only. The question has been how much would the destruction of the forest, the building of a bridge, encroachment on a stream, or the building of a reservoir affect navigation. Recently, however, we have been building a new consciousness. We now see that flood control is a problem of major national significance and deserves consideration in its own name on its own merit.

This is a national question, because that which is done in one part of the country vitally affects the lives and property of people in other parts. The Ohio River is an important tributary of the Mississippi, and it frequently contributes disasters to the lower river. It also has problems of its own, some of which are of local character and have already been solved, notably at Dayton and Columbus, where one can see the works of construction resulting from thorough study.

The headwaters of the Ohio River are at Pittsburgh, where the Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers unite. At this place there still remains unsolved the most important flood problem in the United States in which a single city is the chief interest concerned and in which the chief reliance for protection so far proposed is an extensive reservoir system.

The first aid from the Federal Government relating to flood control pertained to the Mississippi and came in two acts in 1849 and 1850, the first one applying only to Louisiana and the other to several States. By these acts Congress granted to the several States the swamp and overflowed lands within their borders unfit for cultivation and provided that the proceeds from the sale of the lands must be spent for drainage and for flood protection. Although flood control was the chief actuating cause for the donation of the swamp lands to the States, drainage and reclamation were also important considerations. Although the Swamp and Overflowed Land Acts of 1849 and 1850 could not be considered strictly as flood-control legislation, they did represent the actual beginning of Federal aid for flood control.

Congress passed another act in 1850 that must be given an important place in any consideration of the proolems of the lower Mississippi Valley. This act "directed a topographical and hydrographical survey of the delta of the Mississippi River, with such investigation as might lead to determine the most practical plan for securing it from inundation." The report of Charles Ellet, a civil engineer working for the United States Army Engineers, was the result of this first official study of flood control by the Federal Government. The Ellet report came in 1852 and concluded that the control of the floods on the Mississippi was the Nation's duty and that it was a question that "must be decided by the justice and humanity of the Nation." That statement showed a definite trend in official thinking.

The Civil War halted the movement for flood control, although there were serious floods in 1858, 1859, 1862, 1865, 1867, 1874, and 1882. In 1878, however, the rivers and harbors bill provided $1,000,000 for aiding navigation of the Mississippi. The money was spent by the board on the improvement of the Mississippi River, under the supervision of the United States Army Engineers. The membership of that board was composed of Army Engineers, who favored levees for improving navigation. Thus the Army Engineers came to support those who wanted levees to control floods. The combining of the groups desiring flood control and the groups interested in navigation was very plainly evidenced in the formation and in the debate on the bill creating the Mississippi River Commission in 1879, which put the United States definitely into flood-control work, and which probably stands as the most important piece of flood-control legislation in all of our history.

One of the strongest arguments generally advanced for flood control by the Federal Government is that the United States owns the rivers and has paramount jurisdiction over them. The conclusion that the United States should not permit its property to damage the citizens of any section is the natural outgrowth of ownership. The interstate nature of the flood-control problem has furnished another reason for Federal responsibility.

The gigantic size of the drainage area of the Mississippi River and the small territory drained by the lower valley, a region suffering most from floods, stand out strikingly. This area contains 1,250,000 square miles of territory, which is 41 percent of the area of the United States. The river system spreads across the borders of 31 States, whose combined area equals about two-thirds of that of the whole Nation. This colossal system has 15,000 miles of navigable streams and many thousands of miles of nonnavigable ones. The States that contribute waters to the Mississippi contain half of the people of the entire Nation. The contention that the interstate nature of the problem makes it a national one grows much stronger when it is understood that the areas that suffer most from floods contribute little or none of the water that causes them in the Mississippi Delta.

The suggestion has frequently been made that the cost of flood control should be borne by the various States in proportion to their responsibility for the floods. The difficulties of apportioning costs on such a basis appear insurmountable. The State of North Dakota and the State of Pennsylvania have contributed water, but it would hardly be possible to say how much that water contributed to the floods. The problem becomes very complex when we consider the natural causes of the floods. But it becomes much more so when the acts of States and individuals in regard to drainage and flood control are considered. Works built for flood protection by citizens of one State piled up the water and throw it over the lands of the citizens of another State. The vigilant have often been inundated from the negligence of their neighbors in other States and flood-protective works in one State have inundated property of the citizens of other States, thus creating a demand for Federal control.

Most of our people believe that the Federal Government exists for the practical purposes of protecting the general welfare. In considering the general welfare as related to flood control the humanitarian and the economic phases cannot be entirely separated.

The great sacrifices, suffering, expenses, and property losses of those at the mercy of the floods are all intertwined.

A consideration of Federal responsibility for flood control calls for thought as to the cause of floods. Apparently all agree that the causes have many far-flung ramifications. They extend even to the grazing of cattle and sheep far in the interior, when overgrazing of the lands causes rapid run-off and erosion. Even the direction of a furrow in plowing may affect the amount of water that flows from the surface of the field and amount of sediment it carries. Paved streets and sewage and drainage systems have added an immense amount of water by causing both a heavy and a rapid run-off. Many cities boast of their splendid drainage systems. They do not realize that they have been hastening floods down upon their neighbors. The rapid construction of hard-surfaced and well-drained highways throughout the country has added vast volumes of water to the rapidly draining portion of the rainfall. During recent years many of the highways have been built under Federal specifications and with the aid of Federal funds. Highways, railroads, cities, and industrial and commercial enterprises have aided in piling up the flood waters by encroaching upon the natural beds of streams and making their cross sections too small to carry the large bodies of water. Bridges, embankments, piers, terminals, and even building lots have been constructed in the natural high-water beds of the streams. Such encroachments upon the navigable streams of the country have been made with the express permission of the Federal Government, which thereby became an agent in creating these encroachments, and therefore in causing destructive floods.

However, the influence of the above activities on floods must be relatively small in comparison with that of general deforestation, drainage, and development of the vast valley territory. The people of the interior have drained large areas of swamps and lowlands. They have cleared away the forests and have used their lands in such a way as to cause much erosion and rapid run-off. The hills pour torrents of turbid waters through millions of man-made gullies into the river and fill its bed with mud and overflow its banks. All of which is to understand sympathetically the song of the Negro, which says, "River, go 'way from my door."

The colossal nature of the problem has caused many to feel that its control became the duty of the Federal Government, because no other power had a chance to cope with it. James A. Garfield stated in the House in 1879 that the problem was "too vast for any State to handle; too much for any authority less than that of the Nation itself to manage." When it is realized that the Federal Government, the States, levee boards, cities, counties, railways, and individuals have been building levees, and that 10 agencies in the Departments of War, Interior, Commerce, and Agriculture, to say nothing of the P. W. A. and W. P. A., have had authority in the development and control of streams, it appears rather remarkable that the task has been performed as well as it has been. But a satisfactory public policy can never be developed under these conditions. Each engineer in charge naturally establishes his own problems and proceeds to work them out with little reference to those of his neighbors. This situation has caused a widespread demand for a unified control.

Added to these reasons for Federal responsibility in flood control are important considerations of interstate commerce, including the Postal Service, public health, and national defense. These are so obvious as to require no elucidation.

Federal control has been delayed because the construction of protective works costs large sums of money, because opponents have claimed that it constituted a reclamation project for the benefit of private property, because sectionalism has invested proposed flood-control legislation with objectionable pork-barrel features, because there has been disagreement as to the best methods of handling the problem, and because some have held that it was unconstitutional. None of these arguments have weighed as mightily as the general inertia of the public in forcing the issue. Organized representation of the flood-control cause in Washington, D. C., has not been sufficiently persistent or powerful.

Several strong points for the constitutionality of flood control by the Federal Government have been advanced, but the one that has furnished the bulwark for most of the arguments along that line has been based on the jurisdiction of the Federal Government over interstate commerce. The early participation of the United States in flood control was based entirely on the proposition of improving navigation for the facilitation of commerce on the Mississippi. Congress and the public paid particular attention to the provision in the early appropriation acts that no part of the money should be spent for levees to prevent injury to lands by overflow. This point of view has long prevailed. However, in 1917 proponents of flood control sought to establish the right to control the Mississippi under the commerce clause on a wider basis than that of merely improving navigation. They frankly stated that it was a flood-control measure. They took the position that legislation for the improvement of navigation had been "predicated upon the power of Congress to regulate commerce", for the word "navigation" did not appear in the Constitution but had been written in as a part of the interpretation of the commerce clause. They turned their attention to statements of legal authorities and to court decisions, apparently with satisfactory results.

The general welfare has naturally furnished a strong point for those who sought to prove the constitutionality of flood control by the United States. It has been suggested that the Constitution has been expanded by usage and by interpretation to include many things under the general welfare. To many the Government had as much right to make land suitable for habitation by protecting it against floods as it did to give away the public domain. Congress has been very liberal in voting money to relieve suffering among the victims of floods. Very little question as to the constitutionality of aiding victims of flood disasters has ever been raised. It has been urged, with apparent logic, that appropriations for flood protection means as much for the general welfare as appropriations for the relief of flood sufferers, and that they are, therefore, just as constitutional. Chief Justice Story maintained that if the benefit were general, whether it was located in "one State or several", Congress could appropriate money for it because it was for the general welfare.

The engineering profession deserves recognition because of the support which it has given to the program of Federal flood control. The problem must be regarded fundamentally as one of engineering, and one of the biggest in the world. Engineers have appeared time without number as witnesses before congressional committees. They have often passed resolutions in State and National conventions demanding Federal control. No other group of financially disinterested persons has more generally urged complete control of the floods of the Mississippi and its tributaries. They have given serious thought to plans and methods of control that has resulted in much worthwhile discussion and activity. In their plans and discussions the best engineers of the country have urged the immensity of the task and the necessity of Federal control.

The people of the United States have finally realized that floods will continue to increase in importance. Floods have not become more frequent but they have become more dangerous. As the levees grow higher and higher, due to the drainage of lands adjacent and the confinement of the water and as population continues to increase, floods will become more and more destructive. Property values and the density of population have already reached such a status that no one can contemplate these millions of our fellow citizens living in such jeopardy without adequate and final protection. This is now a national problem and must be considered fully as a Federal responsibility.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the following nominations:

Roswell Magill, of New York, to be Under Secretary of the Treasury, to fill an existing vacancy;

Justin Miller, of North Carolina, to be a member of the Board of Tax Appeals for the unexpired term of 12 years from June 2, 1926, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate, vice Stephen J. McMahon, resigned;

Morrison Shafroth, of Denver, Colo., to be assistant general counsel for the Bureau of Internal Revenue, to fill an existing vacancy (Mr. Shafroth is now serving under temporary commission issued during the recess of the Senate);

William P. Stuart, of Prescott, Ariz., to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Arizona, to fill an existing vacancy; and

Frederick W. Harper and Pendleton J. Slaughter, passed assistant dental surgeons, to be dental surgeons in the Public Health Service from December 1, 1936.

Mr. HARRISON also, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the following nominations:

Forrest Parrott, of Oklahoma, to be State director, National Emergency Council, for Oklahoma, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate;

George H. Combs, Jr., of New York, to be State director, National Emergency Council, for New York, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate, vice Charles J. Hardy; and

Mrs. Anna Dickie Olesen, of Minnesota, to be State director, National Emergency Council, for Minnesota, to which office she was appointed during the last recess of the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON also, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers (who are now serving temporary commissions issued during the last recess of the Senate) for appointment in the Public Health Service.

Mr. GUFFEY, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of James F. Mundy, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., to be collector of internal revenue for the twelfth district of Pennsylvania in place of Leo C. Mundy, resigned. (Mr. James F. Mundy is now serving under temporary commission issued during the last recess of the Senate.)

Mr. BROWN of Michigan, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Eugene S. Leggett, of Michigan, to be acting executive director of the National Emergency Council, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate, vice Lyle T. Alverson.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE MONTAGUE, OF VIRGINIA

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 82

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
January 25, 1937.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. ANDREW J. MONTAGUE, a Representative from the State of Virginia.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the arrangements for the funeral, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That, as a further mark of respect, this House do now adjourn.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I send to the desk resolutions, which I ask to have read and immediately considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 68) were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. ANDREW J. MONTAGUE, late a Representative from the State of Virginia.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 40 minues p. m.) the Senate, under the last resolution, adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, January 27, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 26, 1937

APPOINTMENTS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

MEDICAL CORPS

To be first lieutenants with rank from date of appointment

First Lt. Donald Edward Casad, Medical Corps Reserve.

First Lt. Charles Olin Bruce, Jr., Medical Corps Reserve.

APPOINTMENTS, BY TRANSFER, IN THE REGULAR ARMY

TO QUARTERMASTER CORPS

Lt. Col. Edwin Noel Hardy, Cavalry, with rank from August 1, 1935.

Maj. James Montagu Adamson, Cavalry, with rank from August 1, 1935.

Maj. Crosby Nickerson Elliott, Infantry, with rank from February 1, 1934.

TO FINANCE DEPARTMENT

Maj. Leo Lawrence Gocker, Cavalry, with rank from August 1, 1935.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

To be lieutenant colonel

Maj. John Keliher, Field Artillery, from January 14, 1937.

To be majors

Capt. Kirk Broaddus, Cavalry, from January 14, 1937.

Capt. Newton Gale Bush, Infantry, from January 16, 1937.

MEDICAL CORPS

To be lieutenant colonels

Maj. Edgar Erskine Hume, Medical Corps, from January 14, 1937.

Maj. Walcott Denison, Medical Corps, from January 16, 1937.

Maj. James Earle Ash, Medical Corps, from January 17, 1937, subject to examination required by law.

Maj. Bascom Lee Wilson, Medical Corps, from January 19, 1937.

Maj. Henry Louis Krafft, Medical Corps, from January 25, 1937.

Maj. Paul Ramsey Hawley, Medical Corps, from January 26, 1937.

Maj. John Dibble, Medical Corps, from January 27, 1937.

Maj. George Clark Dunham, Medical Corps, from January 28, 1937.

Maj. Robert Burns Hill, Medical Corps, from January 31, 1937.

To be major

Capt. Stanley William Matthews, Medical Corps, from January 17, 1937.

CHAPLAIN

To be chaplain with the rank of lieutenant colonel

Chaplain (Maj.) Julius Joseph Babst, United States Army, from January 19, 1937.

APPOINTMENT IN THE NATIONAL GUARD OF THE UNITED STATES

GENERAL OFFICER

Brig. Gen. John Van Bokkelen Metts, Adjutant General's Department, North Carolina National Guard, to be brigadier general, Adjutant General's Department, National Guard of the United States.

POSTMASTERS

ALABAMA

Helen Perry to be postmaster at Chrichton, Ala., in place of P. B. Holland. Incumbent's commission expired March 2, 1933.

Joseph A. Russell to be postmaster at Dawson, Ala. Office became Presidential July 1, 1936.

Lucille C. Land to be postmaster at Gilbertown, Ala. Office became Presidential July 1, 1935.

Newton R. Shockley to be postmaster at Pell City, Ala., in place of J. L. Ragland. Incumbent's commission expired February 9, 1936.

Catherine A. Cox to be postmaster at Spring Hill, Ala., in place of A. J. Cox, resigned.

Emmett I. Cox to be postmaster at Springville, Ala., in place of S. J. Tucker. Incumbent's commission expired May 19, 1936.

ARKANSAS

Isaac N. Anglen, Jr., to be postmaster at Mountainburg, Ark. Office became Presidential July 1, 1936.

Gus A. McMillan to be postmaster at Sheridan, Ark., in place of G. M. Veazey, resigned.

CALIFORNIA

Bertie Poore to be postmaster at Armona, Calif., in place of Belle Hicks. Incumbent's commission expired April 27, 1936.

Ross Thurman Kemper to be postmaster at Arroyo Grande, Calif., in place of C. T. Steele. Incumbent's commission expired January 9, 1936.

Bernard Fallon to be postmaster at Downey, Calif., in place of J. G. Dennert, removed.

Charles A. Beguhl to be postmaster at Goleta, Calif., in place of M. D. Cunningham. Incumbent's commission expired February 9, 1936.

Madge M. Kearns to be postmaster at Sunland, Calif., in place of M. E. Catterall. Incumbent's commission expired January 9, 1936.

Nellie A. Britten to be postmaster at Three Rivers, Calif. Office became Presidential July 1, 1935.

Henrietta M. Voltz to be postmaster at Verdugo City, Calif., in place of Mathilda Busch. Incumbent's commission expired January 9, 1936.

Maude A. Northey to be postmaster at Williams, Calif., in place of V. D. Linebaugh, resigned.

COLORADO

Clarence A. Reynolds to be postmaster at Swink, Colo., in place of H. M. Newkirk. Incumbent's commission expired April 27, 1936.

CONNECTICUT

Isaac Harry Bartram to be postmaster at Sharon, Conn., in place of T. B. McDonald. Incumbent's commission expired January 9, 1936.

Audore O. Barnaby to be postmaster at Simsbury, Conn., in place of H. W. Walker. Incumbent's commission expired May 23, 1936.

FLORIDA

Claude Dougar Boring to be postmaster at Arcadia, Fla., in place of C. J. Carlton. Incumbent's commission expired March 28, 1936.

Mansell A. Orchard to be postmaster at Auburndale, Fla., in place of R. C. Allen. Incumbent's commission expired March 28, 1936.

Margaret Charnock Young to be postmaster at Boca Raton, Fla. Office became Presidential July 1, 1930.

Asa C. Blount to be postmaster at Chattahoochee, Fla., in place of W. C. Gholson. Incumbent's commission expired March 28, 1936.

Marie M. Stinson to be postmaster at De Funiak Springs, Fla., in place of C. C. Stinson, deceased.

Lou C. Pritchard to be postmaster at White Springs, Fla., in place of J. A. Heath, resigned.

Lola D. Gall to be postmaster at Zephyrhills, Fla., in place of M. M. Maner. Incumbent's commission expired December 21, 1930.

GEORGIA

Orian A. Moorhead to be postmaster at Greensboro, Ga., in place of C. H. Crumbley. Incumbent's commission expired January 7, 1936.

Roy B. Allen to be postmaster at Lenox, Ga., in place of E. M. Lindsey, removed.

John T. Miller to be postmaster at Maysville, Ga., in place of H. R. Hancock, transferred.

Emmett Monroe Davis to be postmaster at Vidalia, Ga., in place of N. O. Carter. Incumbent's commission expired January 12, 1936.

HAWAII

Timothy Wong to be postmaster at Waipahu, Hawaii, in place of L. P. Lino. Incumbent's commission expired January 7, 1936.

IDAHO

Harold A. Haymond to be postmaster at Genesee, Idaho, in place of E. M. Alexander. Incumbent's commission expired June 1, 1936.

ILLINOIS

James Arthur Edwards to be postmaster at Amboy, Ill., in place of P. F. Reilly, removed.

Audre A. Beggin to be postmaster at Apple River, Ill., in place of F. W. Craig. Incumbent's commission expired April 27, 1936.

Leslie B. Paddock to be postmaster at Barrington, Ill., in place of E. J. Langendorf, resigned.

William W. McIntire to be postmaster at Belvidere, Ill., in place of E. O. Andrews. Incumbent's commission expired April 27, 1936. (Removed without prejudice.)

Albert E. Born, Jr., to be postmaster at Bensenville, Ill., in place of G. H. Warnecke. Incumbent's commission expired February 14, 1935.

Kenneth Henkhaus to be postmaster at Bethalto, Ill. Office became Presidential July 1, 1936.

Kathryn Mill to be postmaster at Coal City, Ill., in place of T. F. Wharrie. Incumbent's commission expired February 9, 1936.

Sylvester J. Kiley to be postmaster at Cullom, Ill., in place of F. E. Flessner. Incumbent's commisison expired January 28, 1936.

Charles William Karcher to be postmaster at Dahlgren, Ill., in place of C. C. Porter. Incumbent's commisison expired February 9, 1936.

Maurice Rockwell to be postmaster at Danvers, Ill., in place of G. A. Kraus. Incumbent's commission expired January 28, 1936.

Daniel W. Waller to be postmaster at Durand, Ill., in place of M. B. Dolan, deceased.

Norbert C. Knapp to be postmaster at Glen Ellyn, Ill., in place of R. O. Benson. Incumbent's commission expired June 1, 1936.

Harry F. DuQuoin to be postmaster at Greenview, Ill., in place of E. A. Lundberg. Incumbent's commission expired June 1, 1936.

Lena Marie Forcht to be postmaster at Hennepin, Ill., in place of O. G. Woods. Incumbent's commission expired May 10, 1936.

Rudolph F. Maurer to be postmaster at Hopedale, Ill., in place of I. R. Stout. Incumbent's commission expired February 9, 1936.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JANUARY 26, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Merciful God, our Father, as each day brings its duties and responsibilities help us to discharge them in accordance with Thy will and purpose. We praise Thee that behind the poorest soul that trembles in poverty, sickness, or despair on the face of the earth stands the heart of our everlasting Father. We beseech Thee to raise the brotherhood of common love. Be Thou, blessed Lord, with the smitten, the cast down, and especially with those who are stripped of everything that makes life desirable through calamities they cannot understand. Hear their soul's cry, brighten their midnight of affliction, and take all weary ones unto Thine arms. Help us all to profit by the past and to live nobly for the present. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBER

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

KINGSTON, N. Y., January 23, 1937.

Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In accordance with your designation of me, pursuant to House Resolution 39, Seventy-fifth Congress, adopted by the House of Representatives, to administer the oath of office to Representative-elect PHILIP ARNOLD GOODWIN, of the Twenty-seventh District of New York. I have the honor to report that on the 23d day of January 1937 at the city of Coxsackie, Greene County, State of New York, I administered the oath of office to Mr. GOODWIN, form prescribed by section 1757 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, being the form of oath administered to Members of the House of Representatives, to which Mr. GOODWIN subscribed.

I have the honor to be,

Yours respectfully,

FREDERICK G. TRAVER,
County Judge, Ulster County, N. Y.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 84

Whereas PHILIP ARNOLD GOODWIN, a Representative from the State of New York, from the Twenty-seventh District thereof, has been unable from sickness to appear in person to be sworn as a Member of this House, but has sworn to and subscribed the oath of office before Hon. Frederick G. Traver, county judge of Ulster County, N. Y., authorized by resolution of this House to administer the oath, and the said oath of office has been presented in his behalf to the House, and there being no contest or question as to his election: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the said oath be accepted and received by the House as the oath of office of the said PHILIP ARNOLD GOODWIN as a Member of this House.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of Labor, together with a memorandum for use in connection with the Rogers resolution on the extent of employment of children under 18 years of age.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes tomorrow after the reading of the Journal and the disposal of matters on the desk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to take up with you what, to my way of thinking, are matters that ought to concern every Member of this body and every citizen of this country.

You will recall that about 2 years ago the House authorized an investigation by what was known as the Committee on Un-American Activities, of which the Honorable JOHN MCCORMACK, of Massachusetts, was chairman and I was vice chairman. All we had then was about 6 months within which to make an investigation throughout the country. We found groups and organizations that were so subversive in their character and so un-American that to our way of thinking they were a load upon the American people. We filed our report, and the committee did not get any further time and did not ask for any further time to continue its investigation, because it was practically the end of that Congress.

Since that time many things have happened. We have had the Black Legion in Detroit. The same Black Legion has been organized in about 12 States of the country. We have had black-hooded wings and white-hooded wings and brown shirts and blue shirts and dirty shirts spreading throughout this country of ours, making the American people believe they are so patriotic that in some instances they have contributed money to slaughter Americans because of these hooded wings in this country.

During the last campaign the same hooded men and women who are unpatriotic sent out a hate campaign against the President and other officials of the Government. They have appeared in their uniforms throughout the Nation slaughtering men and women who are loyal Americans. In the last year and a half or 2 years we have had all forms of organizations which, to my way of thinking and, I am sure, to yours also, have been un-American.

When is the Congress going to put the searchlight of public opinion upon them? Can a country go on without determining who are the friends of America and who are the enemies of America? We have had all sorts of propaganda directed from within and from without the United States. Uncle Sam has been so friendly that he has allowed almost everybody to hatch any kind of plot he may want in this country. You could not do in any other country in the world what you can do here in this respect.

When 4 years ago, on January 30, Adolf Hitler became Chancellor of Germany, a chill ran through the backs of all friends of liberty and democracy; it meant the death of liberalism in a country which saw fit to associate with the progressive democracies of Europe since the armistice was signed in 1918. We had gone to war to make the world "safe for democracy", and we were definitely assured that with the passing of the Russian Czar, the Austrian Emperor, and the German Kaiser a new dawn would rise for the suppressed peoples of Europe. And for a while after this event things seemed to point to a betterment of the standard of the common man in the former European autocracies, and it looked as though the world was coming to a new era of good feeling and liberalism.

Unfortunately, this condition of affairs was not to continue. One by one the democratic countries of the world were shedding their liberal constitutions and becoming a prey to dictatorships and oppression. In Russia a liberal government was overthrown by the forces of the Bolsheviki, who established what they chose to call a dictatorship of the proletariat, denying freedom to most of its citizens, and engaging in the ruthless suppression of free speech, free press, and free public assembly. A little later in Italy, under the guise of destroying communism, which was making headway in that country, a dictatorship was established under the name of fascism, which again suppressed the freedom of the Italian people, again suppressed the freedom of speech, of the press and public assembly. For a little while a Fascist dictatorship was also established in Spain. In Turkey a sort of "benevolent" fascism was introduced, while in other smaller countries there have been rumblings of incipient dictatorships which have not fully come to fruition for some reason or other. But democracy as we understand it was definitely dispensed with. None of the European countries saw fit to continue under constitutions modeled after ours, making their people supreme, and defining the powers of government as we are accustomed to define ours. European traditions were decidedly against democracy.

Normally, of course, it would make no difference to us what form of government the European countries saw fit to adopt for themselves. After all, when we established the American Commonwealth there were very few democracies in this world. France had not yet established its first Republic, and the only constitution of a European country which was at all comparable to ours was the constitution of the Swiss Confederation. So, of course, it makes no difference to us how European countries choose to govern themselves. If they like dictatorships, if they enjoy being suppressed in their most essential human rights, why, of course, that is their privilege. We have no concern with them, and we surely will not go to war to help them to alter conditions or maintain their existing organizations.

But while we disclaim all interest in their doings, and all interest in the form of government which European countries choose for themselves, we cannot lose sight of the fact that where a European country becomes a menace to our own people it is our duty to point out the fact to our public and take such measures as will protect our own people and our own democracy. It has become more and more apparent that the present rulers of Germany are stimulating within their borders those warlike activities which invariably lead a nation to a conflict with another. If the public of a particular country is being imbued with a militaristic and aggressively offensive spirit of combat, sooner or later a spark will fly which will ignite a conflagration. And it is on this danger and menace to our people that I see fit to address you today, pointing out in no unmistakable terms how dangerous Germany's course is to the people of the world.

Germany has practically adopted a new religion. This religion contains but two dogmas: The first, hatred of religion, and the second, love of war. These two dogmas apparently go hand in hand, "and you cannot be a good German citizen today", as this term is understood by the master of Germany, unless you disclaim all religion and exalt the spirit of war.

In a sermon preached in one of the best-known Presbyterian churches in New York, the Fifth Avenue Church, the pastor, describing the present-day relation of church and state in Germany, has this to say:

> Little did we think at the beginning of the twentieth century that the relations of church and state would become one of the paramount issues of the century. This question was settled for Christians 1,900 years ago, when Jesus said: "Render, therefore, unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's." These words acknowledge the fact that the state possesses certain rights over its citizens, but they also make it clear that there are bounds beyond which the state must not go in the coercion of Christian conscience. The principle enunciated by the Founder of Christianity denies the right of a totalitarian state to render the Christian church impotent by making it merely the mouthpiece of dictatorial leaders. That is the religious issue which is paramount in Germany today.
> It has arisen very largely because of the tremendous hostility manifested toward Jews in the 25-point program of the Nazi Party. A 3-point program is being forced today on German Christianity: First, the test of Aryan blood applied to all who would qualify for membership or office in the Christian church; secondly, an attempt to suppress completely the Old Testament and to substitute for it Nordic myths and legends; and, thirdly, an attempt to alter the Christian conception of the universal fatherhood of God to that of God as father of the Aryan race, and especially the German section of it.
> The Christian church can never consent to the abolition of the Old Testament. That would mean the destruction of the foundations of Christianity, for it is inseparable from the glorious religious heritage of the prophets, lawgivers, and seers of the Hebrew race. If we were to attempt to divorce Christianity from the Old Testament revelation, it would mean that we would have to tear the name of Jesus from the Bible, for He was a first-century Jew.

The fight against the churches is one of the main theses of the German creed of today, and hand in hand with it goes the exaltation of war and all that it means.

Some months ago one of the members of Hitler's Cabinet, General Goering, startled the world by announcing that Germany was going to produce more and more cannon and more and more bullets, and that the country would prefer "bullets to butter." He said, "Let the Germans tighten their belts and eat less butter", but do not let them deny themselves the privilege of manufacturing more guns and more armaments. This is the principal point in the new German religion. "By all means let us have armaments, by all means let us have the biggest military establishment in the world."

In yesterday's New York Times there is a very illuminating article showing how Germany has been able to profit economically by selling armaments to other countries. I am reading from the article:

> Germany has now entered the international armament trade in a big way. She has just extended to Greece a loan of $23,000,000 which, the Greek Government announced, is going to be used in rearmament. This means that Greece is going to buy German war materials to a considerable extent.
>
> Germany has also recently sold 36 bombers and 5 experimental planes, presumably also bombers, to Sweden at a total purchase price of 4,500,000 marks. Germany delivered to Switzerland only yesterday three experimental military planes and expects to sell her more. All this is a reversal of recent practice.
> Until a few months ago the European armament trade was dominated by the Schneider-Creuzot and the British Vickers-Armstrongs interests. Schneider-Creuzot is a French concern, but it also controls the great Skoda plant in Czechoslovakia. Krupp and other German armament firms have been out of the international market. The surprising speed and efficiency of German rearmament, however, seems to have again attracted the attention of military circles to German concerns. The attraction has been enhanced by the circumstance that the others, and Schneider-Creuzot especially, during their monopoly of the continental trade made a point of never delivering to their foreign customers their special and best products.
> Whatever the reason, German armament exports have leaped considerably. The precise extent of the increase is difficult to state in figures because such exports are not specifically set forth in German official reports, but are usually listed as "iron goods" or "machines." There are, however, figures that bring out strikingly the increase in these categories.

Exports of explosives, munitions, and combustibles increased in value from 11,649,000 marks during the first 11 months of 1935 to 20,046,000 in the same period of last year. Exports of "machines" increased from 180,339,000 marks to 220,785,000; of motor cars and airplanes, from 71,703,000 marks to 109,207,000; of "other iron goods" from 232,857,000 to 276,910,000 marks.

Germany, therefore, apparently feels that she can improve her economic condition by becoming the world's chief dealer in armaments. And it is a well-known fact that if armaments are sold by Germany that they will necessarily call for the assistance of German experts in their operation and German officials in their management. We cannot, therefore, sit by complacently and let Germany become the dominating factor in supplying all Europe with military weapons and organizing Europe in a military way.

From the same issue of the New York Times we learn that Germany has gone into a campaign against democracies generally, and proclaiming itself the champion of the world against the so-called Communists. Germany has taken the position that all democracies are breeding places of bolshevism. I am quoting from that article:

Most democracies are accused of being breeding places of bolshevism. The press puts in this class the United States, where strikes are represented as the work of Bolshevist agents led by a man named Lewis. His name, when pronounced in the German fashion, sounds rather Jewish to German ears.

John Bull is represented as sitting in front of a spacious home complacently watching the reds set the world afire and chiding those alert watchmen who are turning in a fire alarm. Naturally the Spanish Government comes in for almost as much denunciation as the Russian Government, but there is a country closer to home that is a special target in the new campaign—Czechoslovakia.

Formerly Czechoslovakia was reproached for "oppressing" the German minority, and this complaint still is voiced occasionally by the Foreign Office organ, the Diplomatische Korrespondenz. But in the press generally this grievance has virtually disappeared and has been replaced by charges that Czechoslovakia is rapidly turning Bolshevist and has already become "an airplane carrier for the Soviet air fleet." The Czechoslovak press is accused of being too friendly to Soviet Russia, Czechoslovak airports are represented as having been built for Soviet Russia, and the Czechoslovak Army and war industry are represented as collaborating with Soviet experts.

The Czechoslovak offer to have military attachés inspect her airports to disprove the German charges was accepted by the British but rejected by the Germans on the ground that all airports looked alike, although a similar inspection offered in Spanish Morocco was hailed by Germany as a final refutation of French charges of German infiltration.

In a front-page editorial the Voelkischer Beobachter, Chancellor Adolf Hitler's own newspaper, defiantly insists that "military collaboration between Prague and Moscow represents a Bolshevist threat to Central Europe, and Czechoslovak airports remain Soviet Russian airports as well so long as the military pact providing for them exists."

The report which we rendered in February 1935 is history, and I shall not burden you at this time with the details of the disclosures contained therein. But remember that the statement that Nazi leaders have made to the effect that nazism is not for export and is purely a German product is untrue. Nazi agents are at work in all countries of the world. They are very active in Spain, where they are trying to "save" that country, as they say, from communism. They are active in other places under the guise of fighting communism. For, remember, our position as members of a democratic commonwealth is that fascism and communism are twin brothers of oppression and antidemocracy, but the position taken by Fascist leaders apparently ranks us with communism on the theory that democracies are a breeding ground for communism.

We must destroy the poison of communism just as we are destroying the poison of fascism. The two are equally obnoxious to our democratic form of government, which guarantees to the humblest citizen the right of free speech, free press, and a free assembly; and we must not permit Fascist agents to tell us how to run our democratic Commonwealth. The danger of war forces us to go into a program of military expenditures, and, much as we dislike it, we must keep our Military Establishment in top-notch condition, lest the furore of war overwhelm our democracy and destroy our institutions.

The threat of war makes it necessary for us to marshal our resources in such a way that it will protect our own country if war should break out anywhere in Europe. We must not be dependent upon Europe's products for our living, and we must not permit anything in the world to violate our traditional neutrality if Europe sees fit to unleash the terror of war.

There are at present but three democracies which are able to stem the tide of war—Great Britain, France, and the United States. A few smaller countries can be depended upon to stay in the democratic group and keep away from war. These are the Scandinavian countries, Sweden, Denmark, and Norway, little Finland, Switzerland, Belgium, Holland, and Czechoslovakia. Within these limits we must all work for the cause of peace; but whether we succeed or not, we must not permit our American neutrality to be engulfed in the sanguinary conflict which threatens to destroy our civilization.

It is my impression, and I am sure it is your impression, and, in fact, I know we are now a neutral country. We want to be at peace with the world, but the foreign spies who come here do not allow us to be neutral, and I am referring now to a most serious problem.

There is a war in Spain. Some people have gone to fight for Spain. We find amongst them some Americans and some aliens. The Americans, although they go to fight for another country when their own country is neutral, when they get in trouble on the other side, the first thing they do is to ask the State Department for help, and the second thing is to ask the Government to save an American citizen from being shot the next morning. This may not be so bad; at least, they do not do that on a big scale.

But let me call the attention of the House to something that is going on now in the United States. The German Government, the Nazi Government, is going to issue more propaganda to try to mold public opinion in the United States.

Did you know, my friends, that they have sent out 200,000, and perhaps a million, registration blanks for men of German blood in this country to join the forces of Germany in the present or for future wars?

Can you imagine a friendly government trying to induce American citizens of this country by making and sending out questionnaires as to whether they are ready to fight for the fatherland?

When these Americans refuse to subscribe to that form of treachery they are told by the consul that "some day you will be sorry for that; you may have relatives in Germany and it will not be so good for them."

At first I did not want to believe it. And I did not think any peaceful country would dare to come into this country and distribute such registration questionnaires. I refused to believe they would send out such a registration blank for service in war until evidence was brought to me which convinced me, and which will convince you, that this Congress must wake up and throw the searchlight on this activity.

I hold in my hand the registration certificate that is being distributed to every German they can lay their hands on. It contains about 20 questions, and irrespective of the fact that you are a citizen of the United States the consul will tell you that Hitler said if you have any German blood in you, irrespective of the fact of birth in the United States, you owe a debt to the fatherland. It is their belief that once a German always a German, irrespective of where you were born.

I am going to put in the record this questionnaire, which is printed in Berlin and distributed among the American Germans—Americans of German birth and to native American citizens of German ancestry.

We have almost 19,000,000 Germans in this country, and I say that every loyal and true German-American resents this activity.

The Nazi agitators come here to undermine the American Government and to disturb Americans of German ancestry.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print, as a part of my remarks, this registration certificate that is being distributed, the translation having been made in the Library of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS,

Mr. DICKSTEIN. My friends, you might say that this is a lot of "hooey". Suppose I tell you that you have at least now from 10,000 to 20,000 Germans who are drilling in this country in German uniform with a German outfit, preparing men to be in readiness for any emergency that might come up in any future war between Germany and this or any other country, and she has the key position of Europe.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. Are those people the gentleman speaks of naturalized citizens, who are drilling in German uniforms, or are they Germans?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. They are naturalized citizens, and native-born citizens.

Mr. MOTT. Both of them?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes; and some aliens.

Mr. MOTT. Does the gentleman not think that a good cure for that situation would be to shut those aliens out altogether for a period of years?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The majority of them are native-born and naturalized citizens; you cannot shut them out.

Mr. MOTT. I understand the gentleman to say that there are naturalized citizens in this country who are drilling in German uniforms?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is right. You have to give them some protection. These American citizens, whether naturalized or born here, are being hounded by German spies and German consuls and German representatives in this country. I shall give you a better one than that. They get a letter to come to the German Embassy or consul. They do not know what it is all about. The first thing they know there is told a story that it looks like a little war, and the German Government wants every man who will volunteer, so-called, for service of Germany; and they go as far as to tell American citizens that even their railway and boat fare will be paid—and that is in this certificate—to Germany and back here, if they ever do come back. These people are afraid to say no, because some of them have their mothers and fathers and brothers and sisters in Germany, and they are threatened that if they do not subscribe to this application blank something might happen; and you all know what is happening in Germany. Germany has gone back thousands of years into the black ages of the history of the world.

After the man gets the questionnaire he is given a calendar which shows war material and where they may be assigned and how they will look and how they will drill. These pamphlets are coming in by the hundreds of thousands.

They have even gone as far as creating a youth army of children, who were born in this country, and there are now almost close to 6,000 of them. Here is a photograph that I was able to get of a meeting in New York with the swastika and the German uniforms, men who have practically signed this questionnaire for draft under threat and compulsion. I do not want anyone to doubt my word the slightest, because I have every piece of document and material to substantiate what I have said.

What are we doing. What is Congress doing and what is Uncle Sam doing? Why should any foreign group be permitted to wear foreign uniforms and drill in public here? Why should we not have some law that there shall be only one uniform in this America and that the uniform of the United States Army or Navy? Why should we permit foreigners, aliens, naturalized or native-born citizens, who have more sympathy for the so-called fatherland than for America, to so express their sympathy in this country? Why should not this Congress create a committee and give it the ample power and funds to look after this terrible activity that is going on at the present time?

You have your Spanish situation, you have your Mussolini, and it will be recalled that during the Ethiopian war the Italians asked for volunteers; but the German Government is more brazen. They do not want volunteers. They are practically giving you a questionnaire and saying, "Sign this." Wait until you read that questionnaire and registration certificate.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. I hope that if a committee is ordered by the House that the House will be more generous to it than it was to a committee of which I was the chairman and of which my distinguished friend from New York was the vice chairman. We had to investigate all un-American activities, and they gave us the magnificent sum of $30,000. We had no place where we could go to ask for books. Every investigation that we made had to be the result of anonymous communications that we received, and the committee of which I was chairman was not acting upon anonymous communications, but we had to use them as a basis of our own independent investigation. What the gentleman from New York says about the special committee is absolutely correct. Nazi officials of Germany sent a leader to this country, and they had their own official newspaper and orders came from Berlin to German industry in this country to contribute to that newspaper, the purpose of which was to array Americans against America, in violation of the spirit of our institutions, in violation of the Constitution of the United States, and in direct violation of international law. If what the gentleman says on this occasion is true, if that questionnaire has been sent over, it is a direct violation of international law and the State Department has now been given notice, and the State Department should act immediately to investigate the information which the gentleman from New York has disclosed to the House.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman indicate to the House, if he can, where these men are drilling in this country in German uniforms?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. They are in Illinois; mostly in New York, Pennsylvania, Michigan, and I could name other places.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Has the gentleman seen any of those?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Here is a photograph with a little American flag as big as a postage stamp and a dozen swastika flags all around it, and at the opening of the meeting they more or less take allegiance again to the so-called Hitler government.

Mr. MOTT. May I inquire whether or not the gentleman has a bill introduced in Congress undertaking to remedy the situation?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have no bill, but I will have a resolution before this House very soon.

Mr. MOTT. I understand that the investigation, at least partially, has been made.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Partially, yes.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman has set forth facts in his remarks which would warrant the Congress in passing a bill to take care of that situation, I believe, without any further investigation. Since the gentleman knows perhaps more about it than anyone else in the House, I think he should introduce a bill and ask for its consideration.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. In answer to my colleague [Mr. McCORMACK] all the State Department can do is to write to Ambassador Luther, who, in my own honest opinion, is not here as an ambassador of good will, but is here just to do a certain duty to his government which is diametrically opposed to our form of government, and is interfering with our peaceful rights as a sovereign nation.

Now, you cannot do that. You must throw out the congressional searchlight not only in the direction of this terrible situation, but also on 150 subversive organizations in this country which I will name for you soon; whether they be black-hooded or white-hooded, left-wings or right-wings, Communist or Fascist, or anything else.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. The special committee recommended two bills as committee bills. We also investigated some, and we made some remarkable disclosures about some of the efforts being made in this country. For example, we showed the Communist Union in New York was blackjacking employers and making them pay 3 percent of their pay roll, and, also, the employees in the union maintained a strong-arm squad.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 10 additional minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is the first time I have ever objected in my life to a Member's addressing the House; but the deficiency bill must be passed today, because the Senate will only have 6 days in which to pass it before the money for relief is entirely gone.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of the deficiency bill, I modify my request and will ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, with the understanding that there will be no further time granted until the deficiency bill is passed, I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts that the gentleman from New York may proceed for 5 additional minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. We made two recommendations, one making it a crime for anyone to knowingly, willfully advocate the overthrow of the Government by force and violence.

I introduced the other bill, which has been referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. That bill would compel the paid propagandists of foreign countries or any foreign agency to register with the Department of State, disclosing their employer and the terms of their employment. That would not only apply to those who are engaged in propaganda subversive to our country but to anybody representing a foreign government in the sale of bonds or in any transaction. The American people are entitled, in my opinion, to receive that information. In any event, those for propaganda purposes detrimental to and subversive to our institutions would not register; and if detected, they would be subject to the penalty provided in that act.

Under constitutional government and having in mind the right of freedom of speech, to which we all subscribe, in my opinion and in the opinion of the committee, that was the extent to which we could go.

I hope that answers in part the gentleman's question.

Mr. MOTT. If the gentleman will permit me, it does not.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I show here an exhibit that has been sent in to the so-called American young boys by a new group that has been organized, auxiliary to the so-called Nazi Party in this country. These children are taken from the schools and sent to a camp and are taught militarism right in the State of New Jersey. Those little boys with their fathers and their mothers are sent there. An oath of allegiance to the United States means nothing to them.

Now, my friends, something has to be done about it. We cannot sit here and let the Nazis or the Fascists or the Communists or advocates of any other "ism" come to our shores and create a disturbance and fear among our own people. This has to be a country of one people, one flag, one land. We cannot allow any subversive "isms", whether from the right or the left, in this country. I appeal to the Members of this House that when the proper time comes you will support the resolution and give us the widest power possible to put the searchlight on these "isms", and to eradicate all of them that are spreading over this country. I say there are over a hundred or more organizations of that kind. Then you will be doing something for America. You will be doing something for our people. These "isms" are a menace to our flag and our Constitution. They have no place in this country.

Mr. Speaker, I say to you I have positive evidence of this continuing almost daily, and the police are helpless. There is nothing that can be done until we throw the searchlight on them and send them back where they belong and punish these so-called Nazis who claim to be 110 percent Americans and yet contribute money to the black robe or to the white robe or to the Nazi Party or any other "ism." [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

BOARD OF VISITORS TO THE UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of title 34, section 1081, United States Code, the Chair appoints as members of the Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy the following Members of the House of Representatives: Mr. BLAND, Mr. DOCKWEILER, Mr. MCFARLANE, Mr. EATON, and Mr. MAAS.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1937

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3587) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes; and pending that, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make an agreement as to time with the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Would 2 hours, divided equally, be satisfactory to the gentleman?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is satisfactory.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that for the consideration of the bill H. R. 3587 general debate be limited to 2 hours, to be confined to the bill, one-half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from New York and the other half by myself.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask the gentleman from Texas whether or not it is the intention of the chairman of the committee to provide for liberal debate under the 5-minute rule; and whether or not when it comes to the provision on page 3 appropriating money for relief ample time will be allowed for proper discussion and the offering of amendments and their consideration, with reference to that particular paragraph of the bill?

Mr. BUCHANAN. If today will afford ample time, then the gentleman will have ample time; but this bill must be passed today.

Mr. BOILEAU. I respect the gentleman's wishes in that regard. I would remind him, however, that there is a long evening ahead of us. We do not have to get through by 4 or 4:30. I hope the gentleman will give the Members assurance now that when that section is reached those who believe there should be an increase in that appropriation will have adequate opportunity to discuss their views and sufficient time in which to discuss the section intelligently.

Mr. BUCHANAN. We have never prevented proper deliberation on a bill when we had time to give to it, when there was not an emergency demanding the passage of the bill. It must be remembered that this bill has got to go to the Senate, that the Senate will have to refer the bill to their committee, that their committee will have to consider it and report it back to the Senate, and the Senate will have to pass it. All this must be done in 6 days.

Mr. BOILEAU. With only 2 hours allowed for general debate, it would seem we should have ample time under the 5-minute rule properly to express our views and offer amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I object, unless we have assurance that we are going to have adequate time in which to discuss it.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is, is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3587) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, with Mr. MCCORMACK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I will not take the time to discuss several deficiencies recommended in this bill for expenditure by the regular departments. When we come to the 5-minute rule, sufficient explanation can be made of them, if desired. I merely state that this bill carries approximately $900,000,000, of which $110,000,000 is for expenditures other than relief. Ninety-five million dollars of this latter amount is for the Civilian Conservation Corps. There is, therefore, only about $15,000,000 for other purposes, and these can be explained under the 5-minute rule.

I shall now address myself to the question of recovery and relief, and in doing so I will give you a bird's-eye picture of the entire situation from the beginning. In the fiscal year 1933 we expended for recovery and relief $1,285,000,000. I shall deal only in round figures. In the fiscal year 1934, during which year we made the maximum expenditure, we spent $3,993,000,000. In the fiscal year 1935 we expended $3,506,000,000, or $487,000,000 less than we expended in 1934. This is making some progress toward economy. In the fiscal year 1936 we expended $3,263,000,000, or $243,000,000 less than we expended in 1935. In 1937, if this appropriation of $790,000,000 is made, we will expend $3,184,000,000, or $77,000,000 less than we expended last year, 1936.

This makes a grand total of all expenditures up to the end of this fiscal year, June 30, 1937, of $15,232,000,000; and this is made up of loans, grants, direct relief, work relief, everything that has been occasioned by recovery and relief, including the C. C. C. Out of this grand total between $3,000,000,000 and $4,000,000,000 is recoverable. The sum of $12,000,000,000, therefore, is about what relief and recovery has cost us. From this, however, should be subtracted the permanent value of all the improvements made by the expenditure of this $12,000,000,000. I will let each Member estimate the value of these improvements for himself; improvements such as school buildings, municipal light and power plants, dams, roads, and such things.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD at this point a table showing a break-down of these figures.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

[1] Excess of credits, deduct.

Mr. BUCHANAN. We come now to this appropriation. There is involved $790,000,000 for relief for 5 months, the balance of this fiscal year. This sum is to be allocated by the President, but the tentative division of it at the time of our hearings is about as follows: $655,000,000 for Works Progress, $80,000,000 for Resettlement, $35,000,000 for other departments, and $20,000,000 for the Treasury Department. This makes a total of $790,000,000.

The Resettlement Administration will spend this money, together with its unobligated balance of $78,000,000, as follows: $14,000,000 for administration, $58,000,000 for rehabilitation loans, $30,000,000 for grants, $49,000,000 for rural settlement subsistence homesteads, $437,000 for submarginal land purchases, and $5,000,000 for development on these submarginal lands.

This makes a total of $158,000,000, being the amount that will be available for obligation from December 31, 1936, to June 30, 1937.

The entire works program financed from the relief and work relief money, which includes workers under the Works Progress Administration and other departments and agencies, but excludes the C. C. C., were giving employment on December 26, 1936, as follows: W. P. A., 2,188,000 persons. and all other agencies, 437,000, a total of 2,625,000 individuals. In addition, the C. C. C., which has its own regular appropriation, had on that date a total of 376,000 on its rolls, making a grand total of 3,001,000 who were performing work on the Government pay roll under the relief program.

At this time the Works Progress Administration has on its pay roll 2,200,000 persons. It expects to keep that number on the pay roll under this appropriation throughout the winter months. That is, through February.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. Does that include the nonrelief people on the rolls also, or are those all relief people?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Those are all relief people.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Does that allow anything for the increase which has been brought about by reason of the terrible flood in the Ohio and Mississippi River Valleys?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No. I will speak of the flood situation later. I am speaking now of the appropriation as it came to us without contemplation of the flood situation.

As I stated, that agency will keep 2,200,000 on the pay roll throughout the winter months. In March it is expected to reduce that number 50,000, then 100,000, then 200,000 each month until we get to June 30, when it will have on the pay roll 1,600,000 men. This is on Works Progress, and only Works Progress.

Now, to this must be added 437,000 that will be on the pay roll involving relief workers under other departments. This will give us at the commencement of the next fiscal year 2,037,000 on work relief under the works program.

Add to these the C. C. C. and we have 2,400,000. Now then, the flood comes along. How many extra or additional will have to be added on account of the flood? It has been variously estimated. The last estimate I heard was 600,000, and another estimate of 700,000 by reason of the flood. What will this make? At the beginning of the next fiscal year, if we have to add 700,000, we will then have on relief employment over 3,000,000. We now have 3,001,000. We are not reducing the number and we are not increasing the number to amount to anything.

The situation is very much like last year. We reduced the load at that time. A flood came along which cost the Works Progress Administration $32,000,000 and cost other agencies a tremendous amount of money. Then a drought came along which cost $165,000,000 and placed an additional 300,000 on the relief rolls and took up all the reductions we had previously made. This year another national disaster occurs which will take up all of the reductions which we had hoped to be able to make.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Is it not a fact that the C. C. C. has been recommended by the Chief Executive to be made a permanent institution?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Then that agency should really be taken away from those agencies who may be designated as relief agencies?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is true. It has been recommended by the President that we pass a law making this a permanent activity of the Government. But that does not change the fact. The fact is the C. C. C. is an emergency agency and was brought into existence by reason of the emergency; therefore, it should be charged up to the emergency until the emergency is over. That is simply honest and straight.

Let me give you a few additional facts which may be interesting. Under the old appropriation for relief, in which we adopted the security wage, the average hourly wage for the W. P. A. was 45 cents per hour. Last year we changed that and adopted the prevailing wage. Under the prevailing wage, the average is 50 cents an hour, just a difference of 5 cents between the security wage and the prevailing wage.

Under the present regulations, the maximum hours of work per day per person is 8 under the prevailing wage, a maximum of 40 hours a week and 140 hours a month; but 115 hours is the average under the Works Progress Administration per month. For the last half of November the average hourly earnings runs from 26 cents in the lowest State to 74 cents in New York City. The difference is occasioned, first, by the character of the worker, whether technical or skilled, or unskilled, and also by the prevailing rate of wages which exist in the different communities. That is as it should be, because the Government work plans under relief and unemployment programs should dovetail into the industrial and work system of each State and each community throughout the Nation.

The average cost of one person per month in the Works Progress Administration for the last 6 months was $67. That is the average cost. The average cost of one person per month under the works program, including W. P. A. and all other agencies combined, is $85 for this period.

Mr. Chairman, this concludes my discussion of the relief and work-relief item of $790,000,000. Now, as to the flood——

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman takes up the matter of the flood, may I ask this question? Does the gentleman know whether or not there will be additional requests for relief funds, in addition to the $790,000,000, by reason of the flood or for any other cause hereafter?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yesterday morning I read in the papers about the extent of this flood. You gentlemen do not know it, but I suspect the flood stirs me more than any man in the House. I am going to risk boring this House for 4 or 5 minutes to tell my personal experience. I used to be a farmer. I tried it for many years. I did not have sense enough to make a good farmer, but I did have sense enough to make a good Congressman. [Laughter and applause.]

While I was farming I purchased, partly on credit and partly for cash, 3,500 acres of Brazos River bottom land. I devoted all I made during the most productive years of my life to clearing this land, building houses, and improving the farm generally. I got it in splendid shape. I had 2,500 acres of land well watered, well equipped with houses, well tenanted, and well stocked. Then the floods commenced and I had three floods in succession. I fought them the best I could. During one of the floods the water was at the eaves of all my tenant houses. Two of my brothers and myself were on top of a house with the water at the eaves of the house. We had a ferry boat tied to a tree with 60 mules on the ferry boat, with the ferry boat leaking all the time. We had to take turn about bailing water to keep the boat from sinking to save the mules. This continued for 3 days and 3 nights before the river finally went down enough to get the ferry boat and the mules out. As I have said, I spent the most productive years of my life and everything I made on this farm. You know that when a man is a farmer, and a good one, although he may make a failure of it, if he has a large farm, he rides around it on horseback with a saddle with saddle pockets and a hatchet and a hammer and some nails in the saddle pockets to fix various things on the farm when they get out of whack.

So after all these floods, after all the houses had gone down the river, as well as all the mules I had and my hogs and cattle and crops, with my tenants left starving on the bank, I rode out on the bottom on this horse. In the saddle pockets were nails and a hammer. There was a creek at the edge of the bottom with a hill rising abruptly and a bridge across the creek. When I got to that creek I looked above my head and I saw the high-water mark. Some of you gentlemen may not know what a high-water mark is, but those of you who are familiar with river-bottom farms know. The high-water mark is where the river reaches its height and stands there 2 or 3 days before it starts to fall. When the water stands there for a certain length of time, it makes a ring around the trees. This mark was above my head on horseback. I got myself a plank and I got some charcoal. I nailed that plank at the high-water mark, and here is what I wrote on that plank. It expressed the way I felt then and the way I feel now:

Farewell to the Brazos bottom
I bid you a long adieu;
I may migrate to hell some day,
But I will never return to you.

[Laughter and applause.]

From that day to this I have been the relentless enemy of flood water anywhere and everywhere, and if I can contribute by my voice or by my vote or by my work to the prevention of floods throughout this Union I shall make that contribution more cheerfully than I ever made any contribution in my life.

Let me tell you something else, and I speak from actual experience. You will never prevent floods by levees. You will never prevent floods by diversion. You will never prevent floods by soil-conservation methods. You will never prevent floods by reservoirs. It will take all of these means combined to prevent these floods, and you might as well prepare to meet the situation.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I can appreciate very clearly the gentleman's feeling when he abandoned his farm and wrote on the plank nailed to that tree, but if this morning the gentleman had his youngest son and his wife and his niece and her child and husband and his nephew and his wife and children stranded in some buildings with fire all around them and with water above the first story, I think he could appreciate the situation a little bit more.

I have the idea we are going to come to the problem of trying, ultimately, to control in a substantial way these floods——

Mr. BUCHANAN. The sooner the better.

Mr. MAY. And, so far as I am concerned, I think a reservoir system in all the upper streams, plus the prevention of soil erosion by reforestation and sowing of coverage crops, will do it, although it may take a number of years.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And perhaps low levees, too.

Yesterday morning when I read of the devastation of the floods and the areas covered by their destruction I went to see the Speaker. We had a conference, and he was as much interested in it as I was. He is very much interested. He phoned the President, and, as a result, we went to see the President yesterday morning and spent perhaps three-quarters of an hour there. I do not think the President had slept 1 hour during the entire night. He was at the telephone all night, and he is doing and has done everything within the power of this Government to alleviate and mitigate the hardships caused by this flood.

Now, it is not money you need now, and the President said so. He has all the money he can efficiently spend. It is service that he needs, and he has the service not only of those people in the flood area but from every arm of the Government that can render service. [Applause.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I should like to say that I have the honor of representing more Ohio River front than any other man here—something like 175 miles—and I shall take back the information that we have on our side the great chairman of that powerful Committee on Appropriations. I should like to say further that I have introduced a resolution providing for the appointment of a committee of three Congressmen and three Senators to go into the Ohio River area as soon as it is practicable and bring back a report as to the actual conditions that they find so that we can determine what is going to be done to rehabilitate them.

Mr. BUCHANAN. We are doing everything that is humanly possible.

I asked Mr. Hopkins and General Markham, the Chief of Engineers, if more money was needed, and they said, "No; not now." If we had $100,000,000,000 to expend for that purpose now we could not mitigate the hardships one iota.

This $790,000,000 carried in this bill is subject to be allotted by the President, and he told the Speaker and myself that if it became necessary he would allot every cent of it to alleviate the situation. [Applause.]

Mr. LANZETTA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. LANZETTA. Is it not a fact that this $790,000,000 appropriated in this bill will not take care of the people for the rest of the fiscal year and that many of them will have to be dropped?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Not during the winter months. Not one will be dropped during the winter months. When spring and summer come the employment will increase and you can drop some of them.

Mr. LANZETTA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. LANZETTA. We are speculating on whether that employment will come.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That has been the history of it.

Mr. LANZETTA. The appropriation does call for a reduction of W. P. A. employment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It does contemplate that by July 1 we will have 600,000 reduction.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. The gentleman states that it is contemplated that private industry will absorb 600,000 from the relief pay roll?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is so contemplated, and we hope a lot more will be absorbed.

Mr. HEALEY. In the event that that does not transpire, what provision will be made for these men for whom it will be necessary to provide something in the event they are not employed by industry?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman must recollect that this is an appropriation bill only for the 30th of June next, to end this fiscal year. Another deficiency appropriation bill will be introduced if distress arises. There is no reason why that deficiency appropriation bill cannot be put through sooner.

Mr. LANZETTA. But there is a distressful condition now existing in the city of New York, where men and women are being dropped from the W. P. A. rolls.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is a local condition which I know nothing about.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Is it not a fact that it is to be expected, and probably was anticipated by the committee, that the farmers of the country would take up a considerable slack in the unemployment beginning, say, with the month of March and continuing on and increasing?

Mr. BUCHANAN. In reply, I may say that there were practically 272,000 farmers who were on Mr. Hopkins' Works Progress relief rolls who were transferred to the Resettlement Administration, and there are some 420,000 farmers now to be taken care of by the Resettlement Administration, some of them by grants and some by work. When summer advances some of these will go off the relief because they will have crops and landlords to finance them.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. In this bill there is a provision which by legislation continues the C. C. C. camps to June 30. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations took that up with me yesterday, and I am sure I can speak for the Committee on Labor, to which that would ordinarily go, and that bill came out of that committee, and say that we are glad this bill continues the C. C. C. until June 30 next.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I appreciate the generosity of the chairman of the Labor Committee. The continuance of the C. C. C. is a matter of legislation. The gentleman from Massachusetts is the chairman of the Committee on Labor. I do not believe the Committee on Appropriations should legislate except when absolutely necessary, and then with the consent of the legislative committee that would have jurisdiction of the subject matter.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I presume the gentleman is familiar with the very small amount allowed farmers in the drought area under these subsistence grants.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am not familiar with the amount; but I do not think $20 per month is very small.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Does not the gentleman think it is rather small to allow a family of half a dozen only $18 to $20 a month, and that is all—and I have the budgets to prove that statement?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The $20 a month is a grant, a gift, and the farmer has all his time to work and make an additional amount. It is not a rehabilitation loan. It was intended only to carry the farmer until they could make a rehabilitation loan to that farmer, which would be in larger amount.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It is true that it is a grant, and it is not comparable to the grant the city worker gets under the W. P. A.

Mr. BUCHANAN. My colleague must remember that the people in the city work for theirs.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. But the farmer is willing to work for his, too.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the gentleman will find a job in an agricultural area, we will give the job to the farmer, gladly.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCCORMACK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 3587, the first deficiency appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that general debate upon the bill H. R. 3587, now under consideration, be confined to 2 hours, including the time consumed by me, 1 hour of which shall be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and 1 hour by myself.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 3587, the first deficiency appropriation bill, 1937.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 3587, with Mr. MCCORMACK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. For the information of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], as well as the members of the Committee, the Chair advises them that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] has consumed 29 minutes and has 31 minutes remaining, and that the gentleman from New York, under the motion agreed to, has 1 hour. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I take this occasion to thank the ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations for giving me this time to express my views on this deficiency appropriation bill, and to add that even though on many occasions his views and mine do not coincide, he has at all times treated those of us who have not agreed with him with uniform courtesy and fairness in the disposition of time on the minority side.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to voice my protest against this appropriation bill because I feel that the appropriation for relief and work relief is entirely inadequate to meet the needs of the present conditions in the country. First of all, I remind gentlemen of the fact that when the President of the United States inaugurated the Works Progress Administration he made the statement that it was the intention of the Administration, out of funds dispensed by the Works Progress Administration, to give work to all employables who were on relief.

I assume it is fair to conclude that it was his intention to make it the policy of the Federal Government, at least until such time as the depression would have been dissipated, to give jobs to employables through Federal funds in order to enable them to keep body and soul together and to provide for their families, without forcing them to go upon direct relief.

I submit to you that if the President's stand was right then, it is just as right today, and if we are to follow his speeches and follow his pronouncements of that day, we cannot accept this deficiency appropriation bill in its present form, because it is entirely inadequate to keep the Works Progress Administration going on the basis of giving jobs to those employables who are unable to find employment in private industry.

I submit to you that the trend in recent months in removing men from W. P. A. is entirely unjustified, and the prospects for the future are likewise very disturbing, because this appropriation which we are now considering anticipates that there shall be a gradual reduction in W. P. A. employees until in June the number on W. P. A. will be reduced to a figure of 1,600,000. The recovery of this Nation is not such as to justify that inhuman treatment of American citizens. We have not reached the stage of recovery that would justify in adopting a policy that would include only 1,600,000 men and women upon relief jobs after June of this year.

During the year 1936 there was a substantial increase in business activity. The Secretary of Labor recently issued a statement to the effect that in 1936 there was an increase in business activity of 25 percent over the preceding year. A 25-percent increase in business activity. But the disturbing part of it is that in the same statement it was revealed that in the same year there was only an increase of 7.9 percent in reemployment over the previous year. That is the disturbing thing.

We talk about business recovery. We see that business is moving more rapidly. Men and women who have investments in industry find their capital investment is returning greater dividends, but at the same time there are millions of men and women in this country who have not seen any of the benefits of recovery. Millions of men and women depend upon this Congress to perpetuate the W. P. A. in order for them to have any hope of having a decent living in the near future.

I submit to you that the wages presently paid in W. P. A. are, in most instances, entirely inadequate. When we stop to think that W. P. A. in some parts of this country pays as low as $21 a month, when we stop to consider that this Government pays such low wages for unfortunates who must ask for assistance, we cannot be proud of what appears to be our conclusion on the question of what it requires to maintain a family in decency.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. Not now. I prefer to finish my statement first.

If you want to take the position that Americans are entitled to a decent living, there must be a gradual increase in W. P. A. wages. Some people justify their opposition to an increase in such wages by saying, "Oh, it is a gift after all. It is better than nothing." But I say to you if we permit such a condition to exist as has existed, where millions of men and women cannot live without Government aid, a condition wherein a large percentage of our people must depend on organized society, through their Government, to give them assistance, we cannot justify a wage of $21 a month for a man and his family. That is cruelty. In most of the large cities, in the North particularly, the wage rate is higher than that, but the average for W. P. A. workers is only $52 a month over the entire country. I, for one, cannot see how we can expect men, year after year, to support their families and maintain them on $52 a month, and then feel that we have done our duty to our people. We have the responsibility of bringing these wages up to a point where they will maintain a family in decency.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. Not at the present. I would rather finish my statement first.

If we want to continue with this average of $52, going as low as $21 in some parts of the country, then let us not talk about the great American standard of living any more. Then let us say frankly that it is all right for a large part of our people to live in luxury while another and larger group within our country are not even receiving a decent subsistence. If we continue on year after year treating so many of our people in that way, what kind of citizenship can we expect of them?

The greatest encouragement to communism or fascism in this country results from the fact that millions of our people do not seem to be able to get very much out of this democratic system of ours. Those of us who are for a democratic government, those of us who love our country and its traditions, have a responsibility here and now to provide adequate funds out of the General Treasury of this country to provide all of our people with the opportunity of earning a decent livelihood.

I submit, therefore, that there should be a minimum of $40 a month for every man or woman who is forced, because of conditions, to accept employment in our W. P. A. program.

Since the W. P. A. was organized, there has been a tremendous increase in the cost of living. Who here will deny that there has been an increase in the cost of living since W. P. A. was organized? We all admit that. Whether it is a 10-percent or a 20-percent increase, I am not so sure. However, in my judgment, and in the judgment of those with whom I have collaborated, it seems that there has been an increase of at least 20 percent in the cost of living since W. P. A. wages were first set by this Government. If that is true, the only fair thing to do is to increase the income of these unfortunate people by 20 percent, so that they will have as much of an humble existence as we gave them when we first initiated the program.

I maintain, too, that it is wrong for us to take a person off the W. P. A., give him the so-called pink slip, until we have found a place for him in society, until our national economy finds a place for him, so that he can take care of himself. It is inhuman for us to take these men and women off work jobs and put them on direct relief when the subsistence given in most communities is inadequate long to keep body and soul together, long to maintain healthy children. There are not sufficient funds available under direct relief in most communities to enable the head of the family to give his little tots the things they need to build and maintain strong bodies and healthy minds.

I, for one, therefore, want to accept the program of the Workers' Alliance of America, a group of W. P. A. employees, men who do not want to continue on W. P. A., but who are forced to do so. Their demands, in my judgment, are entirely reasonable. They say their allowance should be increased 20 percent, with a minimum of $40 a month, and that jobs should be provided for at least 2,800,000 men and women on W. P. A. This would take care of most of the employables who are now on direct relief, as well as continue those who are presently on W. P. A. If we are to meet these reasonable and humane demands, we will need, instead of the $655,000,000 provided in this bill, the sum of $1,040,000,000 for the remainder of the fiscal year. I appeal to you in the words of President Roosevelt, who delivered such a classic oration on the event of his second inaugural; I want to remind you in his words that today we find "one-third of our people ill-clad, ill-housed, and ill-nourished." If we admit that such a condition exists, then rather than increasing the number of unfortunates by curtailing the W. P. A. program, we should begin to take some of these people out of this most undesirable position. We, therefore—those of us with whom I have collaborated, and they make up quite a large group of the Members of this House—are supporting the proposition of increasing the appropriation for W. P. A. from $655,000,000, for the rest of the fiscal year, to $1,040,000,000, an increase of $385,000,000.

Then, too, there are in the farming areas of this country literally tens of thousands of men and women who are now on the brink of ruin and who will be completely destitute unless some assistance is given to them. I appeal for adequate appropriations for that fine agency which has made such a splendid beginning, but only a beginning—the Resettlement Administration; and bespeak for these tens of thousands of farmers who are in need of assistance adequate appropriations for a sufficient program of rural rehabilitation in this country. This bill provides for about $80,000,000 for rural rehabilitation. The chairman of the committee made a statement a little while ago to the effect that it is $158,000,000. Perhaps I misunderstood him, I do not know, I am perfectly willing to accept his statement; but my information was that the amount carried in this bill was $80,000,000. Whether it is $80,000,000 or $158,000,000 does not make any difference for the purposes of my argument, because it is the consensus of opinion of those from whom I have been able to get information that this program will require $404,000,000 instead of $80,000,000 or $158,000,000, that the work may be done right and that a real rural rehabilitation program can be launched. Bear in mind that most of this money will be lent to farmers under the rural rehabilitation program and will be returned to the Treasury.

In order to bring this program up to where it should be, at the proper time I shall offer an amendment to this bill increasing the appropriation from $790,000,000 to $1,499,000,000. The amendment will provide that out of that amount not less than $1,040,000,000 shall be allocated to Works Progress Administration for the purpose of continuing work relief, and not less than $404,000,000 for the purpose of providing rural rehabilitation grants and loans to farmers and livestock producers for the remainder of the fiscal year. A program of such magnitude will enable us to take these tens of thousands of farm families out of their present distressed condition and put them in a position where they can look to the future with some prospect of bettering their existence, where they can look to the future with hope, where they can plan for the future of themselves and their children. Then they will be able to look to the future with the prospect of once again becoming self-sufficient, independent, happy, and contented American citizens. We must make this possible for our underprivileged millions of people in order to do justice to them and to the country we all love. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE].

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Chairman, I am for this bill with amendments. I am sorry the chairman of the committee did not see fit to give us sufficient time in which to discuss these amendments, or did not assure us that we would have it so we could make this a real deficiency bill to take care of the requirements of the people of this Nation.

Congress has now been in session for 3 weeks. It opened with a great deal of enthusiasm and with an exuberant feeling that prosperity in abundance has returned for all. The outlook to accomplish something real for the people is not so bright. Congress as a whole feels there is nothing really left to be done; that all is well. It is optimistic beyond intelligence, and self-satisfied. Yet, there is apprehension and uncertainty, a sort of bewilderment. Many Members realize that there is danger ahead. These Members will be heard from before adjournment.

The President delivered a splendid message in person to Congress. He assured the people of this Nation that no one was hungry and that no one would be permitted to go hungry. Of course, you and I know that those words do not square with actual facts and with stern realities. All we have to do is to open our eyes and we will still see want, hunger, and rags in our midst.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that we are living in a fool's paradise. Many of us believe that prosperity has returned; that the depression is over. That is true; but it is over only for some, not for all, of the people. We have a sort of cash-and-carry prosperity, a prosperity where the people in business are receiving a little more cash; but we all agree that the debt structure of the people of this Nation is getting worse, not better.

The Chief Executive thinks that the depression is over, and that the suffering and misery of millions is a thing of the past, never to return. The majority of the Members of Congress are laboring under that same hallucination. They do not understand that the present so-called prosperity simply means that the rich are getting richer and the poor are getting poorer; that a few are again amassing the wealth of the Nation at the expense of the many.

Official Washington cannot and does not see the suffering and misery of the debt-burdened people of the United States. They forget that this so-called prosperity exists only on the surface. They do not realize that the debt burden has been and is getting worse and not better. They do not know that those burdened with debts are sinking rather than rising.

I can demonstrate this by giving actual figures. Take, for instance, the H. O. L. C., which I have been calling the hole in the wall; this organization foreclosed on 61,000 homes in 1936; and this is a governmental institution, absolutely under the control of the Congress of the United States. I say the time has come when foreclosure on homesteads should cease. The supposed protector of homes should not become the evictor.

Next let us take the Farm Credit Administration, another institution over which we have control.

This institution foreclosed on over 14,900 farms in 1935, and on over 11,600 in 1936, and I refer only to the first 11 months of 1936. If these institutions lead the way in robbing the people of their homes that we are supposed to protect, what will the private insurance companies and other corporations do?

Let us come now to the relief problem. May I say, first, the President assured us that the hungry would have to be taken care of. But a few days before the inaugural there were marching in the streets of Washington, D. C., 2,000 farmers and laboring people who had been taken off the W. P. A. pay roll. They appeared before the Members of this Congress and gave us quite a different picture than we can get from the various departments of the Government. There is not a Member of Congress who heard those men speak who will disagree with me when I make the statement that those men gave us the facts, and that the facts that were given us by Government officials were not correct. I am not criticizing the Government officials. I am satisfied they do not know what they say when they give us these false reports.

Mr. Chairman, these 2,000 men gave us facts and figures to show that 250,000 heads of families were receiving about $20 a month to support a family. They gave us facts and figures to show that fuel alone cost $12 a month in some of the States from which they came. They had the decency and the modesty to ask for only $40 a month as a minimum wage; and I do not believe any Member of this House will dispute the fact you cannot live these days and bring up a family on less than $40 a month, even if you are a common laborer.

These 2,000 W. P. A. workers, including laboring people and farmers, presented facts and figures showing that at least half a million had been kicked off of the W. P. A. rolls and had no place to go. They assured us that more than mere lip service was necessary to carry out pre-election promises. They convinced us that the information we are receiving from various departments of the Government is false and that it is up to the administration and to Congress to wake up and get the facts.

They informed Members of Congress that many W. P. A. workers had been laid off in Montana when the thermometer stood at 17° below zero. They informed us that many of those who were working received only $20 a month, when their fuel bill alone amounted to $12 a month. They painted pictures of the suffering of men, women, and children which are not in keeping with the gaiety of the coming-out parties, nor with official Washington's assumption that all is well.

These W. P. A. workers and farmers informed us that farmers in the drought-stricken areas were allowed only $18 a month with which to feed their livestock, which, as every intelligent farmer knows, at the present price of feed is altogether insufficient. They further informed us and claimed that nothing was allowed these farmers for fuel, food, or clothing for themselves and their families. When these farmers were taken off of the W. P. A. projects we were assured that they would be taken care of through the Resettlement Administration. This information given by these farmers is altogether different than that given to us by the various departments of the Government and alphabetical administrations. There is a nigger somewhere in the woodpile.

Let us take the next picture. These same farmers who came here showed us that the Resettlement Administration gave them $18 a month to feed their livestock, but nothing for the destitute men and women who were there and had nothing to eat for themselves.

Just to keep the record straight, let me suggest that in 1932 those who received a net income of from $100 to $10,000 are today receiving 5 percent less and those who were receiving from $10,000 to $50,000, or more, in 1932 are today receiving 16 percent more. It is less for the little fellow and more for the big fellow.

Again, in 1932 we had 20 individuals who received a million dollars or more net income. In 1935 we had increased the 20 to 46, and in 1936 that number was greatly increased. We are again riding for a fall unless this Congress shows extraordinary intelligence and courage and meets the situation before it is too late. Gambling in stocks, bonds, and in food and the necessities of life must cease or else another 1929 collapse is at hand.

Mr. Chairman, those were the facts presented. Therefore I agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] that the $790,000,000 should be increased by at least $500,000,000. Let us meet the issues and have a deficiency bill that will take care of the deficiency until we have time to give the matter more mature consideration. May I say to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee we have been here 3 weeks, and I see no reason why this bill should be jammed through and therefore be short in deficiencies. Let us appropriate enough money to the Resettlement Administration and to the W. P. A. so they may function, and I am sure they will not use any more money than necessary.

Let me ask a question: Is this Government going to continue to hand out sandwiches and a bare subsistence, as the President calls it, and leave the men and women in the same condition they were in 3 or 4 years ago, or are we going to give them enough to make them self-supporting and the opportunity to make good?

In conclusion permit me to express my sympathy for the hundreds and thousands of families who have been driven from their homes by the floods. This is the Nation's calamity, as well as yours, and I am sure Congress will respond promptly. Permit me also to express my sympathy for the suffering and my admiration for the courage shown by the drought-stricken farmers, with whose wants this administration has been altogether too penny-wise and pound-foolish—too niggardly—in dealing. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I think it would be unfortunate in considering this deficiency bill, which provides emergency funds, to inject too much emotionalism in our considerations. I do not believe any Member of this House, or any citizen of America, need have any particular concern over the danger that the present leader of the White House, and the present Congress, which will support his leadership, will not adequately and justly deal with the unfortunate people of this country. [Applause.]

No administration of any country since the dawn of time has more seriously concerned itself, or more assidiously devoted its efforts, to reaching down from the high places of government and touching those unfortunate citizens who are in need, as the present administration.

We find a couple of our colleagues who think we are not doing the job right and that they, forsooth, and yielding to the importunities of the ladies and gentlemen who honored us with their presence several weeks ago in a parade, which some of us witnessed, should undertake to take the matter out of the hands of the President and Mr. Hopkins and do the job in a more liberal way.

Mr. Chairman, it is not the business of the United States Government to furnish employment for citizens. It only becomes its duty and obligation when situations and circumstances arise for which the citizens are not responsible to step in and relieve the citizens from actual suffering and want. That is the reason for these appropriations. The question of meeting the unemployment situation, may I say to the Members of the House, has been a most tragic one, because even when we get back, as we hope we are rapidly approaching, to normal times, the unemployment problem is going to be a staggering one to meet. But that is a different question. We are now dealing with the problem of trying to prevent our fellow citizens from being in actual want and actually suffering because of these unfortunate circumstances.

The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE] says that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation is robbing the citizens of their homes. I hope the gentleman will revise his remarks. He is a very distinguished gentleman, who honored a group of citizens by having his name placed on a national ticket, and I am surprised at his using a term of that kind.

Mr. Chairman, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has saved the homes of millions of American citizens. [Applause.] No citizen has had his home foreclosed or advertised who has not been in arrears in payment more than 12 months, and, after all, Mr. Chairman, we did not give these funds to the citizens. It was a loan. No home has been advertised for foreclosure that was not in arrears more than 12 months, and even then if the citizen shows any possibility of being able to extricate himself from his financial difficulties he is given further opportunity.

The gentleman says that the Resettlement Administration is refusing to feed some people. Now, here is what happened. After the drought through which we have just passed descended upon some of these unfortunate people, they picked up, lock, stock, and barrel, and moved into other parts of the country. Hundreds of families moved to some places out in the Middle West, for instance, and the authorities had no way of checking them. They were not citizens of that particular county, or even that particular State. The relief organizations had a tremendous difficulty and a staggering problem. We have now in our possession a statement from Mr. Hopkins, saying that with the funds appropriated in this bill, arrangements have been made for the Resettlement Administration to take care of these roving relief families, and they will be taken care of as adequately as possible under the relief plan.

Resettlement Administration has confirmed and we have no fear that these farm families that are migrating from one place to another, who have left their place of domicile and gone into other territory, making it very difficult, if not impossible, to check them, will be taken care of.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FORD of California. In that connection I may say that California, and particularly southern California, has been the domicile of thousands of these families.

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; I am sure of that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with respect to the adequacy of the appropriation, we are given the assurance of Mr. Hopkins that no citizen is going to be allowed to go in want. This does not mean that you are going to give him everything he wants. You gentlemen know how impossible that would be, but consistent with this great effort that has been made, the program is going to move forward, yet, undoubtedly and inevitably and properly, I think, with the idea of restricting it and pulling in the program as fast as this can be done without causing actual want on the part of our citizens.

The flood injects a new problem into the situation undoubtedly and, eventually, we are going to be called upon for funds in this connection. The President told the chairman of our committee and the Speaker yesterday, and he told me yesterday on a separate occasion, he did not wish any special appropriation at this time for this purpose; that what these unfortunate people need is food and clothing and shelter, and with the C. C. C. and the Army and the Navy and the Coast Guard they are prepared to give them these things, and eventually they will probably come here for us to reimburse these regular establishments for such expenditures and such services as they may have rendered in this emergency.

The amount of money we have asked you for is sufficient to carry the program forward, and I want to ask you on behalf of the administration and the committee, as well as on behalf of the program, to back the committee with the assurance that if future circumstances show we must grant more, the Congress will be here, the committee will be here, and you will be here to take such action as the circumstances may indicate to be necessary. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to my colleague the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, for 4 years I have read the public utterances of our President. I heard his inaugural address the other day when he referred to the hungry people in the United States. I am confident he meant what he said; that no hungry person in this country was going to be allowed to go unfed. And I know that he means to carry out this pledge to the people of America.

In the few minutes I have I may say that I think this is a question of expediency. I feel that if President Roosevelt thought that this Congress was going to adjourn tomorrow he would be as liberal with the suffering people of this country as the distinguished gentleman from the State of Wisconsin. The President may feel that Congress will be in session for some time and that application can be made for more money if necessary. Are you going to appropriate sufficient money now to meet the demands of the people or are you going to appropriate it later? I am like my colleague from North Dakota. I am for this bill, but I am for it with amendments. I believe this bill should pass with sufficient increase to take care of the people, so that the plans of the administrators of this fund can be made in advance and carried along in a much better way than to make the appropriations piecemeal. That is why, Mr. Chairman, I am going to support the bill, but I am going to support it with liberal amendments up to the extent of taking care of the unemployed and the hungry people of the country, up to the point of taking care of the farmers of this country whose cattle and sheep are going hungry and dying on the range, up to the point of taking care of the people who live in the drought-stricken territory that have nothing to feed themselves with, and up to the point of taking care of the people living in Montana and elsewhere where the temperature is from 18° to 20° below zero right now. So it is simply a question of expediency. I know the President is with the common people of the country heart and soul, just as we all are; but apparently as he views it we should go to the Appropriations Committee now and then. Personally I feel that we should go to them now and ask for a sufficient amount so that the people may be assured of being taken care of in the future. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to my colleague the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I rise at this moment to discuss the grave problems that confront millions of American citizens in 10 great Central States. These problems grow out of the unprecedented flood conditions that have come to them. I feel that I express the appreciation of their grateful hearts for the response that has come to them from the Members of Congress and the executive branch of our Government.

When the unbridled waters of the Ohio and its tributaries began to creep toward flood stage, Representatives from the flood area were confronted with statements that there were certain limitations and restrictions in regard to governmental agencies that controlled their activities. Regulations and red tape surrounded the relief agencies. When the pall gathered over these stricken States the great heart of the Federal Government was evidenced in no uncertain terms—regulations restrictive in nature theretofore were broadened, red tape was cut, America leaped to the scene of action in an effort to relieve the sufferers of the afflicted areas.

Last Saturday there was an informal meeting of Representatives from the flooded area. I was honored by being made chairman of this group. Its purpose was to assist in every way possible to relieve the present needs of our constituents and hereafter to insist upon a real flood-prevention program. We were advised that the relief agencies would provide relief work for those in the flooded areas. The question of food and clothing was left in the hands of the great American Red Cross—the funds for which were to be secured from popular subscriptions. The meeting was adjourned until Monday morning. In the meantime the condition had grown materially worse, and at that time this group adopted a resolution through which there was to be sought $10,000,000, to be expended for food and clothing in the flooded area. It was not necessary to press such an amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill. Congressional leaders held conferences with the President of the United States—this great humanitarian, ever considerate of the needs of mankind, unhesitatingly broadened regulations, cut the red tape, and put the resources of the Nation behind the effort to relieve human suffering in this area. We were told that the entire sum carried in the present bill would be available for relief of the stricken ones if such sum were required.

Yesterday we were told by General Craig, Chief of Staff of the Army, that their entire facilities had been made available—warehouses, storehouses, and depots saw their doors open and supplies hurried to the areas affected. Facilities of the Navy and the Coast Guard, personnel, equipment, and supplies have been forwarded to this 1,300-mile front.

We heard Harry Hopkins, head of the Works Progress Administration, say that all their resources were at the disposal of the Red Cross in feeding and clothing the flood sufferers. Thousands of additional persons are employed in flood work. He did not stop there; he was clear in response to Congressman BUCHANAN's statement that it would be their purpose to cooperate to the fullest extent with the Public Health Service in the sanitation and health problems that exist now and will come after the waters recede.

The President of the United States has placed the resources of the Nation at the command of these relief activities to care for those in need. Even now the evacuation problem is not over. The care of the flood sufferers is an imminent task. Food, clothing, and a place to sleep must be had by thousands, tens of thousands—yea; a half million or more men and women driven from their homes through no fault on their part.

I would say a word of the efforts of Dr. Thomas Parran, Surgeon General of the Public Health Service. Early in the action he had the vision; early in the action he made his preparations. Doctors, nurses, sanitary engineers, and inspectors have been thrown into this battle against disease. Boats for the specific use of these medical activities have been secured. Typhoid serum, diphtheria antitoxin, and smallpox vaccine have been shipped into this area in large quantities in an effort to avoid epidemics which follow so close in the wake of this sort of thing. Airplanes have carried considerable quantities from distant centers. He is not only alert but one of the most capable men in the national administration today.

In the joint meeting yesterday Congressman JAMES P. BUCHANAN, of Texas, the great chairman of the great Committee on Appropriations, hastened to assure Congressmen and Senators that there would be no question that the dollars necessary to pay the bill would be forthcoming. Chairman BUCHANAN is the outstanding leader in the fight for economy; he has had broad experience in life; he has had personal experience with floods that take a costly toll both in disease and life.

The State of Kentucky is most hard hit of its sister States. The district which I represent has a frontage of 130 miles on the great Ohio. Thousands of people in my district are homeless today because of this flood. My heart was made glad to hear the statements of the representatives of the executive branch and the Red Cross, the statement of Chairman BUCHANAN, and the evident desire of the membership of this House and Senate to care for these stricken folks. I know I bespeak their gratitude and the gratitude of all the stricken.

Our friend BUCHANAN gave particular attention in this meeting to the sanitation problems that present themselves and the disease-prevention work that must be carried on. "Buck" is slow to promise, but those of us who know his great heart and the pride he takes in doing the job he undertakes were assured that the flood problems, both now and those to come, will be met as patriotic American citizens have always met their natural obligations. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, I listened with a great deal of interest to that very distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], and with whose sentiments I can thoroughly agree. I believe that the President of the United States will do his very best in this present emergency.

The administration and the chairman of the Appropriations Committee are doing their best and making a sincere effort to get the country to let loose of the tail of the live bull calf that we refer to as relief. It is a problem in which all have had a vital interest during the emergency, and an even greater interest now. It embraces the twofold duty of administering relief to everyone in need and of having due regard for the taxpayers of the Nation.

I think for the most part no one quite envisioned the result that would come when we had to let loose. That only shows the fact of how difficult it is, when once you embark upon a paternalistic enterprise, to get away from it. It is easy to give a lollipop to a child, but it is another thing to take it away without a fuss.

While this appropriation is set at $790,000,000, the very fact that there are some who want to raise it indicates full well the difficulty of getting away from that situation. As we take thought of our present problem of relief, may I direct your attention to our future problem also.

I hope every member of the Committee will take time to read the statement that begins on page 157 of the hearings and concludes at the bottom of page 172. That is the statement of Mr. Hopkins.

If you think our present problems are difficult, then envision what it will be when, as he says, in the future you will have to deal constantly with six and one-half millions of unemployed people. That is for you gentlemen on the majority side who are responsible for the affairs of this Government today to determine. This statement of what we can expect in the future, so far as the unemployed are concerned, comes from a high administrative officer of this Government, and certainly we ought to give some thought as to whether or not there is some other way of taking care of six and a half million or 7,000,000 of our people who are in the ranks of the unemployed, and who will be dependent upon the Government of the United States. In my judgment, that is one of the most shameful confessions that has ever been written into the annals of the history of any enlightened country. Think of it. Confessing here in a written statement that we are going to have to put up with a problem of six and a half million or 7,000,000 unemployed, God save the mark, in a country like America, with $51,000,000,000 of idle money in the banks of the country, with millions of idle hands, and an amazing capacity for producing things we need. Shall we here confess our inability to fashion a program that will bring those idle dollars and those idle hands together? Oh, there is a lot of inspiration if we go back and see whence we came, in thousands of years of progress. We can go way back to the days when they built the pyramids, and when human life and energy meant nothing, and the lifeblood of hundreds of thousands of people who had no political or economic or social rights were built into the mortar that hold together the blocks that make a meaningless monument to some forgotten king in the valley of the Nile. When we look back into the corridors of history and then look at the progress that we have made in this day and age, we ought to be ashamed to let that sort of things go into the RECORD.

Look at our own civilization today. The Queen Mary crosses the ocean in 62 hours. The Burlington Zephyr almost annihilates all distance by traveling from Chicago to Denver, a distance of 1,064 miles, in about 15 hours. We have radios and automobiles. We have surfaced highways and canned foods. We have filled our land with all the instrumentalities of enlightenment and comfort, and brought political, economic, and social betterments to the people. Are we going to confess now that we will be satisfied after we reach a high productive level, a high degree of prosperity, to have 7,000,000 unemployed? Are we going to accept that as a paternalistic governmental problem? I say that I, for one, will not be committed to a confession of that kind, because I think America can do infinitely better than that for her people. If we are to reconcile ourselves to that, what a strange paradox it is that we ladle out millions and billions in relief, as a kind of economic mustard plaster, made necessary by the emergency which existed, only to find that as expenditures grow we seem to recede farther and farther from a durable solution of this problem. How strange indeed that we provide three billions of dollars with which to save the home owners of the Nation from foreclosure and then institute foreclosure against more than 61,000 because they have no jobs and cannot earn the money with which to meet the H. O. L. C. installment. In addition, it is estimated that another hundred thousand will have to be foreclosed. Then why go to all the trouble to bail someone out of his economic agony? We are going to have it to contend with as a permanent, static problem, in the language of Mr. Hopkins, Administrator of Federal Relief. It is your responsibility, gentlemen of the majority, and may I add my suggestion as to what I think a solution might be? A country with so much money, so many people at its disposal, with so many inventive minds, with so much ingenuity, with capacity for mass production can certainly find a way out; and what is the way out? In my judgment, the way out would be for your administration to give a little more encouragement to the business structure of the country. These distressed people were employed in business in 1929. Then why not look to industry to hire them now? There is a huge demand for goods in the country at the present time, and additional demand should be created.

We must cut down the price of goods and there must be a diffusion of prosperity in the lower brackets. Are we going to do it with synthetic and artificial means such as we are using at the present time, or can it best be done through the instrumentalities of private business when they get a little encouragement from the Government of the United States. They did not get much encouragement in the tax bill of 1936, in which the Government undertook to impair the accumulation of reserves whereby industry might expand and go forward.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Briefly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Has the gentleman seen the salaries of the General Motors officials last year, amounting to $5,000,000 for 20 people? What more stimulation do they need?

Mr. DIRKSEN. And I reply to the profound statesman from Minnesota that if you take all of the salaries of all of the executives of the General Motors, it still would not be enough to take care of 30 days' relief in the city of Chicago alone. The problem is still there. Are you gentlemen going to commit yourselves to this problem of taking care of 7,000,000 unemployed year in and year out, even after we have reached new prosperity levels in the country that exceed the prosperity of 1929? What is your answer to it? Will you say that there has been recovery? Will you say that the emergency is at an end, when we have to look into a horizon and there see seven millions of our citizens, seven millions of our breadwinners, who still are out of employment? Certainly that is not recovery. I for one cannot bring myself to believe that millions of our citizens would be satisfied to regard themselves socially or economically as a part of the army of unemployed. They want jobs.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to help the gentleman if I can to answer him why there will always be 7,000,000 people. On page 152 of the hearings the secret is partly disclosed. To the complaint to Mr. Hopkins that they cannot find labor to go to work and get off the W. P. A., he comes back and says until they pay a proper standard of wages they have no right to complain. His social idea is to keep people on W. P. A. until, as he refers to the sunny South, they are willing to pay proper wages.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I want to say particularly to the majority party that we are just as much interested in the solution of these problems as you. We have perhaps the same objectives. We have the same human instincts as you. We are trying to find what we believe to be the basic solution of this problem. Apparently after wrestling with it since 1933, after spending billions of dollars, the Administrator of Relief comes before the committee and tells us that six and a half or seven million people will be the minimum of unemployment in this country. We have to simply accept the conclusion that the problem is still with us. What is the solution? I am just as much interested as you are, but let nobody get the idea that after we have passed a few appropriation bills we have solved it, because it will be with us for a long time to come.

The Congress can solve or nearly solve every problem that comes before it; it can provide generous funds with which to make loans to individuals, to political subdivisions, and to financial institutions; it can make loans to home owners and to farmers; it can provide palliatives galore, but until the scalpel is plunged deep into the problem of unemployment and a remedy found we will have done little durable good. The key to our distress is jobs and more jobs. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, this measure carries an appropriation of $790,000,000 to carry on relief to the end of this fiscal year, June 30, 1937. I have no disposition to criticize the amount called for in the bill. Some Members contend it is too much; others say it is not enough. The President and Mr. Hopkins, Relief Administrator, say that this sum is all that is needed to carry on the relief work to the end of the fiscal year, and the Appropriations Committee of the House made a unanimous report to the effect that this sum is sufficient.

I have always favored and still favor adequate relief for the needy of this country. This is the attitude of every other Republican in this House, and this is and has been the attitude at all times of the Republican Party. Since the President, Mr. Hopkins, and the Appropriations Committee say that the sum carried in this bill is sufficient, I am giving it my support.

While the Republican Party favors adequate relief for the needy, yet we Republicans have a right to question the manner in which this relief is administered and whether or not this administration has found a solution for the depression.

In June 1933 the present administration had appropriated and turned over to the President $3,300,000,000 for relief and recovery, and the hope was expressed at the time that that sum would restore prosperity and take up the unemployment in this country. With that great sum of money the administration was going to put the people back to work. Those billions were spent. January 1935 came and there was brought before the Congress and passed an appropriation for $4,880,000,000. The chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the very able and distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN], assured us that that appeared to be the last—that large sum of money would restore prosperity and cut out unemployment. That sum of money was supposed to carry us to July 1, 1937; but the spring of 1936 came and another bill was brought before us and passed calling for an additional $1,425,000,000 for relief. That was a deficiency. We were assured that that sum would take us up to July 1, 1937, and on the floor of the House and Senate and throughout the country in 1936 we were told by the President and his spokesmen that the depression had been whipped and prosperity had returned. Now we have this bill for an additional $790,000,000 for relief to tide us over until July 1, 1937.

Other appropriations have been made, and we are told by the chairman [Mr. BUCHANAN] that the total appropriations that have been made and the total sum that will be expended by this administration up to June 30, 1937, for relief and recovery will be $15,332,000,000. Of course, this does not include the billions of increases in appropriations for other agencies of the Government that have been used for relief in one form and another.

There are about 30,000,000 families in the United States. If we divided this $15,332,000,000 by these 30,000,000 families, you will find that this represents more than $500 for relief and recovery for every family of our population of more than 120,000,000 people. The President and Mr. Hopkins estimated last year that there were approximately 5,000,000 families, or 20,000,000 people, in the United States that needed some form of public relief. If we divide these relief and recovery appropriations, amounting to $15,332,000,000, among these 5,000,000 families, it would represent more than $3,000 for each relief family and it would represent on the average more than $600 for each person needing relief, provided they got the money; but I regret to say that much of this money was wasted and large sums of it went for overhead and to give jobs to a great army of politicians. No relief family in my congressional district has received anything like $3,000, and I dare say no individual has received $600 in relief, but a great many Democratic politicians who have been favored with fat jobs and do not need relief have received much more than these sums.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I have but a short time and I am sorry that I cannot yield at this time.

MR. HOPKINS PAINTS DARK PICTURE

Mr. Hopkins, the Relief Administrator, in his testimony before the Appropriations Committee on this bill, paints a dark picture of the future. He says that this unemployment is not temporary but we more than likely in the years to come will find there will be constantly as many as 7,000,000 unemployed in this country. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, in a recent statement, declares there are more than 9,000,000 of the employables in this country out of work and the number of unemployed has increased about a million since October 1936. This presents a gloomy outlook indeed. There can be no greater menace to this country than to have a great army of unemployed men and women needing work and seeking work to provide for themselves and their families; and while some have been restored to a degree of prosperity, mostly the big fellows in industry, business, and agriculture, there are not only millions of unemployed but there are other millions in small industries, small businesses, and on small farms who are now in just as bad condition as they were before we spent all of this money.

In 1933 this Nation collected in revenues from the people approximately $1,800,000,000. During the third year of the present administration $5,400,000,000 was collected in taxes and revenues from the American people, and we are informed by the Secretary of the Treasury that for the fourth fiscal year of the present administration, which expires on June 30, 1937, we will have collected in revenues—taxes—from the people a sum in excess of $7,000,000,000.

Notwithstanding this tremendous increase in the amount of revenue collected, we have jumped up our national debt to approximately $35,000,000,000, an increase in the neighborhood of $15,000,000,000 under the present administration, and in addition thereto the Government has put its guaranty behind certain other obligations amounting to $5,000,000,000, and much of that will have to be paid by the Federal Government; and with this increase in taxes, we continue to spend more than we take in. Since the 1st of July 1936 the deficit is approaching $2,000,000,000, and it does not take a wise man to see that unless there is a radical change in the policy of the Government or additional taxes, there will be no balancing the Budget and our national debt will reach the stupendous sum of $40,000,000,000.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I regret that I do not have the time.

I must not take my seat until I call again to your attention another matter. The welfare of these needy people is of very great importance, and so is the welfare of our country. The Republicans of this House and Nation do not find fault with the granting of relief to needy people, but it is the manner in which the present administration has administered this relief. It is honeycombed with politics, favoritism, and partiality.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman from Kentucky care to yield for a question?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Briefly.

Mr. WOODRUM. I imagine the gentleman would approve if the present administration would turn the administration of relief over to the Republican Party. Is that his attitude?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. It certainly is not my attitude and is not the attitude of the Republican Party. I have and the Republican Party has always favored taking this relief out of politics. These great sums of money and these great powers should not be used to intimidate and browbeat the needy people of this Nation. They should not be forced to exchange their priceless privilege of voting for bread and raiment for themselves and their families.

No one need tell me it has not been so used. It was used in my congressional election in 1934. It was used in the State election in 1935, and it was used on a larger scale in Kentucky in 1936. It was not only used by Democrats against Republicans but it was used by one group of Democrats against another group of Democrats. Its blighting influences have been in evidence everywhere throughout Kentucky. Last year in Kentucky two distinguished gentlemen were candidates for a great office. The man who was defeated said that the relief money and relief agencies of the Government brought about his defeat. His opponent, who won, came back and said the relief agencies of the State backed his opponent. I saw in my own congressional district the highway trucks provided by Federal relief money and State money hauling people to the polls to vote in the primary of one group of Democrats against another group of Democrats, and many relief workers were busy in that Democratic primary. I am sure some one or more of our Democratic friends in the House from Kentucky, if they desired to do so, could verify the statements I am making. In my own congressional district a multitude of Republicans on relief were forced to register as Democrats and vote in the Democratic primary in order to hold their jobs so that they might get a little meat and bread to feed their hungry families, and in the final election last year these poor needy people with relief jobs were belabored to go in and vote the Democratic ticket, and in my own county in a local-option election certain persons were using the relief money in urging people to vote on a certain side of that question.

I have on numerous occasions, on the floor of this House and elsewhere, condemned favoritism, partiality, and politics in administering relief to the needy, and I am here today again condemning it. We see on every hand those who need relief do not receive it, and then others receiving relief who do not need it.

Last year I sent out questionnaires to several thousand people in my district, to every precinct, and every nook and corner, and in this questionnaire I desired to know whether or not favoritism, partiality, and politics had any place in the administration of relief. I received over 5,000 responses, and many of these came from Democrats. All but about 10 or 12 stated that this was the situation in their community.

Many distinguished Democrats in the House and Senate, and outside the House and Senate, have called this situation to the attention of the people of the Nation. You Democrats may take some delight in winning now by means of that sort, but you must know that this is digging at the very foundations of our Government.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. FULLER. Is the gentleman against the appropriation to feed the poor of this country?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I certainly am not opposed to this appropriation. I am for it and have so stated over and over during the course of my remarks. I wish my friend from Arkansas to know that the objection of myself and the Republican Party is to the favoritism, partiality, and politics used in the administration of relief. In my county and in my district, as a general rule, if a good Democrat belongs to a certain faction, he gets the white-collar jobs and high salaries. If, on the other hand, he belongs to another faction, or is a Republican, he gets no job, and literally hundreds of Republicans have told me that the statement has been made to them frankly by those administering relief that if they expected to have a relief job, even digging in the mud, they must register and vote the Democrat ticket.

Mr. FULLER. They hold a lot of offices in my county—the Republicans—that is the worst trouble we have. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I will venture those Republicans down in Arkansas holding jobs are voting, or it is believed they are voting, the Democratic ticket.

Mr. FULLER. No. Those fellows the gentleman talks about in his district want increases in salary, yet most of them voted against Roosevelt.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I was standing on the street the other day at the House Office Building viewing the W. P. A. parade. They displayed many banners and made many statements as they passed along. I observed one of their slogans was: "Who won the election in 1936?" and "We want Roosevelt to keep his promises." The implication was that the W. P. A. workers had won the election in 1936.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. No; I have but a few moments of time left.

W. P. A. money has not been able to defeat me, but I have stated to the people of my district that I have heretofore and shall hereafter continue to raise my voice against partisan politics or any politics or partiality or favoritism in the administration of relief. This relief money comes from all the people and should go to the needy without regard to race, creed, or politics, and no needy person should be insulted or oppressed by anyone trying to force him to exchange his highest right, the vote, as an American citizen for food and raiment for his needy family. That is what I have stood for all the time and that is what I stand for here today. Any other course is unjust, unfair, and un-American. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BIGELOW].

Mr. BIGELOW. Mr. Chairman, with the due humility of a new Member, I would not venture to speak at this time were it not that I have been requested to do so by my troubled city, Cincinnati. I am sure we Members from the flood areas have been wanting to go back to help if possible, yet we know we would only be in the way, that local agencies and agencies of the Federal Government are doing all it is physically possible to do. Yet we have been asking ourselves, Is there not something we can do? This morning there came from Cincinnati a sort of answer to this question, and I, as a Representative from Cincinnati, am asking you to do what my city has requested.

Mr. Dykstra, our city manager, has sent to the President, I understand, a request; and the chamber of commerce has requested me and my colleague the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DIXON] to present the request to Congress. Cincinnati, in her trouble, asks this House immediately, or as soon as it possibly can be done, to appoint a commission of a few members to go to Cincinnati and the other troubled areas, that the citizens in distress there may see us and tell us what they want.

We may ask ourselves what good we can be there, but it seems to me hardly appropriate to raise this question at this time. If Cincinnati and these flooded areas ask it we should respond.

I am going to drop into the box at the Clerk's desk after consultation with the leaders, the proper resolution; and I hope that these resolutions may be expedited in order that we may respond to this call from my city. I ask this especial attention to Cincinnati at this time because you know, as I do, the fact that at this very hour the river is rising. It is expected to reach its crest tomorrow, when it will be at least 10 feet above the highest point ever known in history. Our electric lights are out. We are rationing the little water that is left in our reservoirs. Our citizens are ordered off the streets. Business houses are closed.

Our people are making a desperate fight against the enemies of flood and flame. They are asking a committee of Congress to visit them at once to witness for ourselves the plight they are in and let them see us and tell us how they think we can help. It should be enough for us that they ask it. The least we can do is to answer their call.

I do not know what they can have to say to us. They may want us to see for ourselves that we may appreciate not only the terrors of the elements that they face but the appalling work of rehabilitation that awaits them.

As for this work, I hope that the way may be found to permit the Works Progress Administration to throw itself into the task of cleaning, renovating, repairing, and restoring the private property and homes of the people as well as to do this work for public property. There may be no precedent for this. But if not, I propose that we make a precedent.

To spend relief money liberally to put the homes of our people in as good condition as before the flood seems to me to be fully justified on this high ground that this flood is more an act of Congress than it is an act of God. I mean, Mr. Chairman, that had Congress been acting intelligently these past years, this flood might have been avoided.

Had we spent as much as will be lost in this flood to build reservoirs on the upper courses of the Ohio and its tributaries so that these waters could have been stepped down gradually, the Ohio would at this moment be flowing placidly to the sea, the friend of man and not his enemy.

For 7 long years there have been in this stricken valley a half million men who have been sitting down in enforced idleness. Their hands have been aching for work. All they have wanted was a chance to obey God's first law to man, to work, and earn their bread in the sweat of their brow.

Had we done more than feed them, had we paid them to work these 7 years making reservoirs and dams, we might by this time have insured all the people of this valley against the recurrence of floods.

I have a correspondent who has coined a name to express what he thinks of us. He calls us inertians.

This horror of flood and fire that my beloved Cincinnati faces today, and that so many other communities face over a thousand miles of waterway, this horror would be doubly horrible if it did not shock us out of our inertia and set us to work on an adequate program of flood control.

Suppose it should cost us a billion or two. The leading editorial of the New York Times said this morning:

> If we can think of spending $750,000,000 on a Nicaragua canal because it may be of some military advantage to us, surely we can think of saving the United States from being washed away into the Gulf of Mexico and from being blown away by eroding winds.

But the present emergency, and how we are to fight the filth and disease that will be left after the flood—these are uppermost in our mind now.

However we may differ as to what should be done or how far we should go in the effort to prevent future floods, what we have before us now is this request of Cincinnati that we send at once a delegation to visit her and her neighbors along the river who suffer with her. I convey this request to the Congress with my earnest appeal that it may meet with instant response. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES].

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I wish in the brief time allotted to me to impart to you the knowledge I believe I have of conditions in my own State, Massachusetts.

Mr. Chairman, I know that every Member of this House is very much interested in this great American relief problem; and I am speaking today, Mr. Chairman, as a man who for years has labored with the problem of the unemployed, the problem of the distressed taxpayer, and the problem of the men and women in our communities who have been in need of work. For 13 years I have been mayor of a city and am still mayor of that city, serving my fourteenth year. I know the problem of the unemployed in Massachusetts, I know the situation confronting the mayors of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and I know something about the administration of relief in that State; and to that end, Mr. Chairman, I am directing my efforts in the hope that some solution will be found for the conditions that exist in my State in order that we may properly administer the problem of relief.

I have in my hand a letter signed by the president of the Mayors' Club of Massachusetts which states among other things that at the annual meeting on January 9 of the Mayors' Club of Massachusetts it was voted unanimously to endorse the stand taken by Gov. Charles F. Hurley, a Democrat who in his inaugural address advocated the return of relief control from the Federal Government to the local communities on the basis of the old C. W. A. system. I say to you, Mr. Chairman, as one who has been closely affiliated with the problem of relief through the last 3 years of control by the Federal Government that in my opinion the time has come when a change must be inaugurated in the system of administering relief in order that justice may be done, that we may have proper administration, and that those most entitled to relief get first preference and consideration. The mayors of Massachusetts had no complaint of the way the administration of relief under the C. W. A. and the F. E. R. A. was carried out in our State.

We were satisfied that with the amount of money available the best was being done that could be accomplished. But, Mr. Chairman, the W. P. A. has turned into a racket and this is acknowledged by those in authority in the higher brackets of administration and something ought to be done to change the present set-up of the W. P. A. and the administration of the W. P. A. in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in order that we, the local administrators of municipal business, may have an opportunity to thoroughly cooperate and assist in every way we can to give relief to those who are in need of relief, and not to those who because of political and personal favoritism are today getting the same. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS].

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, pointed out a minute ago that prosperity had returned to the United States of America. I am happy that this condition prevails in the gentleman's State, but in my own State of Oklahoma prosperity has not returned.

We had a drought this past year which was the third successive drought to hit the Middle West. The people of Oklahoma and the Middle West are in as bad shape today as they were at the outset of the New Deal or recovery program. We will need as much money in Oklahoma to carry our drought-stricken and depression-ridden farmers through this winter as we used to carry them through last winter.

Mr. Chairman, I shall of course support the appropriation of $790,000,000 as carried in this bill. I know that the committee and those in charge of this program have labored long and hard over this matter. I personally am of the opinion it will not be adequate. I am sure when they reduce the per man per month cost for materials from $10.80 to $5, as contemplated in this bill, it will destroy most of the worthwhile projects and much of the worth-while program that has been previously carried on. [Applause.]

I am advised that under the new scheme of things there will be no works programs provided for farmers. That can mean but one thing—that the only relief which farmers will receive in the future from the Federal Government will be that relief furnished by the Resettlement Administration in the form of either loans or grants.

CANNOT TAKE LOANS NOW

It has been pointed out to me by both the officials of the Works Progress Administration and the Resettlement Administration that this program is particularly necessary during the winter months because of the fact that people living in rural communities cannot go long distances to projects to work. Now, while I agree that this might be the case for a few months out of the year, still it is my firm conviction that this should be met as an emergency situation and during that period that farmers could not work that they for that month or more be taken care of by grants from the Resettlement Administration and as soon as weather conditions would permit that they be returned to work rolls where they could earn adequate money to provide for the needs of their families.

For us to say that we will loan farmers money, insofar as Oklahoma is concerned, is absurd and ridiculous if we say as we have said in the past that before the farmer could borrow the money he must furnish adequate security for the same, because the farmers of my section of the country who have been fortunate enough to hold around them some livestock or other things of value, have been forced long before this time to mortgage those things of value to obtain money to carry on even to this point. So, in a great majority of cases, you need not think that the farmers of my country can sustain themselves by borrowing the Government's money, and, in a great majority of the cases, even though the Government loaned them the money, unless conditions improve materially over what they now are, it is doubtful that the farmer could repay the loan made to him by the Government.

PEOPLE PREFER TO WORK

And, as for taking care of them by grants, it simply means gifts of money from the Government to them. This system is, of course, better than no assistance at all, but it is impracticable for at least two reasons:

In the first place the farmers of my district and the farmers of the Southwest are not drones and are not lazy and do not want the Government to lay in their hands sums of money for which they have done nothing in return. We are proud people and while necessity, caused by drought, the depression, privation, and want have made it necessary that great numbers of us must seek aid and assistance from the Federal Government, still we much prefer to give the Federal Government a day's work in return for the money that the Government gives us. Also we should prefer that from this work there would grow in our country projects of a permanent nature that would please the eye and cause a beat of pride in the hearts of our children and would form a monument to our labors in this time of depression and justify the Government in the expenditure of these large sums of money.

The other reason that this system is not practicable is: The Resettlement Administration is already loaded with so many clients that during this month grants from the Resettlement Administration have been as low as $5 per family per month, and the average for my entire congressional district has only been $14 per family per month. I am advised that appropriations will not be asked for or made which will make it possible to increase these grants in the future, and I would ask you gentlemen how many of you today would like to look forward to the bright prospect of having to sustain your families, even on a farm, with but $14 per month?

PREFERRED STATUS NEEDED

Our people are thrifty and not afraid of work and will, of course, if they are forced to, find some way to survive with this meager assistance. But this Government is amply able to furnish them more complete assistance by permitting them to work for the money which they receive.

I therefore am hopeful that, if the executive branch of Government does not provide means whereby the rural population of this Nation can work for the money that they receive, this Congress will provide by an act of Congress ways and means which will compel the executive branch of Government to provide work projects for the rural population.

In the outset of these remarks I referred to the fact that my distinguished colleague from Illinois had said that prosperity had returned to the Nation. Well, prosperity has returned to a great portion of these United States, but there are at least a portion of 15 States throughout the middle western section who suffered again last year from the drought, to which prosperity in not even a small measure has returned. I have been advocating, and intend to continue to advocate, and insist that the relief agencies of this Government place these drought States in a preferred class and that the Government give them and their people more assistance and money in larger quantities than it gives to those people who are fortunate enough to be resident in one of the many States in the United States whose crops were above average last year and who have returned to economic stability.

In Oklahoma we suffered a devastating drought which, according to the figures of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, left us with a crop one-half the 10-year average. Most of that half crop that we did raise was wheat, which matured before the drought set in. In the cotton-corn-small-fruit section I represent we did not raise a tenth of an average crop, and in addition the orchards and berry patches which it had taken years to build up were killed out.

CHILDREN OUT OF SCHOOL

I want to commend, in general, the Works Progress Administration and the Resettlement Administration for the relief extended to our farmers. The program of the national officials of these organizations was a good one. It did not work out always as they planned it on paper in national headquarters, and lack of finances also hampered the field directors.

We are going to have to continue extending a helping hand to our farmers, at least until they can make a crop. They want to stay on the land. They know they belong there. They do not ask much—only enough to live on. In one county in my district 1,703 children are out of rural schools because of lack of clothes. It is too late to remedy this now.

There are 15 States wholly or partially in the emergency drought areas defined by the Department of Agriculture. In order to present the needs of these areas for preferential treatment at the hands of relief organizations, a group of Congressmen and Senators from these States have met and organized, and will attempt to work out a legislative and administrative program which we hope will be helpful both to the Congress and to the officials in charge.

I have been honored by my colleagues by being selected as chairman of this group, and the following have been named by me as committeemen to represent the various drought States: Arkansas, Representative John E. Miller; Colorado, Representative John A. Martin; Georgia, Representative Robert Ramspeck; Illinois, Representative Chester Thompson; Indiana, Representative Eugene B. Crowe; Iowa, Representative Vincent F. Harrington; Kansas, Senator Arthur Capper; Kentucky, Representative Brent Spence; Minnesota, Representative Harold Knutson; Missouri, Representative Richard M. Duncan; Montana, Representative James F. O'Connor; Nebraska, Representative Charles F. McLaughlin; New Mexico, Representative John J. Dempsey; North Carolina, Representative Zebulon Weaver; North Dakota, Senator Lynn J. Frazier; Ohio, Representative Byron B. Harlan; Oklahoma, Senator Elmer Thomas; South Carolina, Senator Ellison D. Smith; South Dakota, Representative Fred H. Hildebrandt; Tennessee, Senator Nathan L. Bachman; Texas, Representative Marvin Jones; Virginia, Representative John W. Flannagan, Jr.; West Virginia, Representative George W. Johnson; Wisconsin, Senator F. Ryan Duffy; Wyoming, Representative Paul R. Greever.

I know that the House will cooperate with us in our extremity, and pledge the membership that our organization will request nothing that is not reasonable.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SACKS].

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, as a new Member of Congress I am reluctant to rise at this time, but because of the gravity of the situation I feel I should take a few minutes to tell the Members of the House the situation in my district. I am wholly in accord with the President's attitude, but because of the conditions now existing in my city I feel that the amount carried in this bill for the W. P. A. is not adequate and will not be sufficient to meet the demands.

May I point out that in the last week in the city of Philadelphia from seven to eight thousand new cases have gone on relief, most of them coming from the ranks of those who had worked on W. P. A. and were released because of lack of funds.

The situation in the city of Philadelphia is not being adequately taken care of by the business interests. The people are not finding regular employment, and while I bespeak their thanks, and mine, in acknowledging the graciousness of the President in helping them through an unfortunate situation, they would like to plead with the Members of this body, through me, to increase the amount carried in this deficiency bill. Because of existing conditions they feel that for the next 6 or 7 months ordinary business will not be able to take care of them. My people plead with you and with the administration to continue W. P. A. on the same basis as in the past year, and assure them work and a chance to earn a living.

Mr. Chairman, these people do not want relief. They do not want the dole. They want help. They would rather work than receive, but until such time as they are able to take their place in private enterprise they ask their Government to provide work for them. I am voicing their sentiments in asking you to increase the amount of the appropriation for W. P. A. so that they will not be thrown out on the street and forced back on relief because of lack of employment in private industry.

Therefore, with due deference to the views of the administration as expressed in this bill, my constituents have requested me to advocate a substantially larger amount. I would favor an amendment to increase the appropriation to $1,250,000,000. In my opinion, that amount is necessary to continue W. P. A. at full capacity until such time as industry is able to absorb its full share of employables now out of work.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, it has been stated on the floor today that there are approximately 8,000,000 men and women unemployed in the United States. It is my opinion that if we would adopt the 5-day 6-hour working week it would help considerably to solve the unemployment situation.

President Roosevelt has been unjustly criticized for spending large sums of money which were used to alleviate the suffering of the people of our country. When the President took office 4 years ago, men and women in every congressional district were starving. Mr. Chairman, I believe that every Congressman will have to admit there are no people in his district starving today. This is a tribute to our President. Of course, he is not superhuman and we should not depend altogether on the President to solve this great economic problem. It is up to the Members of Congress, and we can do it if we will. All we need to have is courage.

I am for this bill, and I want to go on record and say that the amount of money specified in this measure is insufficient to take care of the large number of the unemployed. I shall vote for an amendment which will provide the money that is necessary for the continuation of the Works Progress Administration. Every person who is employed on the W. P. A. and every other project which is being undertaken by the Government should receive adequate compensation for the service they rendered, regardless of the kind of work he or she is compelled to do. The time has come in the United States when people who have attained the age of 40 or 45 years are unable to obtain employment. If the owners of industries and other business establishments will not give employment to the people because of their age, then it is the duty of our Government to provide adequately for them. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, in the 1 minute allotted to me may I remind the Members of the House that they ought to read page 152, which is a most significant page in this report. I have before attempted to defend the South, as far as Mr. Hopkins is concerned. On this page 152 is the story. He complained they did not pay in those farming communities a proper wage and tells you indirectly but, nevertheless, rather emphatically there he will keep them on the W. P. A. until you are willing to authorize the payment of a standard wage, which you cannot pay in these farming areas.

Mr. Chairman, I saw men in New Jersey loafing beside the road while tomatoes rotted on the vines because these people would not work for such wages as the farmers could offer to pay. They told me a W. P. A. project would start in a couple of weeks and they could get 40 cents an hour. There is the basic difference of opinion between Mr. Hopkins and the farm sections of the country. Why do you not on that side attempt to defend Mr. Hopkins' position sometimes? I have often tried to get the farmers' representatives to give us their views, but they seem unwilling to state this grievance publicly. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Chairman, the public debt of the United States at the present time is $34,500,000,000, or, in round figures, $35,000,- 000,000. In addition to this there is $5,000,000,000 of guaranties, much of which the Government will have to meet, making nearly $40,000,000,000 of debt for the taxpayers to pay. Since the present administration went into power there has been an expenditure of approximately $30,000,000,000, with tax revenues of less than $15,000,000,000.

We have come to the point in American history where practically 20 percent of the people are upon relief or relief employment. The cost of these operations has continually mounted. For relief in 1936 there was an expenditure, according to the Budget, of approximately $2,777,000,000. There will be an expenditure in 1937 of $2,816,000,000. People have been encouraged to be supported by the Government rather than to believe that it was the duty of the people to support the Government.

We are in a condition where, unless a tendency in the direction of lower expenditures is immediately manifest, it is going to be impossible to provide a way to balance the governmental Budget.

We are in the throes of inflation, brought about by the tremendous spending and the increase in public debt. This continued unbalanced Budget and mounting debt is characteristic not of a progressive or a liberal but of decadent reaction. It can have but one result, the destruction of the opportunity of the young man of today to make something of himself, to have that opportunity which was given to the older generation, about to pass off the scene.

Through the operations of the N. R. A., the tax program, the spending program, and governmental control of business it has been made increasingly difficult for the small man to do business. It has been made increasingly difficult for the small man to obtain credit, and the result of the whole situation is that while large corporations are showing paper profits, the small businesses are still unable to obtain credit and bring about the reemployment of our people. On the one hand we have the President demanding that industry place the people at work, and on the other hand we have the President promoting a scheme of spending the people's money in such a way that the debt and taxes are an insuperable burden to the small businessman and manufacturer in his efforts to put those back to work whom he has been accustomed to employ.

I want to see relief taken care of where it is necessary, and taken care of in a decent way, but this country can no longer undertake to carry on as it has been carrying on the last 3 years.

The President, through his Budget estimates, has attempted to cut down some of the expenditures which have been made in the past. He has not cut down far enough, in my opinion, and I am going to analyze the bill that we have before us in such a way as to demonstrate to you thoroughly that sufficient cuts have not yet been made. The Budget estimates for the regular departments of the Government, the way they are set up to us, already call for an estimated deficit of approximately $1,000,000,000. There is going to be tremendous pressure on the part of those who believe the Government should support its people to continue the mounting cost of government. The question is, Will the Executive have the courage to go down the line and stop this mounting cost of government? Unless he is prepared to show signs of real courage and real patriotism it is going to be impossible to meet our obligations and our tax liabilities.

I have given this warning. I am hopeful that it will be heeded by the administration and the party in power.

If they would show a real desire to reduce the cost of government and reduce the burdens of the people, and show that they really want to put the American workingman back to work at legitimate employment, they would have my wholehearted support in their efforts at economy. If they fail to make an honest effort for economy, I propose to call attention to it and to propose cuts in appropriations.

I am now going to discuss the merits of the bill before fore us and point out to you, insofar as I am able, the situation that confronts us immediately.

I would not for one moment suggest the cutting down of a legitimate appropriation required for relief. Anything that is actually required to take care of real needed relief that the localities are actually unable to cope with, and anything that is required to take care of the emergency situations, such as the current flood, will have my wholehearted support.

Frankly, my experience with the W. P. A., my examination of their projects and of the manner in which their work has been conducted, has made me feel that the sooner it was over with the better for the country. I have noticed total inefficiency in the manner and method of work, which completely demoralizes the worker, costs so much to complete a project, that it has become a menace to the community and to those who participate in it. On top of that, I know it was used for political purposes in my locality. I am advised that it was in other localities.

Vast quantities of propaganda were sent out by these organizations. I have a few sample exhibits here, but these are just an infinitesimal portion of the results of the 5,500 employees whose efforts were devoted to publicity.

Enormous quantities of funds are being used to carry on projects in the Agricultural, Interior, War, and Treasury Departments for which funds were not approved. Most of these projects are bad. Most of these are things for which Federal funds should not be allotted.

The following is a break-down of what it is proposed to do with the money:

The W. P. A. caring for 2,200,000 employees in February and 1,600,000 in June	$650,000,000
To provide relief through the Resettlement Administration for relief and loans to 1,425,000 farmers alleged to be drought sufferers	80,000,000
For continuation of departmental activities previously denied by Congress	40,000,000
For overhead and administrative expenses	15,000,000

In my opinion, the whole $790,000,000 could better be cut to $500,000,000, and then we would have funds enough to meet any situation.

We must get away from wasteful relief operated on the basis of further demoralizing our people.

We must balance our Federal Budget. I am prepared to help try to do that. I am prepared to go as far as any man in making sacrifices to pull my country out of the hole.

Nothing has done so much to prevent recovery as these tremendous expenditures. Today it is the major menace which prevents the small-business man from starting something.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MAY. There is one feature of this question I have not heard presented in this debate. Today our interest-bearing debt is $35,000,000,000, and as I recall, the Budget estimate is for a further deficit of $2,500,000,000 at the end of the fiscal year. When we are approaching a $40,000,000,000 deficit, if the credit of the Government should become impaired or with war clouds hanging over the world, if we should become involved in a war, might we not reach the point where we would do infinitely greater injury to the relief people by getting ourselves in a position where we could not provide any relief for them?

Mr. TABER. We have done that already, in my opinion.

Mr. MAY. Not yet.

Mr. TABER. And the tremendous expenditure we have made is the thing that is now preventing the small-business man and the small manufacturer from getting back to the employment that they provided in the past when business was running along. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, the administration of the relief fund has been seriously attacked. This means an attack on Mr. Hopkins. He has been designated as the greatest spender in the world. No doubt he is, but the money has been entrusted to him and the command has been given to him to go forth and spend this money for the relief of unemployed and suffering humanity. This is exactly what he has done and he deserves no criticism for it. I have observed him. While I have not approved all the projects that he or some of his officials have adopted, I may state to the House that considering the fact he occupies the most trying, the most difficult, and the most annoying position in this Government, he has made a great administrator.

[Applause.] He has the intestinal fortitude to say "No" when he thinks he ought to say "No", and he has the courage to grant relief when some people think he should not grant relief. In other words, his conscience is his guide, and whenever you have a man in public life who follows his conscience, you have a faithful public servant. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment to the widow of Marion A. Zioncheck, late a Representative from the State of Washington, $10,000.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM: Page 2, after line 11, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"For payment to the widow of Andrew J. Montague, late a Representative from the State of Virginia, $10,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To continue to provide relief and work relief as authorized in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936, and subject to all the provisions thereof, $790,000,000, which amount shall be added to, and proportionately increase the specified amounts of the limitations prescribed under the appropriation made in such act: Provided, That no part of this appropriation or of the appropriation in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936 shall be used hereafter to pay the compensation of any person not taken from relief rolls, detailed or loaned for service in connection with any investigation or inquiry undertaken by any committee of either House of Congress under special resolution thereof.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Page 3, line 21, strike out "$790,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$500,000,000."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment with the idea that we might taper off the W. P. A. and get down to honest relief managed by our local communities for those who need it, and properly take care of them and not burden the Treasury in such a way that we will be doing a greater damage to the working man and the poor man than if we should go on with the extravagant methods of spending money that we have followed so long.

I hope the Committee will adopt this amendment and that we can begin to shut down and put the brakes on the spending program which has been going on for so long.

Mr. Chairman, there is not a great deal to be said on this subject, except that everywhere there is a failure on the part of most folks to realize that this Government of ours is piling up such a debt that we will never be able to get away from it, and it will get out of control and destroy the ability and the opportunity of the Government to take care of needed things. Let us take care of just what we need to do and not waste the people's money that is entrusted to us.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the Committee will adopt this amendment.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. Chairman, I trust this amendment offered by my distinguished colleague from New York will not prevail. I trust that such work-creating agencies that have proven successful in the past will be continued in some form or other by action of this Congress.

We must remember that we are living in a machine age. There are approximately 10,000,000 people without work in the United States, and that that number is increasing by the addition of some 500,000 who become of working age each year. W. P. A. provides work for 2,500,000 of these.

We must remember that if we saddle the debt on our local communities by an attempt to balance our Budget, that we unbalance the budgets of hundreds of our municipalities and millions of our people.

We must remember that it is becoming increasingly difficult for the youth of America to find employment, and that a man over 40 years of age is an outcast once he becomes unemployed.

Talk about balancing the Federal Budget! If you do, you are unbalancing the budget of millions of our people who cannot find work.

The public and private indebtedness of all the people of the United States is less by far than when President Roosevelt took over the administration in 1933. I say to you that the aggregate indebtedness of the country is much lower and that we are in better position to meet our obligations than we were in 1932.

I ask you to discount the expert advice which tells us that the only way out is to balance the Budget and return to the gold standard and leave relief to our local communities.

We have suffered enough from that philosophy. We had all those conditions back in 1931, 1932, and 1933. I ask you to compare conditions today with those of a few years back.

Not only have we improved by comparison with our own situation of a few years ago but we are also much better off than any other industrial country on earth. Check the capital city of every country and you will find there that which we hope never will occur here—uncertainty, civil strife, unrest, oppression, revolt, and, in one or two cases, real Red revolution and civil war. Look how they attempted to solve their economic problems. They enrolled their surplus manhood in the military of those countries, and as a result they engaged in the destructive purposes of war, while we, by placing the youth of our country in our Civilian Conservation Camps and our men and women in the W. P. A., in P. W. A., and on housing projects, enrolled our surplus manhood in the gainful and productive occupations of peace. We enjoy a prosperity in this country that lifts the standard of living of our people above and beyond that of any other country in the world. Their attempts to solve their economic difficulties, unlike the efforts we made in this country, have not been successful. Over there they have unstable or radical or violent or oppressive government, while we have maintained real representative democratic government here. Our plan is best; let us keep it. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask unanimous consent that debate upon this amendment close in 5 minutes. There will be other amendments to be discussed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that debate upon this amendment close in 5 minutes.

Mr. MAVERICK. I shall object, because I have an amendment that I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair states to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] that the unanimous-consent request does not apply to the paragraph but to this particular amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object. Will this in any way prohibit debate on the substitute amendment to be offered to this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. This request confines itself to this amendment.

Mr. BOILEAU. And we can offer substitutes to this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands and will so rule. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIROVICH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. SIROVICH. I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, for almost a decade I have listened to the distinguished, lovable Chaplain of the House of Representatives as he daily opens our proceedings with prayer. Very often I have heard him implore divine Providence to protect the American home and all that goes with it. To me the home is the symbol of our American institution. It is the foundation upon which the superstructure of our Nation must rest. On the wall of every humble as well as great home is the sentiment, "God bless our home." To protect it we are ready to sacrifice life and everything that we hold near and dear. The home is hallowed with memories that we always revere. As go the parents, so go the children. As go the children, so goes the home. As goes the home, so goes the nation, the world, and civilization. Destroy the home and you destroy government and all that it stands for.

The object, the mission, and the purpose of the New Deal is to preserve the American home.

The distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], who is ranking minority member of the great Committee on Appropriations, has just spoken on his amendment to reduce the appropriation of $795,000,000 for the relief of the unemployed to $500,000,000. I think this amendment is grossly unjust, unfair, and undeserving to the millions of self-respecting Americans who are the tragic victims of our economic depression, and who are looking for an opportunity to preserve and keep intact their humble homes. It is such amendments as this that have been the great contributing factor that is responsible for 46 out of 48 States of the Union in repudiating the action of the leaders of the Republican minority. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, $795,000,000 is not sufficient to provide for 10,000,000 men and women who are still unemployed, helpless, and hopeless, with no immediate prospects for bettering their social and economic condition. We ought to increase this appropriation to at least $1,000,000,000 so that no American workingman or self-respecting laborer should feel that his wife and children are in want or in hunger.

Mr. Chairman, an unemployed person is one who, through no fault of his own, has lost his job and is able and willing to work. This excludes the sick, the aged, the injured, the mentally defective, strikers, and those who do not want to work. Each of these cases presents a definite social problem.

In 1930, under the administration of President Hoover, 20,000,000 Americans were unemployed. Hunger, misery, starvation, and pessimism permeated the Nation. We were told by the Republican Party that the municipalities, cities, and States should provide for their helpless and tragic social and economic victims of our industrial depression. That policy was pursued by the Republican Party until the States and cities were bankrupt.

In 1933, when President Roosevelt was inaugurated, thousands of banks were closed. Twenty million were unemployed. Revolution was in the air. It was the great humanitarian activities of our beloved President Franklin D. Roosevelt that brought relief into the home, hearth, and fireside of every American citizen so that their children should not starve and the home should be preserved. That policy must continue. Every self-respecting American who is willing to work and cannot find work must be provided for by our Government until industry absorbs them. I stand unequivocally for that formula. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, under the economic philosophy of the Republican administrations of Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover, we found two kinds of wages prevalent throughout the industrial sections of our Nation: First, starvation wages, which were not sufficient to keep body and soul together, which was responsible for developing anemic children and undernourishment and malnutrition amongst our adult population; second, living wages, which just about kept body and soul together. If we adopt the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] for $500,000,000 relief, we would again provide starvation wages for the unemployed in our Republic. I am in favor of giving to every able-bodied workingman in our country, willing to work and unable to be absorbed by modern industry, sufficient funds that will maintain his self-respect and ultimately help to provide the American standard of democratic wages that will be sufficient in times of prosperity and affluence to provide for days of adversity and misfortune.

Mr. Chairman, as a Democratic Representative of a great congressional district, I want to go on record that I am only in favor of relief as an emergency measure in times of strain and distress. The dole is obnoxious and offensive to our American citizens. The American workingman demands that the Government, through its economic philosophy, make it possible for its citizens to work in the quarry of labor so that they might become self-respecting and self-supporting Americans. To that end President Roosevelt has dedicated and consecrated his new program during the next 4 years, so that one-third of our population, as he said, that was ill-fed, ill-housed, and ill-paid must be eliminated from our midst in order that our Republic might endure. To that philosophy I subscribe. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely trust that the amendment of the distinguished ranking Republican member of the Committee on Appropriations does not prevail.

Mr. VOORHIS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer a substitute amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers a substitute amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOORHIS as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Page 3, line 21, after the words "subject to all the provisions thereof", strike out "$790,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000,000,000."

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, you all know this is the first time I have asked to speak to this body. I am deeply impressed with the point of view of those who would like to see this Nation able to go back to the time when each individual person in this country, by his own effort, might carve out for himself a reasonable chance to get ahead. I wish that, too; but I am profoundly conscious of the fact that we have passed that time and that we cannot go back to it.

I am somewhat astonished to hear certain remarks about the fact that we have idle dollars and idle men, and we ought to be able to put them together, when those remarks come from the side of the House which was responsible for the kind of policies that led to 1929. I submit that business was left strictly alone in the years preceding 1929. If there ever was a time when it was possible to prove that if business were left alone the problems of the people could be solved, it was then. But they were not solved. It ill behooves people to criticize an effort made for the first time in American history by a great administration to try to bring back together these idle hands and idle money. What else has been the program of the administration?

I offered this amendment for the reason that I cannot possibly conceive how our people's needs can be taken care of for a dime less. I am conscious of the fact that we need much more, but I am likewise conscious of the fact that this is the very minimum we can take. I am willing to vote for a larger appropriation now, not because I am unconscious of the need to balance the Budget, because I believe in good time we must do that, but there is another way to do it than by depriving the poor people of this country of their pittance. There is a way to do it by putting the taxes where they can be borne, and balance the Budget up instead of trying to balance it down.

I am for Government economy, but not for Government economy in the bread and butter of the people. I submit that the most fundamental thing that has caused such recovery as we have had up to this time is the fact that it has been the policy of this administration to bolster the basic purchasing power of the poorest farmer, the poorest wage earner, and the unemployed people in this country. I hope that will continue. I hope we will not make the same mistake as was made at the last period of recovery, when every effort was made to cut income taxes and no effort was made to deal with that problem of unemployment which everybody confesses then existed.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. How much of the money provided by the gentleman's amendment would go for W. P. A.?

Mr. VOORHIS. I have found no way to make this amendment provide that some of it could go to resettlement, or I would have done so.

Mr. BOILEAU. If the gentleman will withdraw his amendment, I will offer an amendment that will provide it.

Mr. VOORHIS. I just want to finish this one thought. There are hundreds of thousands of people who, due to the distresses that have overtaken this country, have been compelled to leave their homes and travel to other places. It would not do any good to say, "Why don't you go back home?" when their homes are flooded. In one calendar year in California we had 87,000 families brought to that State for these reasons, and I believe in many cases they were good reasons, and that those people are not just cheap wanderers, but people seeking new homes and new opportunity in the good old American way.

While Mr. Hopkins says he will take care of that transient problem, I know he can only do it if he has the funds with which to do it. They will have to be put in the laps of a few communities, one of which is my own, unless adequate funds are provided for that purpose. I recognize the fact that we have to go to the fundamentals of this problem, and that it would not do to just skim over the surface of it, but one of these fundamentals must necessarily be the provision of a Government program of public works for the employment of the unemployed people. We must some day discover the number of people actually unemployed, and the actual number of opportunities for them in private industry.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Does not the gentleman regard spending through the W. P. A. as a wise national investment?

Mr. VOORHIS. I do.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Is it not true that every writer on economics has said that in times of depression there should be a sane public-building program?

Mr. VOORHIS. That is true. I am not asking that this money be given to people. I am asking that it be used to employ people on the most efficient kind of work that can be organized. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. I desire to offer a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair refuses to recognize the point of order, but if the gentleman from Wisconsin offers a preferential motion, under the rules the Chair would have to recognize the gentleman.

Mr. BOILEAU. I thank the Chairman, and I desire to offer that preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BOILEAU moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to be in a position where it is necessary to offer this motion in order to get time. However, I believe it is very important for the purpose of clarifying the question before us.

The gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] is undoubtedly intending to provide sufficient funds for W. P. A., but I doubt that his amendment accomplishes the desired result.

The gentleman's amendment would increase the total from $790,000,000 up to $1,000,000,000, an increase of $210,000,000. Under the wording of this paragraph of the bill, however, this money would be apportioned among the various agencies described in the so-called Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1936; the increase of $210,000,000 would not all go to W. P. A. I submit, therefore, that although the gentleman's intentions are undoubtedly to give this additional amount to W. P. A., his amendment would not accomplish the desired result.

I submit further, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman's amendment does not provide ample funds for rural rehabilitation. I believe, as the gentleman expressed himself on the floor, he is sympathetic to the idea of providing funds for rural rehabilitation. If he wants to increase the amount to what is necessary as I believe he views the necessity, then this fund will have to be increased way beyond $1,000,000,000. It will be necessary to state in the amendment the amount that is to be allocated for Works Progress, and especially the amount that is to be allocated for rural rehabilitation, because without a specific reference to the amount to be allocated for resettlement, not much will go to that agency to carry on the program. In view of the fact the gentleman expressed the desire, in reply to my question, to assist rural rehabilitation, I desire to state that if he wants to do this he should perfect his amendment to increase the amount from $1,000,000,000 to $1,499,000,000 and include a provision that $1,040,000,000 shall go to Works Progress and that $404,000,000 shall go for rural rehabilitation.

Several of my colleagues have asked me to request the gentleman to withdraw his amendment so this other amendment can be offered. I do not desire to make that request of him, but desire to point out that if he does feel that it is necessary to have that amount for Works Progress and for Rural Rehabilitation I shall offer an amendment which I have prepared and which, in my judgment, is germane, or I shall be very glad to have him offer it himself if he wishes to.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to permit the gentleman from California to submit a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, would an amendment which provided a specific allocation of a certain amount to the Resettlement Administration be germane to the measure?

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, the gentleman has not submitted a proper parliamentary inquiry, for the Chair would be in the position of advising the gentleman before the amendment was offered for the consideration of the Chair. If such an amendment is offered and the matter is called to the Chair's attention, the Chair will undertake to render the proper ruling.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement expressed by the gentleman from California—and I think the Members of the House want to know the parliamentary situation—Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from California will withdraw his amendment and permit me to offer my amendment. If my amendment should be ruled out of order, I am sure a way can be found to permit him to offer his amendment again.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, would it be agreeable to the gentleman from California to withdraw his amendment and to offer the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. VOORHIS. I shall be very glad to do that. I am willing to withdraw my amendment temporarily, if I may do so.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The gentleman cannot do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not aware that any question has been presented to the Chair. The Chair, therefore, has no question on which to rule.

The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment I have at the Clerk's desk be substituted for the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, we have not yet voted on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin to discharge the Committee, rise, and do nothing about the matter under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that this motion is still before the Committee.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion.

Mr. Chairman, I merely take this time in order to see if we cannot clarify the situation. The gentleman from Wisconsin has an amendment which he has offered. This amendment may be ruled out of order.

Mr. BOILEAU. Just a minute.

Mr. CONNERY. I mean I am afraid it may be ruled out of order. The gentleman from California has an amendment in which I am inclined to feel he seeks to do what the gentleman from Wisconsin wants done—increase funds for the W. P. A.—but which I fear, from the way it is drawn, will not accomplish the purpose. I was going to suggest to the gentleman from California that he withdraw his amendment; then I am hopeful that the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin to offer his amendment; then, if that should be ruled out of order, the gentleman from California could reoffer his amendment. [Laughter.] I am trying to get an increase in funds for W. P. A.

Whether it can be done by the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin or by the amendment offered by the gentleman from California, either will suit me.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. I am sure in my own mind the amendment is germane, and I am sure that the Chairman will hold that it is germane. May I ask the gentleman from California to bear in mind, permission to withdraw his amendment having been refused, if his amendment is defeated nothing can prevent him from offering another amendment calling for the sum of $1,100,000,000 or a sufficient amount for what the gentleman believes to be a proper apportionment for the W. P. A.

Mr. CONNERY. What will the gentleman's amendment do as far as increasing the amount allowed for the W. P. A.?

Mr. BOILEAU. It would increase the amount from $650,000,000 to $1,040,000,000. It would increase the amount allowed for rural rehabilitation up to $404,000,000.

Mr. CONNERY. I am in favor of the amendment. I hope that the gentleman from California will withdraw his amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, with the permission of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] that his amendment be withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the Committee is the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] that the Committee do now rise.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU]?

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BUCHANAN) there were—ayes 1, noes 176.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pending amendment.

Mr. Chairman, for political purposes it may be all right to endeavor to amend this bill, but our votes and our arguments today on this matter are going back home, and the people of the Nation are going to have their eyes on us. The greatest humanitarian in the world today is President Roosevelt. He is the man who initiated this relief program. He has gone further, so far as relief is concerned, than any man in the United States, or the world. Further than anyone ever attempted to go before or ever dreamed of.

The conditions were such that he deemed it necessary to proceed as he did. We have given him the money, and the Nation its approval. You cannot legislate on the floor of this House, as the older Members know and as the younger Members will soon find out. Who knows at this time how much money we will need for relief during the next 5 months? No one in the House except members of the Appropriations Committee who have given the subject serious consideration.

Mr. Chairman, the Appropriations Committee of the House is one of the most important committees in the world. The members of that committee are unanimous in recommending only $790,000,000, and that ought to be sufficient.

Who is it that wants to change it? Who is it that made the Budget? The President of the United States made up the Budget. He said this is all the money we need, and by making that statement he means that is all the money we are going to spend between now and the 1st day of July this year unless the unexpected might occur.

This House is overwhelmingly Democratic today because many of the Democratic Members rode in on the coattail of Roosevelt. Now, some Members in the House want to show that they are bigger than our great Chief Executive, who has pulled us out of this terrible depression. With little information they want to appropriate more relief money than he deems necessary.

Mr. Chairman, if we were to vote a billion dollars, he would not stand for it, and if he did approve the bill, he would not allocate the money, except to the extent of $790,000,000. We talk about where this money is going. Under the law as it now stands the President of the United States has the authority, and he will allocate every dime of the $790,000,000, and the money will go just exactly where he wants it to go. It is up to him to make the decision.

This is the first deficiency bill to be offered in this session, and, if I am not mistaken, we will probably have two or more before we get through. If more is needed, we can then appropriate it. Why cater to a demand for higher wages? Why cater to a certain element and give more money in order to put more people on relief when our great President, in whom the people of our country have confidence, is asking the Congress to balance the Budget and get back to our old normal way of living? At the same time we are taking care of the people who cannot take care of themselves. To me it is foolishness to try to be bigger than the President and endeavor to have appropriated more money than he and his agencies, as well as our great Appropriation Committee, asks. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The last word of what?

Mr. MAVERICK. Of the pending amendment; in other words, the amendment the gentleman was talking on.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman refer to the Taber amendment?

Mr. MAVERICK. No; I am speaking of the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

NEW MEMBERS SHOULD NOT BE INTIMIDATED

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I seldom rise in this Chamber to personally criticize a colleague. But I believe the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER] has just said a very ungracious thing, about a new Member speaking. Also the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER] again spoke, as he spoke last year, of men being elected "on the coattails of Roosevelt." I do not like that allusion. I doubt if the President likes it. I doubt if anyone likes it, except the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER]. He spoke of his great friendship for the President of the United States, but how did he vote on the holding-company bill last year? How about the Guffey-Snyder coal bill? The gentleman says that a man should not talk, because he is a new Member of Congress. I want to state here that a new Member has as much right to talk as an old Member. [Applause.] Not only this, but a progressive Member or a radical Member or a reactionary Member has as much right to talk as the gentleman from Arkansas. This is a perennial talk, this criticism of new Members, by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER].

Worse, it is very tiresome talk. The gentleman rises here and says that we should not talk politics, especially a new Member. What did he talk? He talked politics just like anybody else—and that is what I am talking and that is what everybody has a right to talk, and it is all right.

I think the time has come on this floor when the older Members of this Congress do not intimidate the younger Members. [Applause.]

I have only been here one term, and I started representing my people when I first came here, and I am still doing it—a little better now.

THE COATTAILS OF "ROOSEVELT"

I may say further that this same gentleman rose on the floor here and said that I came here on the coattails of Roosevelt my first term. Well, I did not my first term—that was not true—but it was true this last time, and I am damned proud of it. [Laughter and applause.] Suppose we did come in here on the coattails of "Roosevelt." I do not have to agree with everything that the President says; nor does any honest man. "Roosevelt", as he is referred to by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER], is probably wrong on neutrality. He may be wrong on this particular bill, and the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] has introduced a resolution sincerely, honestly, and capably. He has brought it out, and he deserves attention from this floor, and, as far as I am concerned, I am going to vote with the gentleman from California, because he is all right, and what he said is all right, and a lot better than what the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER] said. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. AMLIE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have heard a great many times the statement made by responsible leaders of the majority party that no one will be permitted to starve.

Last spring at the conference of social workers held at Atlantic City one of the speakers made the statement that in one county in the United States 79 people during the past year had died of starvation. I tried to find out the name of the county and its location. I was unable to do so. At the suggestion, however, of a friend in the P. W. A. I got in touch with Father John Mulroy, head of the Catholic Charities in the State of Colorado. I asked him if he could enlighten me. He said he could not, but he went down to the department of vital statistics for Denver County and he sent me 10 verified death certificates of citizens of Denver County who, in the past year, had died of starvation.

In my county people have died of starvation during the last few years. I may say that there is not a Member here who has not had people die of starvation in his district. If he does not know about it, it is because he is not familiar with the conditions that affect the lives of the submerged population in his district.

I am getting rather tired of this hypocrisy of responsible people getting up here and saying that no one is going to be permitted to be left to want. If 10 verified death certificates from one county, showing that a year ago 10 people in that county died of starvation, is not proof, then I do not know what proof consists of.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AMLIE. Yes.

Mr. HARLAN. Does the gentleman know whether those deaths resulted from a lack of Federal funds or from neglect of local relief agencies? Of course, the gentleman, I suppose, would see that it is possible for a man or a number of people to die with plenty of funds available, if the local agencies did not use them.

Mr. AMLIE. That, of course, is true. I know, of course, parents will make every effort to get relief to keep their families alive. I know that the President in this Chamber only 2 years ago made the statement that the Federal Government would provide work for the employable unemployed. I know today there are approximately 800,000 employable unemployed who have not been taken care of, who have been turned back to the local municipalities, and that this fact has served to reduce the relief allowances all over the United States from approximately $28 a month to $20 a month; that approximately 1,500,000 families have had their living standards reduced because of the failure of this administration to live up to the promises that were made 2 years ago.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. AMLIE. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. Did these people who starved apply for relief and were they refused?

Mr. AMLIE. They were all children. I am sure parents make every effort to get relief for their children.

Mr. PATMAN. Does the gentleman say that their parents applied for relief and were refused?

Mr. AMLIE. I do not know the facts, but I would be willing to say that that is the fact. I am sure that is the fact. I know that this gentleman, who is the head of Catholic charities in Colorado, is a responsible man and in fact quite a conservative man.

Mr. PATMAN. But the gentleman does not know himself and has no information himself about that?

Mr. AMLIE. No; but I may say I do know of my own knowledge of people who have starved in my own district and died as a result of starvation.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AMLIE. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I happen to live in the State of Colorado and I happen to know the man the gentleman is talking about, and I wish to state to the Members of this House that there has been nobody who starved in the State of Colorado. There has never been a minute since this program was started when there were not funds in the State to take care of the poor, and they have all been taken care of, and I do not care who says they have not.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. AMLIE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to file in the RECORD merely one verified death certificate of a person who died in Colorado of starvation this past year.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The death certificate follows:

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the present status all time has expired. Without objection, the pro-forma amendment will be withdrawn. The gentleman from Virginia moves to strike out the last two words. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia for 5 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I believe the debate we have had for the last 30 or 40 minutes has demonstrated very clearly how impossible it would be for the "greatest legislative body in the world" to undertake to go into minute details and legislate directly and specifically on this subject of relief and work relief.

Your committee has gone into the matter very carefully, not representing one side of the aisle but both sides of the aisle, with long days of patient hearings, a committee that is sympathetic in the desire to render assistance to needy people.

Now, gentlemen, your committee comes to you with the proposition to appropriate $790,000,000. It would not do any good if you put $2,000,000,000 in the bill. No more is going to be used than is necessary to carry out the program, and the President and the relief administrator say that that is all the fund they need.

I submit to you, is it not a useless gesture in the beginning of a session of Congress, a Congress interested in the alleviation of human suffering, and withal a Congress that owes a duty to the country and its taxpayers in trying to reasonably conserve its assets? Would it not be a useless gesture to attempt to put in a lot of money in this bill that nobody needs at the present time?

Now, the gentleman says that people have died of starvation in this land. In God's name what kind of people were there in that community? For my part I do not believe any instance of that kind happened.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield? Did the gentleman mean to imply that anyone in Denver, Colo., was allowed to die of starvation if they made known their necessities to the authorities? It is not true.

Mr. WOODRUM. I am confident it is untrue—no community would allow 5 or 10 people to starve to death.

But, Mr. Chairman, going further, let me say this: It is a duty resting upon the welfare associations in the communities to make known to the Federal Administrator what their needs for relief are. The money is in Washington, Mr. Hopkins has the money, the President has the money, and if the people in that district need it they can get it if they make the proper showing. I appeal to this committee on behalf of your Appropriations Committee to vote down all of these amendments. My good friend from New York [Mr. TABER] goes down to the bottom, the extreme. Some of our other friends want $1,000,000,000, others $1,400,000,000, this, that, and the other. The people who are doing the job—and many of us think doing a reasonably good job; and it is a bad situation no matter who does the job—say that $790,000,000 is enough. I appeal to the House in overwhelming numbers to express their confidence in that and support the committee in its report.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the Voorhis amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DUNN) there were—ayes 51, noes 130.

So the substitute amendment was rejected.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer my amendment as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU as a substitute for amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On page 3, line 21, after the comma following the word "thereof", strike out "$790,000,000", all of lines 22 and 23, and line 24 down to and including the word "act" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$1,499,000,000, which amount shall be added to the appropriation made in such act, not less than $1,040,000,000 of which amount shall be allocated to the Works Progress Administration for the purpose of continuing work relief, and not less than $404,000,000 of which amount shall be used for rural rehabilitation, loans, and direct relief to farmers and livestock owners; the balance to be used to proportionately increase the specified limitations prescribed under the provisions of the said Emergency Relief Appropriations Act of 1936."

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, some gentlemen were kind enough to listen to my remarks during the general debate upon this subject, in which I explained the purposes of the amendment that I proposed to offer at the proper time. This is the amendment to which I referred in my previous remarks. This amendment, if adopted, will substitute in place of the figures "$790,000,000" the figures "$1,499,000,000", and will allocate very definitely for Works Progress Administration the amount of $1,040,000,000. One billion and forty million dollars is the amount needed to carry on the W. P. A. for the remainder of the fiscal year, if the Administration is to establish a minimum of $40 a month and a general increase of 20 percent in wages paid to W. P. A. workers, and also provide employment during that period for 2,800,000 men. Those are figures that I understand have been furnished by the W. P. A. officials.

As I understand it, and I think no gentleman from the committee will dispute it, the intent is, with the appropriation of $790,000,000, to gradually reduce the number of men working on W. P. A. until there are only 1,600,000 on the rolls in June. Mr. Chairman, we have not yet reached the point of recovery where we can say to these people that we think they should be kicked out of W. P. A. employment. This amendment will put 2,800,000 men and women of approximately 8,000,000 unemployed back to work at a slightly higher wage, which might be properly called a mere subsistence wage.

In addition, my amendment also appropriates for rural rehabilitation $404,000,000. It is estimated that that amount is needed, if you take those rural families who are now almost destitute and merely assist them a little bit in becoming rehabilitated, in the hope that they will be self-sustaining in the near future. It will be a good investment. This amendment increases the appropriation by $709,000,000, but if you want to meet the challenge of unemployment and give to these people genuine assistance, you cannot do it with a measly $790,000,000.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. And now with these floods in the Mississippi Valley rehabilitation will be more necessary than ever.

Mr. BOILEAU. I thank the gentleman for his contribution, because the W. P. A. and Resettlement Administration will be called upon to go into that great area and give assistance to those people, and a large number of those people can be assisted from this appropriation and the funds will be readily available when needed.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that this amendment will put 2,000,000 people to work?

Mr. BOILEAU. It provides sufficient funds to put 2,800,000 men and women to work.

Mr. DUNN. And if the amount proposed in the bill, $790,000,000, goes into effect, it will reduce the force to approximately 1,000,000?

Mr. BOILEAU. One million six hundred thousand, whereas in November last year there were approximately 2,500,000 working, with an estimated number of 300,000 employables looking for work, who could not get work on the W. P. A. pay rolls, even at that time, which was before the curtailing program began.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. MAVERICK. How much is given to agricultural rehabilitation?

Mr. BOILEAU. Four hundred and four million.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I would ask the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. As I understand, this money is to be spent entirely in the discretion of the President, so that he may use it as he sees fit. Is that true?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is placed in the discretion of the President, subject to certain limitations for allocation of certain percentages on relief projects, the relief projects being mentioned in the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Would it be possible for the President to allocate this money or any part of it to strikers who are voluntarily on strike and out of employment?

Mr. BUCHANAN. If they are on the relief rolls; yes.

Mr. MICHENER. If they are on the relief roll. Take people who want to work, who are prevented from working by a strike.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If they are on the relief roll, he can give them money.

Mr. MICHENER. Those people would then have to go on the relief roll in order to get any money?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly. The entire purpose of this appropriation is to give work to those on relief.

Mr. MICHENER. Was any discussion had at the hearings with reference to this question, which is a vital question to American industry and American workmen at this very moment? Was there any consideration given to that matter by the committee in the hearings?

Mr. BUCHANAN. To the strike situation?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes. And the use of relief money to maintain strikes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. No.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman is worried about strikers going and asking for relief. The labor unions keep their men off of W. P. A. and off of relief.

Mr. MICHENER. But I am also thinking about the man who wants to work, the man who does not belong to a labor union. I am thinking of the thousands of people in Michigan today in the automobile industry who are trying to work, who want to work, but who are prevented by the strikers, and the gentleman tells me that they must humiliate themselves by going on the relief roll or else they must starve.

Mr. CONNERY. I did not say anything about them. I am talking about the labor unions.

Mr. MICHENER. I am talking about the majority of people who want to work in Michigan right now. I am endorsing the policy of the American Federation of Labor in connection with this strike right now.

Mr. CONNERY. The American Federation of Labor men do not go on relief and they do not go on W. P. A. They do not think the wages are anywhere near decent enough to go on either of them.

Mr. MICHENER. That is possibly true. It is true if the gentleman from Massachusetts says so.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM. Did I understand the gentleman to say he was speaking for the American Federation of Labor?

Mr. MICHENER. No. The gentleman from Virginia misunderstood me. I said I was speaking for the policy of the American Federation of Labor as applied to the automobile strikes in Michigan today. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] speaks for the American Federation of Labor on the floor of this body.

The situation is anomalous. All my information from Michigan indicates clearly that a vast majority of those working for the General Motors Corporation in Michigan do not want to strike. They have good jobs at good wages—wages far above most industries—are satisfied, and want the right to support their families according to the American standard.

As against this majority group, a small minority, following the lead of this new labor dictator, seeks not only to control their own destinies but has adopted a new method of strike technique in America. They have taken absolute possession of the property of the employers. They refuse to permit the owners to have physical control of their own property. The employers refuse to negotiate until they are restored to the possession of their own plants. The State militia has been called to the seat of most of this difficulty, and we are advised that it is the purpose of the militia to maintain a status quo condition. This must mean that the "sitters-down" are to be permitted to remain in the plants; that the employers are to keep the plants comfortably heated, and the troops must see to it that the friends of the strikers are permitted to come daily with their food and other necessities.

It would seem that no reasoning person can justify the unlawful taking possession of another's property, as is being done in this instance. Let me say to the House that these automobile strikes are not sponsored by the American Federation of Labor, and, in my judgment, if this type of strike is successful, the American Federation of Labor will yield its supremacy to the John Lewis type of organization. A fight against this strike is not only a fight for constitutional rights as we have always known them, but it is primarily a fight for the more conservative labor movement in America.

Of course, I believe in organized labor and collective bargaining. I think all students of present-day conditions must agree with me. We may talk about human rights as against property rights, but let us not forget that to destroy property rights means to destroy our system of government, and that under that system labor enjoys the greatest liberties, the greatest prosperity, and the greatest advantages of any people on earth. We have too much class hatred already, and it is to be hoped that this trouble will soon end; that these unlawful occupants will surrender the factories to the owners; and that the employers will give consideration to all just demands of the employees.

I have always opposed giving the President unlimited authority to spend billions of relief money as he saw fit. This is the taxpayers' money, and in making my inquiry of the chairman of the committee I wanted to be sure that this relief money could not be spent for the purpose of maintaining strikes in the automobile industry against the desires of a majority of the employees and to the detriment of the people as a whole, and where no one will benefit in the end.

Relief rolls are made up by local authorities. The chairman of the committee assures me that under the bill the President can spend this money only for the support of those on relief, therefore the money cannot be spent to maintain strikers unless the local authorities place those strikers on relief. The time should not come when the taxpayers' money is given to any official who will use that money to promote and sustain strikes like those now being conducted by certain elements among the employees in the automobile industry.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto or substitutes thereto close in 15 minutes.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAVERICK. Am I going to be permitted to offer my amendment?

Mr. BUCHANAN. This request does not affect the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Speaking in behalf of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU], I should like to offer a few facts on the relief situation in Minneapolis, bearing out the contention of the gentleman from Wisconsin, that the present bill is not adequate.

In Minneapolis today we have 10,400 people on W. P. A. There have been 1,094 released from W. P. A. in the past few months and put back on direct relief. There are now 12,622 on direct relief, of which 5,000 are employable.

The letter from the mayor of Minneapolis, Thomas E. Latimer, says that the W. P. A. has never absorbed fully the employables as per deal made between the States and the Federal Government a couple of years back.

That goes to the crux of the situation as far as my city is concerned. In my city we are attempting to cooperate with the Federal Government, but the point is on our contributors' share of the W. P. A. we might run into a situation of a shortage of funds because of the fact we are trying to deal honestly with the relief line in the city of Minneapolis.

The same thing is true among other cities in the country. At the Mayflower Hotel in November a national conference of mayors met and recommended the sum of $877,500,000. This was a very conservative group. They are men who live in the respective communities and have first-hand information.

The mayor of Minneapolis recommends that no sum less than $1,000,000,000 be allocated to the W. P. A. in order to care for the situation. We have had a lot of labor trouble in Minneapolis due to low-wage conditions that prevail in that city, conditions similar to those in the motor-trades industry, a situation which is going to result in an extra load being thrown on the relief activities of the Federal Government.

I do not think the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin today is offered in any spirit of levity, but in the common belief that if we are to fulfill the ideals of the President enunciated on that rain-swept portico on January 20 as he looked across the plaza to the $10,000,000 marble palace of the nine men in black and said that he saw one-third of the Nation ill housed, ill clad, undernourished—if we are to fulfill these ideals, it must be by the adoption of this amendment. I am sure Harry Hopkins is able to administer the set-up.

These gentlemen who talk so solicitously today about flood relief and other burdens that must be met from time to time must realize that the thing to do today is to pass a bill which will show to the country in the matter of relief that, as far as the Washington administration is concerned, we are going to meet the situation. I doubt very much if the bill that is being handled by the eminent chairman would encompass any increase in the wages paid by W. P. A. I think that in the face of the rising cost of living an increase should be part of the program of the W. P. A. In Minneapolis they have paid $60.50 a month, and even this sum does not cover the necessities of life for a family. So I hope the Members of this House today who really believe in the humanitarian policies of President Roosevelt will vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

In further support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, I herewith offer for insertion in the RECORD two telegrams, one received from the mayor of Minneapolis, Thomas E. Latimer, to whom I have previously referred in this speech, as follows:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., January 26, 1937.

Hon. DEWEY JOHNSON,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

W. P. A. gets only 655 millions of House bill of 790 millions. This means slash of present minimum quotas of over 25 percent and cut of over 33 percent in expenditures for materials. This will create an impossible situation in Minneapolis and Minnesota. Notify the Minnesota Congressmen.

Mayor THOMAS E. LATIMER.

I herewith offer also a wire from L. R. S. Ferguson, city clerk of the city of St. Paul:

ST. PAUL, MINN., January 26, 1937.

Hon. DEWEY W. JOHNSON,
Member of Congress:

The council, city of St. Paul, by unanimous vote, protests any cut in W. P. A. funds for city and State. Any cut in funds at this time would create impossible situation in city and State.

L. R. S. FERGUSON, City Clerk.

The amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin adequately obviates the serious situation which is pointed out in these two telegrams from the cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul. It was pointed out by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee at the beginning of this debate that there will be a reduction of 600,000 W. P. A. workers by June 30, to be apportioned as follows: 50,000 workers to be laid off in February, in the name of recovery; 150,000 workers laid off in March, in the name of recovery; 200,000 in April; and 200,000 in May. This in the face of the fact that 100 cities in the United States have met in conference in Washington within the last 60 days and presented to the Federal Government adequate facts and figures to show that if the relief load is thrown back to the States, cities, and local subdivisions of government that it will bankrupt many of these local subdivisions of government, result in curtailment of other local governmental services, and eventually mean pay cuts for local public officials and workers, such as school teachers, firemen, police, janitors, and others who furnish municipal or State services to the local citizenry. Hoping that this is not to be the result, but fearful that it is, I offer to the House an editorial from the columns of this morning's Philadelphia Record, published by J. David Stern, and distinctly friendly to the liberal policies of the Democratic administration under the leadership of Franklin Delano Roosevelt. I quote from the editorial entitled "Which Way, New Deal?"—

How many synonyms are there for the word "shocking"?

We've run out of adjectives for the administration's W. P. A. program.

What on earth is happening in Washington?

W. P. A. Administrator Hopkins' statement yesterday is utterly incomprehensible.

The country was startled last week to discover that W. P. A. had fired 851,000 workers during 1936.

That brought the rolls down to about 2,200,000.

Now Hopkins tells the House Appropriations Committee the administration intends to fire 600,000 more by June.

In the name of recovery and the New Deal, why?

As startling as the Hopkins program was the Hopkins tone.

"Under our economic system unemployment is inevitable", said Hopkins.

That is the weary, defeatist statement of a beaten man, a statement fit only to cap a failure.

Why does Hopkins use that statement to cap a success?

Why this attitude after the brilliant New Deal success in buying recovery through the spending program?

Why this reversal of the spending policy after the brilliant victory at the polls—that national thank you for the courage that inspired the spending program?

We try to understand and we cannot understand.

In previous editorials we have said that W. P. A. economy was dearly bought at the price of human insecurity and suffering.

But there isn't even going to be any economy as a result of the new program. Not for the Nation as a whole.

States and cities will simply have to take up the burden the New Deal is dropping.

Precariously balanced local budgets will be capsized because of the New Deal about-face.

The new policy unbalances the Nation to balance the Budget.

Hopkins admitted yesterday that even when production is normal there will be up to 7,500,000 jobless.

And in the same breath he proposed to fire 50,000 workers in February, 150,000 in March, 200,000 in April, and 200,000 in May. What sense does that make?

Unemployment is inevitable, says Administrator Hopkins.

But W. P. A. dismissals totaling 1,451,000 in less than a year and a half are not inevitable.

The loss of the purchasing power of those 1,451,000 is not inevitable. That is deliberate.

W. P. A.'s creation of a new labor surplus which will act as a drag on wages is not inevitable. It is deliberate.

Nothing will tend more strongly to continue unemployment than decrease in mass purchasing power, reduction of W. P. A. expenditures from $165,000,000 a month to $103,000,000, creation of a labor surplus to force wages down and still further decrease mass purchasing power, insecurity among W. P. A. workers to make them unwilling to spend their present wages.

W. P. A. is engaging in precisely those policies that will breed unemployment.

It is hardly becoming to talk about the "inevitability" of unemployment after outlining a policy that will intensify it.

Will the New Deal tell the country where it is heading? We are troubled. We would like to know.

Why does it act as if it lost the election, as if its policies had failed?

Why does it seem to strain every energy to snatch defeat from success?

In offering the report of the mayor's conference of last November, which has been accessible to the Members of this House, the telegrams from the two largest cities of Minnesota and the Philadelphia Record editorial, and knowing the botch that has been made of local relief, because of the inability of local communities to shoulder this tremendous load, and knowing further that local taxation cannot raise sums sufficient to pay the cost of relief, I can only do the sensible thing today in this House, and that is support the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU], which amendment will appropriate sufficient money in the sum of at least $1,040,000,0000 for W. P. A., to the end that the Federal Government will employ 2,800,000 workers on W. P. A., and for the first time since the inception of W. P. A. keep the pledge that the Federal Government made with the States and the local communities when the division of unemployed was made into employables and unemployables.

I hope that the House will see the problem presented as it faces us in Minnesota and the Northwest, and will adopt this amendment so that the bill will, at least, go to conference where more than an hour of debate on either side will be used in giving serious study to the amount of money required in the deficiency appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, we have in Montana today, notwithstanding all the relief that has been had in that State, in the neighborhood of 12,000 employable people unemployed who are not being taken care of. This group includes both farmers and people living in the urban centers of the State.

Mr. Chairman, as I stated a while ago, in my judgment it is a question of expediency. I think the President of the United States, owing to the language he has used and the opinions he has expressed for 4 years, is anxious to take care of the needy people of this country. This subject is close to his heart. It is a question with him now of securing the money as he thinks it becomes necessary, in my judgment. However, I differ with him on that. The reason I am supporting the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin is that if the money is made available now it does not need to be used by the President of the United States until it is necessary. If, however, its use is necessary, it will be there, and he will not have to come before this Congress upon his knees and ask for appropriations from day to day.

In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, if this appropriation is made available, Mr. Hopkins and the others who will handle this money will be better able to make their plans. They can make their plans then in accordance with what they have in their possession. I have had to do with banks in the past. Our loans and expenditures would always depend upon what we had in our note pouch and in our deposits. If we had no money there we could not make any expenditures, we could not lend anything.

It is not necessary for this Government to expend one single dollar that is not needed even though this afternoon we appropriate $1,500,000,000, and for this reason I should like to see made available to the proper lending agencies of our Government $1,500,000,000. I want to see this done so that the hungry people of this country can be taken care of, so that the farmers of the country can reseed their fields, so that the people who own livestock will not have them starving in snowdrifts 2 or 3 feet deep, so that the unemployed will be given work at living wages.

We can lend $100,000,000, Mr. Chairman, to the Great Northern Railroad so they can run their trains; we can lend $90,000,000 of the taxpayers' money to Mr. Dawes in Chicago, but we find it most difficult, if not impossible, to appropriate $100,000,000 for the poor downtrodden farm and labor classes of this country. We who come to Congress for the first time are accused of talking politics. I want to tell you I am not talking politics; I am trying to put before this House the conditions that exist in my State. We have counties in my State, Mr. Chairman, where they have not raised a vegetable, where they have not a milk cow left, if you please, where thousands are unemployed. We have got to take care of them. Let us, in the name of God, in this country put humanity above the dollar. That is what we ought to do. Money should not be our god. It has been our deity long enough. We have served our time worshiping the golden calf; let us serve humanity. They talk about balancing the Budget, let us balance the human budget first; let us balance the right of the common people before we start balancing the money Budget. I hope the Members of this House this afternoon will vote for this amendment making this money available to the Federal Government for these purposes.

I have confidence in the President of the United States. I have confidence in Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Wallace to the extent that I do not believe one single dollar will be used except for what is necessary, if you please, for taking care of the needy people of this country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the committee went into this subject very carefully, and in addition to that we summoned the administrative officers of the various agencies before us several times to review certain matters we were not satisfied about in our hearings.

This amendment gives a large sum to the Resettlement Administration. The gentleman did not tell you it had $78,000,000 now on hand unobligated.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Did it not appear in the joint conference between the House and Senate that the agencies of the Government had available funds to take care of the present needs of the flood situation?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Absolutely.

Mr. MAY. And one of the departments had a recoupment of about $2,000,000 that had come back into its hands unexpended?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes. The flood situation does not enter into this now. That will be brought in later on. There is no need to be uneasy about that. The money necessary will be spent for relief in the various flooded areas. When they get through they will present the bill. Of course they do not know what it is going to cost yet, and that is why it is not here now. So we may exclude the flood for the present. They do not need any extra money for that purpose now. If necessary, the President could allot certain money carried in this bill to relieve distress in the flooded areas, or such portion of it as may be necessary.

As I stated before, the Resettlement Administration has $78,000,000 unobligated. Just think of that! If the necessity was so great in the territories of the various gentlemen for rehabilitation loans, why has not this money been used? There is $78,000,000 already appropriated and unobligated.

In addition to that there is more obligated that has not been expended. They will receive money under this bill, perhaps as much as $80,000,000 more, making $158,000,000 for a period of 6 months. Is that not sufficient? The gentlemen know that is enough. Mr. Hopkins will complete his total program.

The flood may add six or seven hundred thousand to the relief roll, but that will be taken care of; and that is all that is necessary for the next 5 months. I ask the Members, therefore, to defeat these amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Boileau substitute amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU) there were—ayes 46, noes 151.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. WOODRUM and Mr. BOILEAU to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 50, noes 170.

So the substitute amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]; and, without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Taber amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PATMAN) there were—ayes 21, noes 150.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAVERICK: Strike out all after the colon in line 24, page 3, and the rest of the page, and through line 5 on page 4.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield so that I may ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes?

Mr. MAVERICK. No; I do not yield for that purpose.

SHALL WE CUT OFF OUR ADMINISTRATIVE NOSE TO SPITE OUR LEGISLATIVE FACE?

Mr. Chairman, the matter that I intend to discuss is most important because it involves the prerogatives of the House. I am talking now about the feature which prohibits people under the W. P. A., the P. W. A., or Resettlement from working for committees of investigation or inquiry in this House. It says that shall not be done. It makes cooperation impossible.

The purpose is to strangle the committees of Congress, especially those of investigation. I know this will be vigorously denied by the members of the committee. I have seen the Members of the Congress vote with their committees, and I admire the gentlemen on the Appropriations Committee, but why blindly follow chairmen of committees? Sometimes they are wrong. Mr. BUCHANAN is an able, faithful, and good worker. On this one point he may be wrong. At least it is not a sin to disagree with him.

LA FOLLETTE AND WHEELER COMMITTEES TO BE STRANGLED

This provision of the bill denying assistance of committees is going to strangle the La Follette committee; it is going to strangle the Wheeler committee.

Members of the Appropriations Committee may say, "Why do we not make the appropriation ourselves for this assistance and hire our own experts?" Ordinarily this is correct, but a man who is in the W. P. A. naturally knows something about employment and labor. A man who is with the P. W. A. naturally knows something about housing. There are many other instances; but the point is Congress should avail itself of men who can give intelligent assistance. We are cutting our own legislative throats.

TRAINED ADMINISTRATIVE EMPLOYEES WILL BE LAST

We have a strong tendency all the time to economize on our own legislative body, although the cost of legislation is absolutely nothing compared with the money we are spending on other parts of the Government.

We ought to have the assistance of these trained men if we can get them. For instance, we need information about labor spies. Men in Harry Hopkins' and other departments have knowledge of facts we should know. They and other men now have a convenient excuse not to testify or cooperate. It will create a bad situation. And they will not accept a temporary committee job when they have a permanent one.

This language should be stricken out because in my opinion it strangleholds the committees and strangleholds the legislative process. We are cutting down on our own power to learn, and hence to enact intelligent legislation.

THE ADMINISTRATION WANTS THIS AND THE PRESIDENT WANTS THAT

I have heard men come on this floor and say that the administration wants this or the President wants that. I am not authorized to speak for the administration and I am not authorized to speak for the President. Neither of them has spoken to me, but I have a hunch the administration would be mighty well pleased to have this language stricken out. I should like to see the Members of this Congress, including our brethren on the other side, vote to uphold the legislative process because we are cutting ourselves most of the time and generally surrendering to some other group or body.

INTELLIGENT LEGISLATION IMPOSSIBLE; ANOTHER BAD PRECEDENT

These investigators are employed by the W. P. A. and the different organizations, and this bill excludes them. If there comes a time when we want an investigation for 2 weeks or 1 week, we cannot have him up here working for us because he will be on another pay roll. It makes intelligent legislation almost impossible.

I want to tell you that this is a bad legislative precedent. It would be bad for the Republicans if they were in power. It would be bad for the Democrats or the Progressives. So I ask you to vote in favor of this amendment, and when you do, you are voting for proper legislative functions.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 17 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I agree with my friend from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] that this is a very dangerous proposition. I believe it would cripple the efforts of the Wheeler and the La Follette committees to make a thorough investigation of the industrial spy system.

The language of the proviso is:

That no part of this appropriation or of the appropriation in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936 shall be used hereafter to pay the compensation of any person, not taken from relief rolls, detailed or loaned for service in connection with any investigation or inquiry undertaken by any committee of either House of Congress under special resolution thereof.

As I understand this proposition, if anyone was working on W. P. A. or Resettlement or any other similar agency, if a committee of Congress wanted to bring him up here in connection with its work, that man would lose whatever little stipend he might be getting in the department while he was testifying before the committee of Congress. If we are going to get information in reference, for example, to this spy system that lately they have been investigating so thoroughly in the Senate, we have to get men who know about conditions. W. P. A. workers are engaged in connection with various projects and the P. W. A. men are familiar with various building projects, and the P. W. A. men would be even more important in an investigation of this kind than the W. P. A. men, because they are in the building trades and know how the spies are put in, what they are put in for, and how they try to break up labor unions and cause trouble in industry.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM. May I direct the gentleman's attention to the fact that the language to which he is objecting does not apply to W. P. A. workers, but to the administrative staff who would be taken away from their job of looking after relief and sent up here to work on a congressional investigation.

Mr. CONNERY. Even so, the members of the administrative staff, for instance, at one of the regional offices, would have a picture of the whole situation in that district.

Mr. WOODRUM. Then we should want to pay it out of the appropriation for the investigation and not camouflage it by having it appear that the money is appropriated for relief when, as a matter of fact, it is being used for a special congressional investigation.

Mr. CONNERY. As the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] has said, it is very difficult to get money out of this House, or out of the Senate, for that matter, for an investigation of this sort.

Mr. WOODRUM. Then let us not make out we are feeding the hungry when we are using the money we appropriate for that purpose on some senatorial investigation.

Mr. CONNERY. I will say to my friend from Virginia it is not a question of feeding the hungry on a proposition of this sort. You are feeding the hungry when you do this, just as much as you would be in paying a man for digging a ditch, because you are paying these men while they are attending a congressional investigation to tell Congress about the spy system that may be at work in the big corporations or somewhere else.

Mr. WOODRUM. As I have just stated, they can send relief workers up here. That is not what we are trying to stop at all.

Mr. CONNERY. But the same thing applies to the administrative staff.

Mr. WOODRUM. We are trying to stop this highly paid administrative staff——

Mr. CONNERY. It does not say "highly paid administrative staff" in here.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is what they are.

Mr. CONNERY. And, so far as I am concerned, there is no one highly paid in the United States Government. Do not let the gentleman deceive himself about that. The only salary that is paid by the Government that is at all comparable with salaries paid by private industry is that of the President, and even he, with his heavy burden of work and tremendous responsibility, receives far less than the president of any large corporation.

Mr. MAVERICK. And the gentleman understands that these people usually are not on relief. Some of them are trained men and it is often necessary to have men not on relief to do this work, and I do not see any disgrace about a man's getting a fairly decent salary, even if he happens to be doing something for a committee of the Congress.

Mr. CONNERY. According to my idea, under this present provision in this bill employers might block any effort of Congress to investigate a practice dangerous to the American people. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Texas will pass.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, whenever the Appropriations Committee finds a real substantial abuse in the administration of the expenditure of public money it tries to correct it. We conceive that to be among our duties.

Personally, I have no feeling in this matter. As a Representative, I feel it is an abuse that should be corrected promptly. What are the facts? The hearings disclose that 26 employees who are being paid from these relief funds, with annual salaries totaling $61,420, are loaned to congressional investigating committees. Their salaries are paid out of the money we appropriate for those in want and in need, and it should be stopped. [Applause.] If the Senate or the House wants employees for an investigating committee, whichever body is concerned should provide for them in the orderly way. That is all we want.

These people are loaned to investigating committees acting under a simple resolution of the House or a simple resolution of the Senate, and neither resolution is the law of the land. That is all.

A simple resolution might very easily pass upon the statement that it does not provide for an appropriation, if the purpose to be accomplished seems to be a desirable one. It might, however, direct some department to furnish information or provide personnel to assist. While the direction or request would not be binding on a department, not being law, the department would hesitate not to comply from fear of offending.

Not so long ago a simple resolution was passed by the Senate calling upon the Interstate Commerce Commission to use its regular force to assist in an investigation to be conducted by a Senate committee. Mind you, it is a simple resolution and is not the law of the land. The House did not pass upon it, the President did not sign it, but it calls upon the Interstate Commerce Commission to make the investigation.

How much money has been spent by the Interstate Commerce Commission on it—money expended from the regular appropriations that we make for the Interstate Commerce Commission to perform the regular functions that the Interstate Commerce Commission was created to perform? They used the money we provided for their regular work in the payment of employees and for travel expenses and performed work for the investigating committee that was not work that this personnel is required to perform in the regular course of the duties of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

To what extent? In the period from July 1935 to late in December 1936, a period of nearly 18 months, a total of $388,256.27. It took the time of some 77 employees. Of the appropriations that we made by law for the regular work of the Bureau of Accounts of the Commission, about 28 percent has been diverted to this investigational work. Of course, it was not obligatory on the Interstate Commerce Commission to do this, because this was a simple resolution of the Senate. It had no force of law but the Commission naturally did not want to offend the Senate. They should not be placed in such an embarrassing position and we are seeking, wherever we can, to stop such practices.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly.

Mr. NICHOLS. To ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if the section he is now discussing does not apply wholly and exclusively to the committees. It does not attempt to say that relief labor shall not be used on any project. That is not contemplated in the meaning of it at all?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No. It applies only to committees authorized by a resolution of the House or the Senate, and if anyone here has an investigation to be made which has merit to it, come and tell us what it is and how much money is needed to make the investigation and let the House provide it, and do not compel some department to take its money and divert it from the purpose for which it was intended.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MAVERICK) there were—ayes 45, noes 140.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. Ten minutes of the 17 minutes accorded for debate upon this paragraph remain. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this pro-forma amendment in order to present an inquiry relative to an amendment which I introduced to a somewhat similar bill in the last session of Congress and which amendment was carried unanimously. That amendment provided that, with reference to work furnished under W. P. A. funds, those who had stayed off relief as long as possible or altogether, and had exhausted their resources, might have an equal opportunity with those who had been on relief rolls to be afforded work which was made available under the appropriation. That amendment was somewhat modified in the other body and was subsequently so interpreted, as I understand, as to practically nullify the effect of the proviso as originally introduced. It passed this House without a dissenting voice. My inquiry is directed to what has happened in the operation of these funds in affording an opportunity for work to those who have stayed off relief rolls as long as possible; whether or not they have been given an equality of eligibility in the allocation of this work with those whose names appeared on relief rolls. My understanding is that this provision was not carried out in such a way as to afford the relief that had been expected, and to open the avenues of employment for men who had stayed off the relief rolls until their resources had been entirely exhausted. I have offered this pro-forma amendment to make the inquiry and ascertain, if I may, to what extent this provision of law has been carried out and to what extent these men have been granted equal eligibility in the awarding of this work.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have requested this recognition for the purpose of trying to give a partial answer to the question of the distinguished gentleman who has just preceded me. As I get his inquiry, it resolves itself into what in the administration of relief work has been done for that spirited part of our citizenry who have suffered rather than subject themselves to the humiliation of "going on relief"?

I do not know how that question may be answered by others, but so far as Pennsylvania is concerned we still have to contend with the vicious, un-American policy of "going on relief" in order to get work on W. P. A. projects, excepting that fractional percent—formerly 10 percent, but now 5 percent—who may be nonrelief, or as it is called, predesignated.

This policy of requiring unemployed men and women to apply for relief before they can get work on projects financed in whole or in part by Federal funds appropriated by this Congress is a policy vicious, un-American, humiliating, and more or less degrading. It should be stopped and stopped at once.

I do not want to be understood as opposed to a reasonable program of relief and relief work, one that is adequately financed in view of the exigencies of the times, emergencies of drought, flood, unemployment, financial disarrangement, and industrial dislocation. But that program should be equitably, sanely, and impartially administered.

The test for employment on publicly financed projects, whatever their character, should be unemployment, not vagrancy, not impoverishment entirely, not past waste, extravagance, nor wastefulness. Why should a man who has worked and saved for years in support of himself and family, or a woman for that matter, be kept from employment because he has acquired a little real estate or personal property—perhaps only a home—on which, because of business disaster or loss of job he probably cannot meet his taxes.

Must we continue to force men of character, stamina, and spirit to humble their pride by "going on relief", or going jobless and hungry because they will not apply for relief or are forestalled by the requirements for placement on the relief rolls?

Must we continue forever to penalize the industrious and the thrifty of our people to the extent of lavishing favors and privileges on thousands who never really worked, who never tried to save, who perhaps never will work in a real sense, and who never will save?

There are in this country thousands of such on the relief rolls, and there are at the same time thousands of those thrifty and industrious ones who have been hunted out by misfortune and who are enduring the pangs of hunger and suffering the tortures of hell rather than submit their pride to what they regard as notorious and public humiliation.

Can we not have some thought of these great stalwarts of American manhood and American womanhood? Can we not do something here to halt, once and for all, a vicious policy which discriminates against honest industry and prudence, and which punishes and penalizes a very considerable portion of our population?

And, finally, Mr. Chairman, how can the relief rolls ever be depleted if our people are to be compelled to enter their names on those rolls in a continuingly recurrent stream? How can the relief rolls ever be reduced in number if we are to pile an ever-increasing load of new names upon them by methods such as I have referred to?

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of Public Contracts: For personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, in performing the duties imposed by the act entitled "An act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, and for other purposes", approved June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2036), including supplies, stationery, printing and binding, telephone service, telegrams, furniture, office equipment, traveling expenses, contract stenographic reporting services, and other necessary expenses, fiscal year 1937, $50,000.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HEALEY: On page 9, line 14, after the figures "1937", strike out "$50,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$100,000."

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this appropriation is for the administration and enforcement of the so-called Walsh-Healey public contracts bill.

For the benefit of many of the new Members who do not know just what that bill provided I will outline some of the salient points of that particular bill at this moment.

The bill provides that in Government contracts in excess of $10,000, first, the stipulations will require that the contractor is a regular dealer in or manufacturer of the supplies to be contracted for.

Second, that all persons employed by the contractor in the manufacture or furnishing of the supplies, and so forth, will be paid, without subsequent deduction or rebate of any amount, not less than the minimum wages as determined by the Secretary of Labor and pay the prevailing minimum wages for persons employed on similar work or in particular or similar industries or groups of industries currently operating in the locality in which the materials, supplies, and so forth, are to be manufactured.

In other words, the Secretary of Labor shall predetermine what the minimum prevailing wage is to be in the locality where those supplies are to be manufactured. Not graded wages but the minimum wage, below which no one shall be employed.

Third, that no person employed by the contractor in the manufacture or furnishing of the materials, and so forth, shall be permitted to work in excess of 8 hours in 1 day or 40 hours in any 1 week, and that no male person under 16 years of age and no female person under 18 years of age nor any convict labor shall be permitted to work on these various contracts.

Lastly, that the contracts shall be performed in factories and plants that measure up to the State requirements of sanitary regulations, hazards, fire laws, and so forth.

There is in this bill a provision whereby the Secretary of Labor, in the event that public necessity requires it, may make exemptions and exceptions, so that if the public interest requires it or if any undue hardship is incurred in the performance of these contracts under the prescribed conditions, then an exception or exemption may be granted.

It seems to me that these are some of the objectives for which this administration has been striving. This is a constitutional way, on the public business of the Government, whereby we may require decent, reasonable working conditions, and where we may eliminate those abuses and antisocial practices which became so prevalent everywhere after the N. R. A. decision, particularly on Government contracts for supplies, because existing law requires that Government contracts be let to the lowest bidder.

Investigation by the committee that recommended this legislation disclosed the fact that the worst fringe of industry was obtaining these Government contracts. Particularly was that so with respect to clothing equipment for the Army, the C. C. C., and other branches of our Government. And millions of dollars' worth of this type of contract is let by the Government yearly. We found that these contracts were going to the very worst types of labor exploiters and sweatshop operators.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY] has expired.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, only $50,000 has been allotted by this committee, although $100,000 was recommended by the Budget, for the proper enforcement and administration of this act in the next 5 months. That is $10,000 a month. The Secretary must of necessity establish boards to establish minimum wages and inquire into labor conditions throughout the length and breadth of this country. It seems to me that that is a niggardly amount and that if we invest the other $50,000 we might be able to provide some of the jobs we have been talking about today. We might be able to put to work in private industry some of the six or seven million people who are out of employment. Let the Government set an example. Let us carry out the desires and the will of our President, who said on the opening day of Congress that the hours in private industry, since the N. R. A. was declared unconstitutional, have increased over 20 percent, and that is the reason reemployment has not gone apace with the increasing prosperity that is being enjoyed by business and industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the question of the merits or demerits of the law mentioned by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY], of course, is not in issue here today. That law has been passed and is upon the statute books. It is simply a question of the adequacy of the appropriation and the amount of money needed.

The testimony before our committee was that the Labor Department, in carrying out this Walsh-Healey bill in the 3 months it has been in operation, had used $2,700 and obligated $10,000, or about $12,000 in 3 months. They had remaining the balance of $40,000, which was originally appropriated, which gives them, together with the $50,000 we provide here, about $80,000 to operate in the next 5 months, which is probably twice as much as they will need.

There is no question of trying to cripple the enforcement of this law at all, but they are abundantly provided for. The committee has gone into it carefully. Many members on the committee voted for the bill and are in sympathy with its provisions. They have nearly $30,000 of the original amount appropriated, which, plus the $50,000 included in this bill, gives them $80,000.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. Is it not a fact they have had to carry on this work with borrowed personnel up to the present time?

Mr. WOODRUM. They have, perhaps, had to take some people from one section of the Labor Department to use in another section, and the Committee on Appropriations wants to encourage that. We find, Mr. Chairman, in going into these appropriations, that every time you provide for a department to write another letter you have got to give them another stenographer instead of their taking one from another office which, perhaps, is not quite so busy.

There is plenty of personnel and plenty of money to finance the bill. If Congress, of course, out of bigness of heart, wants to dump some more in for good measure, there is no way in which the Committee on Appropriations can stop it; but we feel that the undertaking has been adequately financed. Should anything develop in the future to show that it is not, we will be here, I am afraid, for a few months yet to meet their needs should they arise.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. CITRON. What was the reason that the recommendation of the Budget for $100,000 was cut by the committee to $50,000?

Mr. WOODRUM. The Committee on Appropriations, of course, can hardly know what motivated the Budget Bureau in its recommendation of $100,000. We have no way of knowing what caused them to do that, but we went into it very carefully with the Department of Labor and their representatives; and we feel we have adequately provided for this work.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I dislike to take the time of the House, but it seems that this afternoon practically everything has been connected with labor, and, as the chairman of the Committee on Labor, I feel it part of my duty to take the floor; and I hope the Members will see my point of view.

The Walsh-Healey bill, as so well stated by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] in opposing it in the last session of Congress affects industry. The gentleman from New York said it would affect nine-tenths of the industries of the United States. Answering him then I said that I hoped mightily it would, because it would force decent wages, decent hours, and decent conditions into the industries of the United States.

Now, my dear friend, the gentleman from Virginia, said he did not know why the Bureau of the Budget recommended $100,000, although the Appropriations Committee cut it to $50,000. I may say to my colleague that any time the Budget Director recommends an amount he considers that the minimum amount which should go to the particular activity, because the Bureau of the Budget is never very generous in asking the Appropriations Committee for money.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY] told us they needed $100,000 to enforce this law properly. The manufacturers have attempted to chisel in on it. They have been asking exemptions on the ages of female employees in the textile industry, cutting the age limit down from 18 to 16, and they have asked for various other exemptions, against all of which I have protested vigorously. They obtained these exemptions and put girls to work at 16 years of age.

In order properly to enforce this law administrators will have to be appointed, boards will have to be formed in these next 5 months in order to police industry to see that they observe the law, that they work their employees not more than 40 hours a week, and that they keep up to the minimum wage scales as set by the Secretary of Labor. Most certainly they need $100,000, and perhaps this much will not be enough. I ask my friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY] why he, with his great knowledge of the workings of the law, thinks we need the additional $50,000?

Mr. HEALEY. The gentleman from Massachusetts has pretty well covered it himself. We need it in order properly to enforce this law. This seems to me to be a very small amount of money for the purpose, because the enforcement will require the passing on contracts involving over $400,000,000. One hundred thousand dollars is a very small amount with which to establish a personnel to be charged with the duty of properly enforcing this law. Certainly they ought to have this amount when so much money is involved in the contracts.

Mr. CONNERY. Some of these big industries have fought this law tooth and nail and would like to see Congress give only $50,000. As a matter of fact, they would like to see the law repealed, because they want to work their employees longer than 40 hours a week and pay them less than a decent wage. That would be the result, would it not, if the law were not enforced?

Mr. HEALEY. Absolutely.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of my colleague [Mr. HEALEY] is adopted.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. TABER. The hearings disclose that this estimate contemplates 82 people. The average rate of pay of Government employees is about $2,000. At this rate the $76,000 still available would take care of these 82 people throughout the balance of the fiscal year.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is true, and is one of the reasons that prompted our reduction of this estimate.

Mr. Chairman, there is nothing so sacred about a Budget estimate that we should not cut it. We act as a result of our own investigations. One of these gentlemen certainly knows that from the length of his service, and the other gentlemen will learn that after he has served a longer time.

There was a reason for cutting this estimate from $100,000 to $50,000. This law went into effect in September, having been passed at the last session of the Congress. There has never been an appropriation by the Congress to enforce it, so the President allotted $40,000 in September. Three months have elapsed and the Department has had $40,000. They have used only $13,000. That is, they have spent only $2,600 and have obligated $10,500. Three months have gone by and there is left 5 months to take care of this unobligated balance of $27,000, and the additional $50,000, making $77,000 in all.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. The reason they have not spent that money is because they have never had any appropriation whatsoever.

Mr. BUCHANAN. They have had an allotment of $40,000.

Mr. HEALEY. They had no appropriation and, therefore, they did not care to obligate themselves until they were sure of having an appropriation which would properly give them the opportunity to establish a decent agency with which to enforce this act.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The Labor Department nor any other department of the Government has never been modest about obligating and spending. They had this $40,000 and had the right to obligate that amount. They used only $2,600 and have obligated themselves for an additional $10,500.

What is the result? Do you want these new activities to build up a big personnel organization? Shall we give them $127,000 for 5 months in order to create a big force? Or do you want them to take time to investigate and get competent men to perform these duties? May I say that these are very serious duties. They send out men to investigate manufactories, to determine whether or not they are sanitary and to investigate hours of work and other conditions. They determine what the prevailing wage is and then report back to the Labor Department. The Labor Department fixes the prevailing rate of wage, and no manufacturer who pays below that wage can bid on a Government contract.

Let me give you just one example. The Government advertised for bids on a large amount of copper which was needed for the national defense. The copper manufacturers could not bid because of the Healey-Walsh law. They said they had to work the labor and labor wanted to work, but they could not comply and they could not put in a bid; therefore the Government could not get the copper under competitive bidding and had to buy its immediate requirements in the open market.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HEALEY) there were—ayes 53, noes 123.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contract Air Mail Service: For an additional amount for the inland transportation of mail by aircraft, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the Post Office Department Appropriation Acts for the following fiscal years, respectively:

For 1936, $100,000;

For 1937, $984,000.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I hope no one will object to my taking part in the deliberations of this Committee of the Whole House, because it is the only chance I have to serve the people of my district, and I would not say anything at this time except that the party to which I belong has been very much maligned this afternoon.

Much fault has been found with the Republican Party. I want to rise in defense of the theories of the new Republican Party, the Progressive Republican Party. We are in harmony with most of the provisions of this bill, but I want to point out to the Congress of the United States that the Progressive Republicans of this Nation recognize the unemployment problem is a national one. I notice that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], according to the committee reports, seem to want to bring the Federal Government's interest in unemployment to an end.

Mr. Chairman, here is what Mr. Hopkins said, and this is the philosophy to which we subscribe:

> It is my opinion that in America today we have arrived at a social point of view that never again will the Government permit large numbers of people to go without any share of the national income.

He stated further:

> In my belief, the unemployment program is a national program.
> Mr. WOODRUM. Do you not agree that ultimately we should get the Federal Government out of the picture if we can?
> Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; not out of the unemployment program.

Today, instead of having six or seven million people out of employment, why do you not tell the truth? We have 9,000,000 people out of employment. If the manufacturing concerns and business of this country returned to the normal position they occupied in 1929, they could not absorb over 2,000,000 of the 9,000,000 people who are out of a job. The gentlemen in charge of the bill today says the President has the money. They say Mr. Hopkins has the money. Well, we are not getting it in North Dakota, and that is the reason I supported these various amendments.

The people in North Dakota are getting, during the winter months, $18 per family; and they cannot buy coal for less than $12 per month. So if you have the money, I may say to the gentlemen at the table over there, why not see that it is distributed and let us have a chance to live according to a decent standard?

I believe people in this country are starving. I read in the papers of this city that within 30-minutes ride of the Capitol, down here in Virginia, people are underfed, not properly housed, and underclothed.

May I say to the Members of the Committee, we need all the money possible to carry on this program, and to carry on the program on a national scale, because the problem will always be with us and there will always be people out of employment under our present economic program. The problem will be right back here again next year.

During President Harding's administration we were alarmed because there were 3,000,000 unemployed, while the normal for the preceding 10 years, exclusive of war years, had been only one and one-half million. President Harding appointed a special committee to study this alarming situation. Every city and town made extra efforts to supply jobs, but the condition grew worse. It was very acute when President Roosevelt came to the White House. We have appropriated billions for the purpose of supplying jobs, but here we are with the unemployed still here. In my judgment, the number will increase unless we adjust our economic structure.

We have no unsettled West or South or North which for a century absorbed our population who could not hold out under the prevailing economic system. Those who lost out in the East took the trail for the West. The emigrant was followed by railroads and other business enterprises. The virgin soil was broken up, towns thrived, institutions grew, and the economic defeat which these pioneers had suffered in the East were forgotten in the opportunities of the golden West. Today there is no West nor South nor North where the pioneer can locate a new home. We have come to the end of the trail. We cannot go on; we must stay where we are and face the situation as it is. The situation is that our farmers are tenants, our people in the cities are renters, and 9,000,000 are out of a job and actually public charges.

Who is going to feed these people? Who is going to clothe them? Who is going to house them? The answer is that the Government of the United States is going to do it, and it is going to do it by taxing those who have in the past taken too much for the use of their capital and have not left enough for labor. The Government is going to do it because those in control of the Government now, and those who will control it in the future, admit that people have a right to live in a land of plenty under a decent standard of living.

Those reactionaries who think business as now organized can furnish employment for the millions out of work, and who want the Federal Government to withdraw from the relief field, do not understand the temper of the American people. Those holding this view are living in the past; the old Republican Party is an institution of the past. Unless it is totally revamped with new, progressive thought and philosophy it never will be returned to power. As long as the Democratic Party remains a progressive party it will not be defeated. The conclusion must be formed, however, that it will be defeated. It will cease to be progressive. Its leadership will become reactionary; its leadership will fail to lead. Then a more progressive party will step forward to become the agent of the majority of the people. For the people of the United States to turn back and follow the old Republican Party of reaction is absurd and unthinkable. The Republican Party can be made a great, progressive force in the Nation, but those who now control its destiny are too set in their views to permit this change. Those who control it are to be pitied, because they do not understand that they have been discredited, discarded, and humiliated. Those who try to resuscitate it with new life are punished with demotion in committees, the usual and old-time method of punishment. Some day in this Republican Party will appear enough men who cannot be threatened and scared to get control of the party machinery and turn it over to the people.

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has said in this debate that if subsequent facts warrant it, we will appropriate more for relief purposes. I accept that promise and rely upon it. I know we shall need more money, and still more money, for nothing short of a redistribution of wealth in this Nation can settle the unemployment situation. Shorter hours of labor, the elimination of children and people over the age of 60 from the work rolls, a far-reaching social security act, a monetary system controlled by the people themselves, will prevent further wealth concentration and eventually bring economic recovery. If we have the vision to do this our democracy will continue. If we shut our eyes to these obvious facts the greatest democracy in the world will be destroyed.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, a statement was made in debate this afternoon in connection with this bill by one of the minority leaders that I do not think should be permitted to go uncontradicted. The statement was that the President of the United States, upon the inauguration of the W. P. A. program, proposed to take care of all the unemployed workers of this country and that an appropriation of such magnitude as this, and the continuing presence of a great army of unemployed, is proof of the failure of his program.

I recall distinctly—and I believe many other Members here will recall—that when the W. P. A. was inaugurated, I think it was under the $4,880,000,000 bill, the announced objective of the President and the W. P. A. Administrator was to take care of only three and one-half million workers, when it was well known at that time there were at least 10,000,000 unemployed workers in this country. I do not think the number of employed has ever quite approximated 3,500,000. I know the number has not exceeded that figure and they have had to include the C. C. C. camps to make up the 3,500,000 people.

This statement of the gentleman on the other side of the aisle is one of the difficulties we are up against and we have been up against it under this program all the time. I know the view is quite prevalent and very widespread that it was proposed to put every unemployed man and woman in this country, who could not get a job, to work under this program. It was not proposed to put more than one-third of them to work to help relieve unemployment to that extent and stimulate business and, perhaps, lead private industry to undertake to absorb the rest. Private industry has not undertaken to do this. I have not time to go into that proposition now and I am not going to attempt to do so. I simply wish to point out that it is most unfair, and not only unfair but untrue, to point to this appropriation bill as proof of the failure of a program that the President employ 10,000,000 men and women in this country when his announced objective was only 3,500,000 people, and as proof of the failure of his program generally.

Mr. Chairman, what this country appears to need is a national disasters department. If the President's reorganization plan is carried out, there will be 12 departments, and the national disasters department would have an appropriate and lucky number, no. 13. Ever since I have been down here this last time one-half of the country has been blowing away and the other half washing away. The famous Dust Bowl, which is in my district, has not raised a crop in 5 years, due to drought, while enough water is going to waste in the Ohio River in 10 days to irrigate the State of Colorado for 10 years.

Two years ago a Member from the wet belt proposed to me that we pool issues on a mud-dust bill to see if we could not effect a merger. Department no. 13 could handle such a program. There would be plenty of other disasters to keep it busy—earthquakes, tidal waves, cyclones, forest fires, influenza, grasshoppers, boll weevil, foot-and-mouth disease—lots of things. We really seem to be involved in a cycle of disasters growing in magnitude and number, and the country would seem to be confronted with a permanent emergency. The situation inclines me to an application of the philosophy of Mr. Flannery, the railway freight agent, in Pigs Is Pigs, that when there are two rates applicable to the same commodity the larger of the rates shall govern; which means that when there are two different sums proposed to meet the same situation I incline to the larger appropriation.

There is some basis in recent experience to justify this rule. When Congress adjourned last June the prospects were for the first normal crop in several years out in what is properly called the bread basket of the Nation, the agricultural States of the Midwest and the West. Instead there was another drought almost equaling the drought of 1934, the major drought in the history of this country, and worse than 1934 in that it still further lowered the morale and resistance of the people. When I had returned to my home State from Washington to find it, and the West generally, curling up under another great drought, my heart really sank for the administration here in Washington. I wondered how they would have the heart, in the teeth of a national campaign, to pull themselves together and meet such a situation. It just seemed too much. It seemed that disaster beyond the control of man had put its blight on the national administration. But they met the issue, and met it successfully. Why? Because the administration had available the national machinery of all the agencies of recovery and relief covering every State, every county and city, with a network of relief agencies reaching from Washington to the remotest nook and corner in the land. And I want to say now that had it not been for the relief measures set up in 1933 and 1934, set up by the Seventy-third Congress and in operation when the drought of 1934 broke, not only the cattle but the people would have starved by the tens of thousands in the drought area. No agencies could have been devised and set in operation in time to cope with a disaster of such proportions. They could not have gotten the people out and they could not have gotten the supplies in. It was a gigantic task even with the necessary agencies already set up and in operation.

Mr. Chairman, 2 weeks ago the national skies were clear. Today the great heart of this Nation has suffered untold damage through the visitation of the major flood in American history. Everything seems to be major in the way of a disaster. We have had a depression that exceeds the sum of all other depressions combined. Droughts such as that of 1934 are usually not repeated oftener than 25 or 30 years. We have repeated in 2 years. Now in 1 year we have repeated and broken the major flood record of the United States. And on top of it all the country has the "flu."

Mr. Chairman, I am human enough to admit that I get a certain amount of satisfaction out of the calls being sent out everywhere from the flood area to the much abused W. P. A. Send us all the workers you have got, they cry. It may be true, as the papers now complain, that action has not yet been gotten under the national flood bill passed by the last session of Congress, but W. P. A. has clicked. Some observers and critics point out and dwell only on its mistakes and defects. They are like a man watching a ball game through a dime-sized knothole in a fence and all he can see is one player, who happens to be a bum player, so the whole game is rotten. I drive over vast areas in this country and I have gotten so when I drive through the smaller towns I can tell a W. P. A. project from the rest of it. It is the best looking little building in town and the streets are paved and they have sewer systems and water systems and attractive new school buildings and public buildings, and many other needed things. I have been astonished at what can be accomplished by a few billion dollars spread out on the ground among the people who need it, instead of handing it over to the big fellows to lock safely away.

The able chairman of the Appropriations Committee has given us the cost of the recovery program charged to work and relief, from the inauguration of President Roosevelt until the close of the fiscal year 1937, as approximately $15,000,000,000. Of this amount, he estimates something like $4,000,000,000 as recoverable loans, leaving an expenditure of about $11,000,000,000 recoverable only in the benefits conferred upon the people and the economic life of this country. Let us concede that these $11,000,000,000, which have been added to the public debt, must be charged off the books of the National Treasury. In the last Congress and in the recent national campaign and now in this Congress, the minority point only to this increase in the national debt. They look only at one side, the debit side, of the public ledger.

Mr. Chairman, let us look for a moment at the credit side of the ledger and see what we find. The first thing we find is that the national income for 1936 is estimated at $60,000,000,000, which is $22,000,000,000 over the national income of 1932, when it had fallen from a high of eighty billion to the low of thirty-eight billion, an increase of national income in 1 year just double the total cost of the whole work and relief program of the administration, when we exclude the recoverable assets. The cost of work and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30 next will be but a little over $3,000,000,000, or less than one-seventh of the yearly increase in national income.

But that is not all. During the period we have been spending $11,000,000,000 on work and relief, the value of the stocks and bonds of the corporations of this country have increased more than $30,000,000,000—perhaps $40,000,000,000. All of the great and sounder industrials have gone back to par and above par. Their dividends have gone back to par, their business has gone back to par. So far as big business is concerned, the depression is over and happy days are here again.

Nor is that all on the credit side of the ledger. Notwithstanding what has been said about foreclosures of homes and foreclosures of farms, which are not 10 percent of what would have been foreclosed had it not been for Government aid, farm values and real-estate values in this country have gone up billions of dollars. It has been said in debate that there are fifty-one billions of idle money in the banks of this country. Well, that is sixteen billion more than was in them on March 4, 1933; and, furthermore, that fifty-one billion is safe. I doubt if it is much of an exaggeration to say that the total of all forms of wealth in this country, while this $11,000,000,000 was being expended, has increased $80,000,000,000. So there is a big showing on the credit side of the ledger that we are not going bankrupt, and that, so far as business is concerned, the depression is over.

But it is not over for millions of workers in this country, and it never will be over. They are not needed. They will never again be absorbed into the industrial life of the Nation unless we can devise new ways and means to absorb them. That is another story. I will not go into that now. I have known for a long time that the return of prosperity would not absorb unemployment. It was not absorbed before the depression. It will be absorbed still less after the depression. The productive capacity of labor has increased 10 percent per man during the depression. The machine is progressing. We can have prosperity for 80 percent of the people and then feed the other 20 percent in enforced idleness. It will be better for them and for the country to have them earn this money in the sweat of their brows, and I am for that proposition, no matter how big the appropriation has to be.

Mr. Hopkins has been quoted as saying that after all has been done that can be done by the Government to restore employment there will still remain six to seven million unemployed workers in this country, and this statement of Mr. Hopkins is criticized as a shameful confession and an admission of failure. Well, that depends on your viewpoint, and it is my viewpoint that Mr. Hopkins is simply facing and admitting the facts which will have to be faced and admitted by the people of this country, regardless of party, if they are ever to find a solution of by far the greatest problem confronting them—the problem of permanent, large-scale unemployment in industry and of surplus production in agriculture. If Mr. Hopkins has not furnished a solution, he should at least be credited with a vision of what we are up against. I know that he feels that Public Works must be a permanent policy in this country, and I am throwing in with him on that. I shall be only too happy if private industry shows that we are wrong.

Coming to the figures carried in the pending bill, the total for both W. P. A. and Resettlement, $790,000,000, the amount is gratifying as compared with first published reports as to what the President would recommend, which was $500,000,000 for work relief for the remainder of the fiscal year ending June 30. It was also reported that the Works Progress Administrator wanted $750,000,000, and there was newspaper comment on an apparent difference between the President and the Administrator. Then came the President's recommendation of $790,000,000. In a break-down of this total $650,000,000 will be allotted to Works Progress and $80,000,000 to Resettlement and the remainder to some other purposes. Six hundred and fifty million dollars to Works Progress would mean $130,000,000 a month for the 5 months. I think, to carry the load in need of employment, after making allowance for 250,000 farm cases shifted to the Resettlement Administration in December, would require at least $150,000,000 a month, or the $750,000,000 estimated as necessary by the Works Progress Administrator. I doubt whether the President would feel greatly hurt if the bill when it came to him carried an additional $100,000,000. I feel disposed to vote for at least that additional amount. I recognize the necessity for curtailment in the expenditures for work and relief, as conditions permit, but the process ought to be gradual, case by case, as the need may be found to have disappeared, and not by arbitrary large-scale displacements. The income of this country can carry 3,000,000 public workers indefinitely if necessary and carry them with much better results, both to the people themselves who are involved and the business of the country, than to put them on a dole or throw them out into the world.

These 250,000 farm cases have been put on a dole. It has been officially designated as a bare subsistence. It is certainly bare. It is about one-third less than they were receiving under F. E. R. A. I have sample budgets in my file to prove this. A family of a half dozen people given subsistence grants of around $20 a month. If there is to be any concerted action taken by Members of Congress representing the area in which these 250,000 farm families live, and I understand there will be, I want the question of the amount of these subsistence grants to receive equal consideration with the question of work for these farmers. They have the same right to work as the urban population, but if they are not so situated that work is practicable, then they should receive comparable relief.

Without any thought of criticism of the administration, with, indeed, a feeling of appreciation of the amount recommended, I shall feel free to vote for some reasonable increase. But if we do not get it, I shall not feel that all is lost or that the people are to be permitted to suffer. If there was any doubt on that point, it should be dispelled forever by the fact that the President, in his second inaugural, when his last race had been made and won, when he had no personal future stake in national elections, stressed above all things, the lot of the unemployed and the underprivileged and pledged himself to do everything in his power to remedy the situation. Furthermore, Congress will probably still be in session at a time when it will not be a question of dispute whether the sum appropriated is sufficient, and when further action may be taken by the Congress.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on this bill may have permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Payments to Federal land banks on account of reductions in interest rate on mortgages: For an additional amount for payments to each Federal land bank of such amount as the Land Bank Commissioner certifies to the Secretary of the Treasury is equal to the amount by which interest payments on mortgages held by such bank have been reduced during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1936, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph "Twelfth" of section 12 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended, to supplement the amount made available for this purpose for the fiscal year 1937 in one fund by the "First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1936", $6,000,000.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GILCHRIST: Page 11, line 9, after "1936", strike out "$6,000,000" and insert "$5,999,999."

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is a technical one to afford me a chance to say a word about the language which refers to land-bank mortgages and the interest which farmers pay upon them.

The report in connection with this paragraph says that the appropriation is proposed as a measure of relief. This is not a correct statement, because it is a matter of right and not of relief. The Government equitably owes it to the farmers to make farm land-bank mortgages bear a rate of interest not in excess of 3½ percent. Last year at the time of the adjournment I pointed out that at that time the Government itself issued farm mortgage corporation bonds. Uncle Sam himself did this and he did it at a very cheap rate of interest—1½ percent and 2 percent, and never above 3 percent. Then he takes this money and invests it in the consolidated Federal land-bank bonds, which at that time bore as high as 4 percent. By virtue of this spread in the interest which Uncle Sam paid and the interest which he received from the consolidated Federal land-bank bonds, Uncle Sam made enormous profits.

In June of last year these profits amounted to $23,393,639. This money was taken from the farmers who were paying this interest. When we who are trying to keep down farm interest rates propose in Federal land-bank mortgages that the farmers should have the money at three and a half percent, we are simply proposing a thing that is just and righteous, and not a thing that is a matter of relief at all, because the Government was exploiting the farmers and had made an enormous profit out of these transactions, amounting to the sum I have referred to, or about twenty-three and one-third million dollars. Interest rate at 3½ percent to farmers on Federal land-bank mortgages can go on, and should go on, without costing the Government one penny, because the Government is making this money out of the transactions which I have spoken of. At that time there was a bill before us which was finally passed on the last day of Congress, but it extended this 3½-percent interest to July 1, 1937, only. There is now before us another bill extending the time for another year, and I am saying to the Members here that the proposition involved is not one of relief, it is not one of gift, but it is one of right; and with these remarks I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to withdraw the amendment, hoping that justice will be done when the proper time comes. I will here read a paragraph from my remarks last June, as follows:

I repeat that the Government acquires bonds of the Federal land banks which are secured by the farmer's mortgage and which are known as consolidated Federal land-bank bonds. These bonds draw interest as high as 4 percent and even more, and this high interest rate is paid to the Government. Then it turns around and, under the name of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation—which is really Uncle Sam—floats huge sums which bear interest at rates running from 1½ percent to 3 percent. There it is making a profit in no case less than 1 percent and in many cases more than 1 percent on these Farm Mortgage Corporation bonds, amounting in the aggregate on principal sum to more than three-quarters of a billion dollars. Now, I submit that the Government has no right to exploit the farmers in such a way and that we must remedy the faults of this unjust practice. We did something toward a remedy last year, and we are now giving some help for next year. But the basic facts remain: Uncle Sam does not treat others like this and he must not be allowed to treat farmers like this.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

(b) For the payment of judgments, including costs of suits, rendered against the Government of the United States by United States district courts under the provisions of an act entitled "An act authorizing suits against the United States in admiralty for damages caused by and salvage services rendered to public vessels belonging to the United States, and for other purposes", approved March 3, 1925 (U. S. C., title 46, secs. 781–789), certified to the Seventy-fifth Congress in House Document No. 117, under the following departments, namely:

Navy Department, $6,013.83;
Treasury Department, $11,468.70;
War Department, $6,656.64;
In all, $24,139.17.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, after line 3, insert "together with such additional sums as may be necessary to pay interest as specified in such judgments as provided by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For party expenses, Coast and Geodetic Survey, $200.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, line 11, strike out the word "party" and insert the word "surveying."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. This act may be cited as the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1937.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I know that everybody is in a hurry to get away. But I want to call attention to the legislation we are considering. In the first place, we waived all points of order, but this in violation of ordinary principles of democratic legislation. We enact much legislation that we would not have enacted except that we waive all our rights in advance. I do not know what has happened to the minority; perhaps they are not in good health. I do not know what is the matter with the leader of the minority.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield to my distinguished friend the minority leader. I trust his health is not bad?

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman had a right to object when it was asked to waive all points of order.

Mr. MAVERICK. I agree.

Mr. SNELL. Why did you not do it? Why find fault with other people? [Laughter.]

Mr. MAVERICK. The gentleman says I am finding fault. Hereafter, when it is necessary to do the duty of the minority, I will do it because I know the Republicans will not. [Laughter]. Really, it is a serious matter to vote away legislative rights.

We have other serious questions facing us; we have the subject of the Constitution and the power of the Supreme Court to consider; and what are we doing?

What would we do if all this legislation we are passing—social security, old-age pensions—after we run along here 3 or 4 or 5 months should suddenly be knocked out by the Supreme Court? All we could do would be to turn our tails and go back to the people and say, "We cannot do anything, the Supreme Court has knocked it all out." That is what we are doing. We are not facing the issue of the Supreme Court, or even talking about it, and all the gentlemen on the other side do is to sit over there and sort of smile.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not talking to his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SNELL. I propose to do my duty now. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order and the gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, the last part of section 10 says "546." I must confine myself to the subject matter. The technical subject matter is "546." Now, Mr. Chairman, the Republicans have made 546 mistakes up to this time, and, to proceed, we are not facing whatever issues we have, even the issue of this very bill. We are not doing it in any way whatsoever, but we are sitting here and blindly voting, and what the Republicans say about us, that we just vote what a committee brings before us, is right.

The chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. BUCHANAN, said the Budget is not sacred. A lot of other things are not sacred. What are we doing? The most that we are doing is letting an agency tell a committee what we ought to do, then we shut our eyes, vote, and then maybe the Supreme Court will knock it out.

Mr. Chairman, we are not exercising or even discussing the necessary powers of Congress. We do not seem to be very proud of what we are doing, and I would say that what we ought to do is to face problems we have to face. I am going to keep on saying it because we can stay here for several more months and then have the Supreme Court declare everything unconstitutional; then we will go home and will have accomplished nothing. Let us not build a house of cards. Let us face the issue.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment in order to comment briefly upon the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK]. So far as his observation on the Republican attitude upon this bill is concerned, the gentleman is probably right, but I want to suggest to him that in the circumstances Republican Members of Congress cannot possibly take a different attitude.

This is a deficiency appropriation bill, the principal item of which is $790,000,000 for relief for people who are without jobs and who cannot get jobs. I am going to support the bill and I venture to say that practically every Republican here will support it. Why? Simply because we know that it is necessary under the circumstances to vote this money in order to keep about two million and a half people from starving.

So much for the Republican attitude on this bill. Now, sir, the point I make is this: The fact that after 4 years of unhampered New Deal control it is still necessary at this time for the Federal Government to spend $790,000,000 to keep the unemployed from starving during the next 5 months—which is at the rate of $2,000,000,000 per year—is one of the most effective indictments that could possibly be drawn against the present administration.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I would rather finish my statement first. I think the serious attention of the Congress and the country should be called at this time to the fact that these continuing appropriations for relief have for the past 2 years been the only weapon used by the administration to attack the problem of unemployment, and that this administration has no program whatever at the present time for a permanent solution either of the unemployment problem or of any of the major problems which confront the country now or which confronted it when the majority party came into power. The only part of their original reemployment or recovery program that is even left on the statute books today is the spending part of it.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I trust the gentleman will withhold until I finish my statement. We all know what the major problems were which confronted the country when the present administration came into power. They were precisely the same then as they are now.

Those major problems were, first, the problem of industrial recovery; the solution of which, by common agreement, lay in the finding of a method by which the millions of men then out of work could be restored to permanent employment in private industry; and, second, the problem of farm solvency and the future destiny of agriculture. There were other very important issues, of course, but in comparison with the two main problems I have mentioned the others were minor issues and were so regarded by the people generally. Had those two problems been solved, recovery would have been accomplished.

Now, what has the Roosevelt administration done about solving these main problems?

The Roosevelt approach to a solution to the first of these problems was the N. R. A. That, admittedly, is all of the legislation ever offered by the administration directly on the subject of unemployment in private industry. I am not concerned here with the argument whether the N. R. A. would have worked or not had it been constitutional. I simply call your attention to the fact that although that law has been invalidated by action of the Supreme Court for nearly 2 years the administration has not to this day even so much as hinted that it has, or that it intends to have, any legislation whatever to replace it, and, of course, it has none. That problem is right where it was on March 4, 1933.

The attempted New Deal solution of the other major problem, the farm problem, was the A. A. A. That law embraced its entire legislative program upon that subject. Again, without arguing here how far the Triple A may or may not have gone in the direction of helping the farm situation had it been constitutional, the fact remains that the Supreme Court has plainly said that the object and purpose of the Triple A—namely, the Federal control and curtailment of agricultural production, either by outright compulsion or monetary inducement, in order to carry out the Wallace theory of agriculture scarcity—is forbidden by the Constitution; and the Supreme Court having so declared, the Roosevelt administration quit the farm problem cold. Just as it did the unemployment problem after the N. R. A. decision. And the farmer, after 3 years of "the more abundant life", is just where he was when the New Deal came into power. Moreover, for the first time in our history, farm families have been obliged to go on relief, and thousands of them are on relief now.

From the day of his first inauguration right down to the present moment the President has had an absolutely free rein, together with all the money he has ever asked for, in solving all of the problems of the Nation in his own way. His prepledged 3-to-1 majority in Congress has not only passed every bill he has told them to, but, with a very few exceptions, they have refused even to consider any proposal that did not come from the White House.

And what has been the result? So far as any permanent solution is concerned, the net result of it all is that after 3 years of experimentation on national problems we are right back where we started. We still have 10,000,000 people out of work in private industry. We still have other millions on relief or on Government-made work. We still have, to a frightful degree, an insolvent farm population, without buying power. According to the President's statement in his inaugural address nearly one-third of our whole population have not enough to eat, and their standard of living is below that required to maintain the common comforts and decencies of life. And further than that, after spending more than $30,000,000,000 in the last 4 years the Roosevelt administration finds itself today not only without any comprehensive existing law for the permanent solution of these problems but even without any announced plan or program for their future solution. The only permanent program that has been evolved by this administration is the program of continued Government spending.

And it is because the administration has no other program, it is because it has failed utterly to solve the unemployment problem, and it is because the administration refuses to give consideration to any legislation except that of their own making, that it is necessary for us to support this measure. We will not let people starve, and since the pending bill is the only method to prevent them from starvation that the administration majority in Congress will permit us to consider, obviously we will vote for it. I dare say upon final passage there will not be a single Republican vote against it. In the very circumstances there could not be.

And that, Mr. Chairman, explains, I think, the Republican attitude on this bill, and that also, I think, answers the inquiry upon that point made by the gentleman from Texas a few moments ago.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is high time for Congress and the country to take stock of what this administration is doing. It is high time for them to stop and ask what, if anything, is now the administration's program. I think that this administration ought now to tell the people of the country, frankly, what kind of a program it has in mind to solve the unemployment problem. It ought to tell them whether it intends to offer legislation that will help to restore them to work in private industry or whether its only idea upon this subject is to continue indefinitely, year after year, to appropriate money for relief as we are doing at the present time.

If the administration has a plan, if it has a legislative program for the solution of any of our major problems, particularly unemployment, it ought to say so, and it ought immediately to offer that program. I repeat that, with the exception of those proposals which the Supreme Court has declared to be unconstitutional, no legislative program for recovery has been offered.

The people, in my opinion, patient as they are and generous to this administration as they have been, are not inclined longer to tolerate evasion and delay. They are entitled to real action, not subterfuge, and they are entitled to it now. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. McCORMACK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 3587, the deficiency appropriation bill, directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to propound a unanimous-consent request at this time.

My understanding is, and I think it is correct, that on the calendar we have only three bills. One, as I understand, will be considered under a special rule on Thursday. The other two are District bills which the committee desires to bring up on District day.

Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday, tomorrow, may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I happen to be chairman of a committee, and we have had our difficulties in getting our bills reported out of the committee, through the Rules Committee, and I am constrained to inform the leader of this House that I am not going to sit here and permit any request to suspend Calendar Wednesday during this session.

Mr. RAYBURN. Let me say to the gentleman before he objects that he may have a different view of it after he hears what I have to say. If the calendar is called tomorrow the first committee we will reach that will have a bill will be committee no. 31. The next time we call the calendar we will start at no. 32, and every committee above no. 31 will have to wait until every other committee is called. The gentleman's committee might get caught in that. I am trying to protect the committees of the House by making this request for tomorrow.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I wish to ask the majority leader if it is going to be the policy of the leadership to suspend Calendar Wednesday during this session.

Mr. RAYBURN. It is not.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. If that is not to be the policy and any advantage can be obtained by suspending Calendar Wednesday this time, I will not object; but I serve notice now that I am not going to sit here and permit a unanimous-consent request to go through to suspend Calendar Wednesday, and you might as well know it.

Mr. RAYBURN. I know that.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is such an unusual time to ask for this unanimous consent that I do not understand the purpose of it. I have on the Clerk's desk a motion to recommit the deficiency appropriation bill, and I have not as yet been recognized.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman in no way waives his right. His motion will be submitted to the House as soon as the present matter is disposed of.

Mr. BOILEAU. That will be disposed of this afternoon?

The SPEAKER. Absolutely.

Mr. SNELL. I reserve the right to object to ask the majority leader if he can tell us what will be the program for tomorrow?

Mr. RAYBURN. There is only one speech of 10 minutes, as my memory serves me.

Mr. SNELL. If that is all, why can we not arrange to adjourn over until Thursday?

Mr. RAYBURN. I forget who the gentleman was who secured permission to speak. If he were here, I would be glad to ask his permission that we might adjourn over until Thursday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. PHILLIPS] received permission to address the House on tomorrow.

Mr. RAYBURN. I may say that a rule will be reported tomorrow, so perhaps we had better meet.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] that business in order on Calendar Wednesday may be dispensed with tomorrow?

There was no objection.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1937

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit the bill, which is now on the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BOILEAU moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to that committee to report the bill back to the House forthwith with the following amendment: On page 3, line 21, after the comma following the word "thereof", strike out "$790,000,000", all of lines 22 and 23 and line 24 down to and including the word "act", and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$1,499,000,000, which amount shall be added to the appropriation made in such act, not less than $1,040,000,000 of which amount shall be allocated to the Works Progress Administration for the purpose of continuing work relief, and not less than $404,000,000 of which amount shall be used for rural rehabilitation, loans, and direct relief to farmers and livestock owners; the balance to be used to proportionately increase the specified limitations prescribed under the provisions of the said Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936."

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Wisconsin opposed to the bill?

Mr. BOILEAU. I ask for recognition. I do not qualify in that respect, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there any Member present opposed to the bill who desires to make a motion to recommit?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU) there were—ayes 23, noes 241.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAVERICK, Mr. HARRINGTON, Mr. STACK, Mr. HILL of Oklahoma, and Mr. REES of Kansas asked and were given permission to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a statement made by the President today discontinuing negotiations on the power pool.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Was general consent given to Members to extend their remarks on the deficiency bill?

The SPEAKER. That permission has already been granted.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, the meeting of the new Members that was scheduled for this afternoon will be postponed, subject to a later announcement.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri (at the request of Mr. BOYKIN), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mrs. NORTON (at the request of Mr. KENNEY), for the balance of the week, on account of illness.

To Mr. DRIVER (at the request of Mr. MILLER), indefinitely, on account of the death of his father.

To Mr. EICHER (at the request of Mr. WEARIN), until Thursday, on account of death in family.

To Mr. LARRABEE, for 1 week, on account of illness.

To Mr. REILLY (at the request of Mr. BOILEAU), for today, on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, January 27, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at 10 a. m., January 28, 1937. Business to be considered: Open hearing on H. R. 1668, long-and-short-haul bill. In view of the exhaustive hearing held in the previous Congress, the committee desires to make this hearing as brief as possible.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

300. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a supplemental report disclosing the names of officers and employees of corporations subject to taxation under the provisions of title I of the Revenue Act of 1934; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

301. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the draft of a bill to increase the extra pay to enlisted men for reporting which the War Department presents for the consideration of the Congress with a view to its enactment into law; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

302. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the draft of a bill to repeal an act of March 3, 1933, entitled "An act to provide for the transfer of powder and other explosive materials from deteriorated and unserviceable ammunition under the control of the War Department to the Department of Agriculture for use in land clearing, drainage, road building, and other agricultural purposes", which the War Department presents for the consideration of the Congress with a view to its enactment into law; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

303. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to change the designations of the Abraham Lincoln National Park, in the State of Kentucky, and the Fort McHenry National Park, in the State of Maryland; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. BLOOM: Committee on Foreign Affairs. House Joint Resolution 52. Joint resolution relating to the participation by the United States in the International Exposition of Paris, 1937; without amendment (Rept. No. 58). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. STEAGALL: Committee on Banking and Currency. House Joint Resolution 127. Joint resolution to extend for a period of 2 years the guaranty by the United States of debentures issued by the Federal Housing Administration; without amendment (Rept. No. 59). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RAMSPECK: Committee on the Civil Service. H. R. 1531. A bill extending the classified civil service to include postmasters of the first, second, and third classes, and for other purposes; with amendment (Rept. No. 60). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. McREYNOLDS: Committee on Foreign Affairs. H. R. 2924. A bill for the relief of certain officers and employees of the Foreign Service of the United States who, while in the course of their respective duties, suffered losses of personal property by reason of war, catastrophes of nature, and other causes; with amendment (Rept. No. 61). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3195) for the relief of C. B. Morse, and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 3666) to create a Federal Coal Trade Commission and define its powers and duties, to provide for the cooperative marketing of coal, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SUMNERS of Texas: A bill (H. R. 3667) to amend section 29 of the Bankruptcy Act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3668) to provide for the taking of depositions in criminal proceedings, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3669) providing for waiver of prosecution by indictment in certain criminal proceedings; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 27, 1937

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God and Father of mankind, we thank Thee for Thy gift of sweet, refreshing sleep, and for the glory and beauty of this newborn day, in which we pray for wisdom that we may learn with patience the art of ruling our own lives for their highest good, with ever due regard for the lives of others. Save us henceforth from sullen discontent and from useless striving against the circumstances of our lot, that by perfect obedience to Thy will we may win a larger, freer life and a more abiding faith. So may it be ours to comfort those who mourn, to raise the fallen, to relieve the needy, to forgive the wrongdoer, and to encourage all who love simplicity and goodness; and grant that as we give to others Thou mayest give to us, that we may daily increase in the spirit of true helpfulness both in word and deed. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, January 26, 1937, when, on request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

Res. 3) to prohibit the exportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war from the United States to Spain, and also the enactment of legislation placing an embargo on arms shipments to Germany, Italy, and Portugal, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of New York City and vicinity, praying for the enactment of legislation creating a Federal music project as a permanent establishment to be subsidized with a living wage for musicians, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

APPROPRIATION FOR RELIEF—BOSTON, MASS.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague [Mr. LODGE] and myself I present a telegram from the mayor of Boston, which I ask may be treated in the nature of a petition, printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BOSTON, MASS., January 27, 1937.

HON. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate:

Advised that appropriation bill reported by House committee provides only six fifty-five millions out of seven ninety millions. This will force slash in existing minimum quotas of over 25 percent and 33-percent cut in expenditures between now and June 30. Such drastic retrenchment impossible in Boston. Urge larger sums so no cut will be necessary.

FREDERICK W. MANSFIELD,
Mayor of Boston.

HOUSING AND CULTURAL PROJECTS OF THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. WAGNER. I present and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred two resolutions, one dealing with the subject of housing and the other with the development of the cultural and educational projects of the Federal Government.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to committees as indicated below:

To the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Resolution on housing, passed unanimously by the board of directors of the National Federation of Settlements

Resolved, That the National Federation of Settlements recommends to its communities the passage of the Wagner bill, the creating of local authorities, the necessity of relating rehousing to the demolition of slum areas, and, in general, insisting upon a national low-rental housing program providing for Federal subsidy, with decentralization in construction, management, and community planning.

To the Committee on Education and Labor:

Resolution on the development of Federal W. P. A. cultural and educational projects into a Federal department of cultural-educational work—Passed unanimously by the board of directors of the National Federation of Settlements

The board of directors of the National Federation of Settlements herewith registers its conviction that public unemployment relief in the form of wages for work socially useful is the outstanding contribution of the past 4 years in meeting the horrors of economic catastrophe. The use of the services of a proportion of unemployed men and women to safeguard and improve the conditions of life of those working-class families hardest hit by the depression is one of the finest aspects of work relief. The building of roads and other large-scale improvements which bring ease and pleasure to possessing groups not critically affected by the depression would have been piling injustice upon injustice. That unemployed have been set to create public playgrounds, parks, and housing in working-class areas has been real gain.

The allocation of the service of a considerable number of unemployed professional people and artists to neighborhoods in which the unemployed live is to this board a particularly sound principle. Settlement workers know, as a result of 50 years of service spent in depressed areas in different parts of the United States, that such localities are pitiably understaffed in the fields of medicine, nursing, recreation direction, and leadership in music, art, and handicraft, dance, drama, literature, science and economics, and social meetings.

Before the depression settlements had brought into being in widely scattered localities across the country a number of significant cultural institutions; i. e., music schools, art schools and exhibition rooms, little theaters, dance studios, gymnasium and athletic centers, educational centers in which young people and adults met for study, discussion, and social recreation. Enterprises such as these ministered to considerable minorities. Their essential purpose was to serve as models for public action. They indicate what public educational-cultural institutions the public authorities could and should provide.

The lot of vast numbers of people living in tenement areas under home and work relief, supplemented by the new educational and cultural opportunities provided by Federal, State, and city cultural projects, is markedly better than it was in the boom days of the late 1920's. The splendid human results already apparent from beginnings made in the fields of slum clearance, housing, and Government support of education and recreation have demonstrated beyond any doubt that it is vitally important for the Nation to take a hand in stimulating local communities to move more rapidly in these directions.

This board believes that when the gains of the past 4 years are properly evaluated, the contribution made by the Federal cultural projects will be found to be among the most significant, lasting, and productive.

Settlements welcome every sign that the depression is passing. But they would like to see National and State departments of cultural education established to consolidate the gains made during the past 4 years. There seems little possibility that even the most competent W. P. A. artists, musicians, dancers, actors, and recreational leaders, many of whom have acquired valuable skill during their depression service, now serving in settlements and public institutions, can at this time find places in private schools or in industry. Artists and educators must be assured certainty in their employment of at least a year or two if their service is to be of good quality. The members of this board are quite aware that there are great differences in the quality of the work done in the above fields in different parts of the country. But their experience shows that, with proper administrative safeguards, a sound and advancing scheme to raise the level of the cultural life of the Nation can be devised and put into operation.

We therefore urge the Federal Government to allocate moneys to be used as grants in aid to continue to employ teachers and practitioners of the arts, education, and recreation of high competence. The work of such leaders should be administered by persons of undoubted accomplishment and standing in their fields. This staff should have the assistance of unpaid advisory boards of professional leaders, one of whose duties should be to help devise programs to improve the conditions of life in working-class areas and to discover and bring out the native powers of our children and youth. We urge especially that those practitioners and administrators of undoubted capacity developed under W. P. A. be held together and used as a nucleus for such a national department. We further suggest that relief authorities be instructed to find employment in other fields or to provide relief for those incompetent persons who have been included in artistic projects because their need demanded that relief be found for them.

This board hereby places on record its opinion that a relapse into the cultural barrenness of 1930, after what has been accomplished since 1933, would be one of the tragedies of the unemployment debacle.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 293. A bill for the relief of Charles Wilson (Rept. No. 14); and

S. 295. A bill to authorize the award of a decoration for distinguished service to John C. Reynolds (Rept. No. 15).

Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 115. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act to recognize the high public service rendered by Maj. Walter Reed and those associated with him in the discovery of the cause and means of transmission of yellow fever", approved February 28, 1929, by including therein the name of Gustaf E. Lambert (Rept. No. 16); and

S. 223. A bill for the relief of Benjamin H. Southern (Rept. No. 17).

Mr. NEELY, from the Committee on Rules, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 81) to create a Joint Congressional Committee on Government Organization, reported it with amendments.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

Mr. NEELY, from the Committee on Rules, reported a resolution (S. Res. 69), as follows:

Resolved, That the Vice President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a select committee of nine Members of the Senate to be known as the Select Committee on Government Organization, for the purpose of considering and reporting upon the subject matter contained in the message of the President of the United States of January 12, 1937. All bills and resolutions introduced in the Senate proposing legislation concerning reorganization, coordination, consolidation, or abolition of, or reduction of personnel in, organizations or units in the executive branch of the Government shall be referred by the Vice President to the said Select Committee on Government Organization. The said Select Committee on Government Organization is hereby authorized to report to the Senate at any time by bill or otherwise with recommendations upon any matters covered by this resolution; and any bill or resolution so reported shall be placed upon the calendar and have a privileged status.

That said committee or any subcommittee thereof is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States whether or not the Senate is sitting, has recessed, or adjourned; to hold such hearings; to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents by subpena or otherwise and to take such testimony as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the Vice President or the chairman of said committee, and shall be served by any person designated by them or either of them. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any questions pertinent to the matter herein authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by sections 102, 103, and 104 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended (U. S. C., title 2, secs. 192, 193, and 194).

LIMITATION OF DEBATE ON GENERAL APPROPRIATION BILLS

Mr. NEELY, from the Committee on Rules, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 8) limiting debate on general appropriation bills (submitted by Mr. GLASS on the 6th instant), reported it with an amendment.

PRINTING ADDITIONAL COPIES OF REVENUE ACT OF 1936

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, by direction of the Committee on Printing I report a Senate concurrent resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 3) was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 28,000 additional copies of the act (Public, 740, 74th Cong.), an act to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, approved June 22, 1936, of which 15,000 copies shall be for the use of the House document room, 5,000 copies shall be for the Senate document room, 2,000 copies for the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, 1,000 for the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and 5,000 for the Joint Committee on Printing.

GREATER TEXAS AND PAN AMERICAN EXPOSITION

Mr. CONNALLY. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 20) authorizing the President to invite the Pan American Republics and the Dominion of Canada to participate in the proposed Greater Texas and Pan American Exposition. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized and requested, by proclamation or in such manner as he may deem proper, to invite the Pan American Republics and the Dominion of Canada to participate in the proposed Greater Texas and Pan American Exposition, to be held in the city of Dallas in the State of Texas during the year 1937.

EXAMINATION AND SURVEY OF SNAKE RIVER

Mr. COPELAND. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably and without amendment the bill (S. 206) to provide a preliminary examination and survey of the Snake River and tributaries in the States of Idaho, Washington, and Oregon, with a view to control of floodwaters, and I submit a report (No. 13) thereon. I believe the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] desires to make some comment on the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this is merely a bill to provide for a survey. I know that under the rule it should go to the calendar; but if there is no objection, I should like to have it considered at this time.

Mr. COPELAND. It is merely a routine matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination and survey to be made of the Snake River and tributaries in the States of Idaho, Washington, and Oregon, with a view to control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of the Flood Control Act approved June 22, 1936, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for such purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

On January 23, 1937:

S. 416. An act to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised.

On January 27, 1937:

S. 415. An act to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes.

CLARIFICATION OF EXPATRIATION LAWS

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I introduce a bill, to be referred to the Committee on Immigration. In connection with the bill I ask that there be printed in the RECORD a statement which I have prepared presenting the reasons for the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The bill will be received and referred as requested by the Senator from Utah, and the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1169) to clarify the expatriation laws with regard to certain native-born citizens of the United States, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR ELBERT D. THOMAS, OF UTAH, IN CONNECTION WITH THE INTRODUCTION OF HIS BILL, S. 1169, TO CLARIFY THE EXPATRIATION LAWS WITH REGARD TO CERTAIN NATIVE-BORN CITIZENS OF THE UNITED STATES

This bill, which is entitled "A bill to clarify the expatriation laws with regard to certain native-born citizens of the United States, and for other purposes", is introduced to rectify a great wrong which is now being done to many American native-born citizens who were during their minority taken to foreign lands by their parents who there became naturalized or repatriated.

Until about 1930 such action of the parent was rightly held not to affect the American-born minor children of the parents renouncing their own American citizenship. There is no question that prior to 1930 passports were issued to such children as American citizens after coming of age, and American-born minors returning to the United States were admitted as American citizens on their birth certificates. In 1930 a contention arose between the State and Labor Departments on this subject; the former contending that the American citizenship was lost in certain countries and the Labor Department contending that the children's native-born American citizenship given by the Constitution was not affected by any act of any person, including the parents.

I think that the Labor Department was right, and in accordance with the rules laid down in the Wong Kim Ark case—or as it is popularly called, The Chinese Baby case (169 U. S. 703), but in 1932 the Attorney General sustained the State Department in an opinion (Tobiassen) reported in 36 Op. A. G. 535, and since that time American-born children have been held to lose the citizenship conferred by the Constitution upon their parents' naturalization in foreign lands.

The question was raised in the District Court of the United States for Oregon in 1934, and the judge of that court rendered an opinion which reviewed the historical attitude of the Government in protecting the American citizenship of native-born children (In re Reid, 6 Federal Supplement, 800), which he held could only be lost by the voluntary expatriation of the citizen himself and not by the action of the parents, and criticized severely the Tobiassen opinion, which he said placed the convenience of the Government above the constitutional rights of citizens.

The Circuit Court of Appeals of the Ninth Circuit reversed the district court (73 F. (2d) 153), basing the opinion partly on treaty relations with Great Britain, but also on a statement in the Government's brief that the State Department had uniformly for many years construed the act of March 2, 1907 (sec. 2), as depriving American children of this class of their citizenship; but I think it can be shown that this statement was erroneous and is certainly contrary to the long-continued construction of the Labor Department. The Supreme Court of the United States refused certiorari in the Reid case on the ground that the time had expired before the petition was filed. The merits of the case were not even referred to.

Section 2 of the act of March 2, 1907, provides as follows:

"Any American citizen shall be deemed to have expatriated himself when he has been naturalized in any foreign state in conformity with its laws, or when he has taken an oath of allegiance to any foreign state.

"When any naturalized citizen shall have resided for 2 years in the foreign state from which he came, or for 5 years in any other foreign state, it shall be presumed that he has ceased to be an American citizen, and the place of his general abode shall be deemed his place of residence during said years. Such presumption may be overcome on the presentation of satisfactory evidence to a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States, under such rules and regulations as the Department of State may prescribe. Duplicates of any evidence, registration, or other acts required by this section shall be filed with the Department of State for record."

Neither the above provisions of the Expatriation Act of 1907 nor any other act can be construed under Wong Kim Ark as taking away or affecting the native-born citizenship except by the voluntary act of the citizen himself, nor can any treaty between the United States and any foreign power relating to the treatment of the naturalized citizens of one country in the land of the other affect the citizenship of any native-born American citizen, as, whatever the United States might do by treaty in regard to the citizenship of its citizens, those native-born citizens cannot be deprived of their citizenship under provisions relating exclusively to naturalized citizens, even though such naturalized citizens be their parents.

The executive departments of the Government also claim that this loss of American citizenship may be the result of a law of the foreign country, but certainly no native-born American citizen can be deprived of the citizenship given by the Constitution under any law of any foreign state, even if alleged to be based on a naturalization treaty, unless the treaty specifically refers to native-born as well as to naturalized citizens.

The changed attitude of the Government on this question is demonstrated in a case now pending to deport a young woman born in the city of New York to whom, after disclosure to the American consul in Sweden of all facts relating to the return to Sweden and prolonged stay there of her parents, who were American naturalized citizens of Swedish origin, a passport as an American citizen was issued in 1929 by the American consul in Sweden, by direction of the Secretary of State, when she was 21 years old, and on which passport she returned to the United States, where she has resided since September 1929.

The Government of the United States has instituted proceedings to deport this native-born young woman on the sole ground that when her father recovered his Swedish citizenship by remaining 2 years in Sweden, not only did he, but also his minor children residing with him, as she was at that time, lose the American citizenship conferred on them by the Constitution of the United States, so that they can now only enter the United States as aliens under the quota.

That this is a changed attitude of the executive departments of the Government is demonstrated by a letter written by one of the American vice consuls in Sweden in 1934 about this very case in which he says that the passport was properly issued in 1929, but since that time the construction of the law has been changed.

This ought not to be.

Mr. President, to weaken in the slightest the theory of citizenship based upon the place of birth is a step backward. Facts of citizenship have become so complex, especially since the changing boundaries and conditions of the World War and the internal governments incident to the war, that this complexity has resulted in gross individual and mass injustices. The American theory of citizenship based upon place of birth, made definite and certain since the Wong Kim Ark case, is one sure foundation upon which to build. If we in America destroy this sure and certain foundation by executive action, by departmental ruling, by legal interpretation, or by treaty agreement, we shall take away a right which for more than a century, and especially since the decision in the Wong Kim Ark case, has been cherished by persons born in the United States. Likewise, we shall destroy a haven of promised justice sought for their offspring by those who could not obtain a fullness of peace and liberty themselves but who aimed to give those blessings to their children.

This bill is of vital importance, for if the tendency to break down a birthright is not checked, injustices to many persons may follow. If the tendency continues, a great constitutional principle may lose its liberty-guaranteeing significance. With the principle of citizenship based upon place of birth made less significant, America, in a period of thoughtlessness, may follow the mad rush of countries which I need not mention which wish to purify the blood of their people by purgings and drivings of all through whose veins rushes blood whose assumed nature does not satisfy the fancy or the whim of a given day's majority group.

EXTENSION AND COMPLETION OF THE CAPITOL BUILDING

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I introduce a bill to provide for the extension and completion of the Capitol Building. It will be recalled that at the last session the Senate passed a bill identical with the one I am now introducing, but the House failed to concur because of opposition raised by some antiquarians over in the Library of Congress who were against obliterating the spot where Lincoln and some others had stood.

The bill I am now introducing conforms with the original plan of the Architect of the Capitol when the two wings were added to the Capitol along about 1857 to 1860. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and referred, as requested by the Senator from Texas.

The bill (S. 1170) to provide for the extension and completion of the United States Capitol was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and and Grounds.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE

On motion by Mr. ROBINSON, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 126) authorizing the President to present, in the name of Congress, a medal of honor to Harold R. Wood, and it was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, yesterday I introduced Senate Joint Resolution 53, providing for a continuance of the participation of the United States in the Great Lakes Exposition in the State of Ohio in 1937, and for other purposes. The joint resolution was referred to the Committee on the Library. I now ask that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution, and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce, because that committee reported the original joint resolution last year providing for the participation of the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the request is granted.

INVESTIGATION OF VIOLATIONS OF FREE SPEECH AND ASSEMBLY—LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (for himself and Mr. LA FOLLETTE) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 70), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the limit of expenditures under Senate Resolution 266, Seventy-fourth Congress, second session, agreed to June 6, 1936, to investigate violations of the right of free speech and assembly and interference with the right of labor to organize and bargain collectively, is hereby increased by $50,000.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. WHEELER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 71), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-fifth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths and to employ a stenographer at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

FLOOD CONTROL—EDITORIAL FROM PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Flood Control: When?" which was published in the Philadelphia Inquirer of this morning. I also ask that the editorial may be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the editorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer, Wednesday, Jan. 27, 1937]

FLOOD CONTROL: WHEN?

As conquering floods and their attendant perils and privations harass the stricken borderlands of the Ohio; as refugees, homeless and hungry, flee the menacing waters; as a shocked Nation speeds its work of rescue and relief, there presses for answer the insistent query: "How long, how long?"

How long must the rich river valleys of America, east and west, suffer the periodic visitation of the flood scourge; how long pay their tribute in human life and loss of property to the unshackled flood tides?

How many succeeding years must see ever mightier floods make mockery of feebly planned man-made barriers; how often must be repeated those scenes of horror now being enacted in the Middle West, that are themselves but magnified repetitions of other such tragedies in years preceding?

There is but one answer. Floods will wreak their havoc, now here, now there, in the river basins of our country, and lives and property will be extinguished in the surging waters until such time as scientific, comprehensive, nationally directed flood prevention and control measures are put into practical effect.

Not to casual, piecemeal, scatter-brained and scatter-money projects, be they dikes or spillways, reservoirs or soil-saving stunts, can river-front communities look for genuine permanent relief.

Flood control is a national problem; one of our greatest. It is the duty of the Federal Government, with the cooperation of affected States and communities, to embark on an adequate program to check the river floods; to safeguard the river valleys and their people.

This lesson should have been sufficiently learned last spring, when swollen rivers rampaged in the East and the Midwest, rolling up a portentous record of devastation in their backwash. That it was not learned is clearly evident today in the submerged regions of the Ohio Valley and the Mississippi.

There was a vast amount of noisy clamor for action after last year's floods, but the action finally taken has been pitifully inadequate. Congress authorized $620,000,000 of reservoir and dam projects in the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys, but the funds remain unappropriated. On a separate, disjointed scale a number of individual control projects have been constructed or initiated. Some of these are doubtless of value. Some have yet to be given an adequate test. On the lower Mississippi levees and floodways, built over a 9-year period, await the shock of the flood tides sweeping down from the Ohio and its overladen tributaries.

But all such scattered State and community projects fall dismally to approach the set-up that must be attained if we are to fight floods instead of running away from them.

The first step in winning a battle is to know the battleground. The battleground of floods in this country is not just the surging waters of the Ohio or the broad sweep of the Mississippi. It extends to almost all of our river basins, from those of the Connecticut and the Susquehanna to the Arkansas and the Red Rivers and the Columbia and the Sacramento. Floods may strike any of these regions. With such a terrain to work upon, centralized Federal action becomes a necessity.

What systems of control and prevention should be adopted is an engineering problem. It should be left to the engineers and planned on broad lines, with those methods best adapted to specific streams and borderlands put into effect. The necessity of fighting the flood tides on their home grounds, so to speak—in their headwaters—should be fully recognized.

Control of soil erosion to reduce the volume of run-off water at stream sources; storage reservoirs at headwaters for impounding purposes until after the danger of floods has passed; check dams upstream and large catch basins farther down; spillways and floodways; adequate dikes and levees; deepening of channels and removal of silt accumulations to direct the flow; canalization and drainage of surrounding territory; diversion channels; relocation of highways and bridges and possibly of some river-side settlements perennially menaced by high water—each of these has its place in combating floods. By combining them, by making use of them scientifically and as parts of a single plan, flood control in the United States might be welded into something of value beyond all present perception.

The cost of such an undertaking undoubtedly would be in the hundreds of millions, but its beneficent results could not fairly be gaged in dollars and cents. Nation-wide, practicable flood control would mean the salvation of some of the richest lands in America. It would be a project that should give employment to vast numbers in many sections. And, considering the millions piled upon millions lost year after year because of floods—aside from the death and suffering among the victims of the floods—it would be a project that would pay for itself many times over. It would be an investment in American lives.

Too long, as the stark horror that rides the flood crest of the Ohio bears ample witness, has adequate flood control been sidestepped and ignored. Its actuality should be postponed no longer.

PROTECTION FROM AND CONTROL OF FLOODS

[Mr. BILBO asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the New York Times of the 26th instant relative to the protection from and control of floods, and also an editorial from the Washington Herald of the 27th instant on the same subject, which appear in the Appendix.]

COURT DECISION IN GEORGIA POWER CO. INJUNCTION CASE

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a copy of the findings of fact and the decree of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Georgia, Atlanta Division, in the case of Georgia Power Co., complainant, against the Tennessee Valley Authority and others.

I make this unusual request with reference to the decree of the court because of the peculiar decision which it was necessary to reach by the court. This is a decree enjoining the enforcement of an injunction issued by a court in the State of Tennessee. In other words, the court in Georgia has judicially found that a suit which was filed by the Georgia Power Co. in the State of Alabama and dismissed and later filed in the State of Tennessee, was for the purpose of vexing and harassing those whom it sought to enjoin.

The United States district court in Georgia has further found, in the words of the decision, the suit to be "harassing, vexatious, and unnecessary" on the ground that the case had already been decided in the district court of Georgia and an injunction had been denied; and the court found that "the issues and subject matters of all the suits are substantially identical."

It is further found by the United States district court in Georgia that—

The complainant has invoked equity and therefore must do equity—

And that in seeking injunctions in other courts its conduct "is not only inequitable, but is vexatious and productive of a multiplicity of suits and should be enjoined."

The court then enjoins the Georgia Power Co., its attorneys and representatives, from taking, authorizing, or permitting any action to enforce the decree of interlocutory injunction issued on December 22, 1936, by the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Tennessee.

So we find the disagreement between the various courts as to government by injunction having reached such a state that one court is compelled to enjoin the injunction issued by another court. Of course, if it should go still further, four or five other courts might enjoin injunctions issued by other tribunals of similar jurisdiction enjoining the enforcement of injunctions which had been issued to suspend the operation of the laws of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the matter referred to by the Senator from Alabama will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

In the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Georgia, Atlanta Division

Georgia Power Co., complainant, v. Tennessee Valley Authority et al., defendants—No. 817, in equity

MOTION OF DEFENDANT FOR PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

This case came on to be heard at this term upon the motion of the defendant, Tennessee Valley Authority, for preliminary injunction. Evidence was introduced and the case argued by counsel orally and by brief.

FINDINGS OF FACT

The complainant's original bill, removed from the State court, sought to enjoin the defendants from certain things alleged to have been imminent and harmful to complainant. Both interlocutory and permanent injunctions were prayed for.

Upon the hearing on the application for interlocutory injunction Circuit Judge Sibley, sitting as judge designate, after a full hearing upon evidence adduced and an elaborate argument of counsel, denied same by decree dated May 28, 1936, in which he held, among other things, that complainant had, in this court, "a standing to question the right of T. V. A. to operate there (in north Georgia) if T. V. A. has no lawful right"; and that the "great question which now presses for decision is whether T. V. A. is so clearly without statutory or constitutional authority to do what it is about to do in Georgia as that it should be halted in its tracks." Answering this question, Judge Sibley found as a matter of law that the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Ashwander v. Tennessee Valley Authority (297 U. S. 288) settled that "electric energy generated at Wilson Dam and not needed for governmental purposes may be sold under authority of Congress, and that to effect sale transmission lines may be bought or built to a market for it, and this was held, although evidently the contemplated sale was not a transient or casual one, but a continuous operation amounting to a business." Judge Sibley further held that "the lines which T. V. A. is now building, whether for its own use or for transfer to North Georgia Membership Corporation, are within its lawful power. That for the present they will be fed by current interchanged with Tennessee Electric Power Co. is no objection. The interchange enables T. V. A. to sell its power at Wilson Dam which otherwise would go unsold. The interchange is a mode of sale." And further that "I cannot say that any limit of power has yet been transgressed by T. V. A. in this case."

Judge Sibley accordingly refused the preliminary injunction but "with leave for either party to apply further in case any future fraudulent or false statements to present or prospective customers made by the authority or connivance or encouragement of the other, or of any wrongful attempt by either party to induce customers or grantors of rights-of-way to break their contracts, or to organize any illegal boycott."

The day following this adverse judgment, and without the consent of this court, complainant, in conjunction with 18 other power companies, filed suits against T. V. A. and others in a court of the State of Alabama, which was, on the day before the date of hearing, dismissed by complainant, and in the chancery court at Knoxville, Tenn., which was subsequently removed to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee. The petition in the latter was an elaborate printed petition of 146 pages, which had evidently been prepared some time before the hearing and before the decision of Judge Sibley. So far as complainant is concerned, the issues and prayers of this petition are substantially the same as those in the suit in this court, and the relief sought could be afforded as well here as in the Tennessee court.

Subsequently complainant in the Tennessee suit filed a motion for preliminary injunction and after hearing thereon, the court, on December 22, 1936, granted a preliminary injunction enjoining defendants in this case from engaging in undertakings which Judge Sibley had previously held they had a right to do.

Complainant voluntarily invoked the jurisdiction and affirmative aid of this court, prior to the institution of the Tennessee suit and subsequently voluntarily proceeded to a decision which it has not sought to have revoked or modified by this court or reviewed and reversed by an appellate court; and, upon receiving a judgment which was not to its liking, it proceeded, over defendant's objections, to relitigate the same controversies in another court.

The suits filed against defendant in the Alabama and Tennessee courts were harassing, vexatious, and unnecessary, and, insofar as parties in this case are concerned, the issues and subject matter of all suits are substantially identical.

This court, prior to the filing of suits in the other courts, had assumed jurisdiction over the parties and the controversies and had passed upon such controversies.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

It is not only the right but the duty of this court to protect its jurisdiction and to effectuate its orders and decrees.

"The use of the writ of injunction, by Federal courts first acquiring jurisdiction over the parties or the subject matter of a suit, for the purpose of protecting and preserving the jurisdiction until the object of the suit is accomplished and complete justice done between the parties is familiar and long-established practice" (Looney v. Eastern Texas R. R. Co., 247 U. S. 214, 221).

To accomplish this end a court of equity "is not always limited to the restraint of the contemplated or threatened action, but may even require affirmative action where circumstances of the case demand it" (In re Lennon, 166 U. S. 548, 556).

Furthermore, "The jurisdiction of courts of equity to enforce and effectuate their own decrees by injunction or writs of assistance in order to avoid the relitigation of questions once settled between the same parties is well settled" (Root v. Woolworth, 150 U. S. 401, 411–412). (See also Continental Bank v. Rock Island Ry., 294 U. S. 648, 675–676.)

The ruling of Judge Sibley set out in said decree is the law of this case and binding upon complainant until modified or set aside by proper proceedings in this court or upon appeal. Defendants acquired plain and definite rights by the decree which was invoked by the voluntary and affirmative action of complainant. These rights are substantial and must be respected and the jurisdiction and orders of this court protected and made effective.

The facts disclosed no laches nor waiver nor estoppel on the part of defendants. They had a right to assume that the jurisdiction of this court and the effectiveness of its orders would be recognized and respected when brought to the attention of another court of concurrent jurisdiction, and the pleadings presenting such facts to the district court in Tennessee and asserting the validity and binding effect of the decision of this court, constituted no waiver of nor estoppel to claim in this court rights flowing to them by virtue of said proceedings and decree (Kessler v. Elrod, 206 U. S. 285, 260). For like reason, the failure of defendants to invoke the injunction process in this court before the Federal court in Tennessee passed upon such pleadings is excusable and the delay in taking such action did not constitute laches.

Complainant has invoked equity and therefore must do equity. It is not equity to seek relief in this court and then, after a full hearing and an adverse decision, to hasten to two other courts on the very next day and pray of them substantially the same relief sought and denied in this court. Such conduct is not only inequitable but is vexatious and productive of a multiplicity of suits, and should be enjoined.

This proceeding is not a collateral attack upon the judgment of any court of concurrent jurisdiction, but is one to make effectual to defendants rights which this court had decreed in this suit to be in defendants, and which complainant seeks to set at naught by the enforcement of a later decree of such other court. This court is undertaking only to preserve its own prior jurisdiction and to enforce its own decree by demanding obedience to it of a complainant party now before it and at whose instance the decree was rendered. This court is not undertaking to impinge upon the jurisdiction of any other court or to direct or influence its action in any way. That is a matter entirely within the control of such other court. But this court is undertaking to control the action of complainant and its agents to the extent, and only to the extent, necessary to compel obedience to its decree and respect for its jurisdiction.

Whereupon, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the Georgia Power Co. and its solicitors of record, including Messrs. Frantz, McConnell & Seymour, Messrs. Trabue, Hume & Armistead, Messrs. Baker, Hostetler, Sidle & Patterson, and Messrs. Colquitt, MacDougald, Troutman, and Arkwright, and all of its or their officers, directors, attorneys, partners, associates, clerks, representatives, and employees, and all others acting or purporting to act on its or their behalf, or in concert with them or any of them, be, and they are hereby, enjoined and restrained as follows:

1. From taking, authorizing, or permitting any action to enforce the decree of interlocutory injunction issued on December 22, 1936, by the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Tennessee, in the case of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. et al. v. Tennessee Valley Authority et al., now pending in said court, insofar as said decree relates to the rights of the Tennessee Valley Authority to construct transmission or rural distribution lines within the State of Georgia, to negotiate and execute contracts for the sale of power within said State, to sell power within said State, and to construct the necessary facilities therefor, or the right of the Tennessee Valley Authority to carry on its business and operations generally in the State of Georgia.

2. Unless hereafter authorized by this court, from continuing in any manner with or maintaining the proceedings in said Tennessee case, insofar as said proceedings may prevent or interfere with the exercise of the rights of the Tennessee Valley Authority under the decree of this court, to construct transmission and rural distribution lines within the State of Georgia, to negotiate and execute contracts for the sale of power within said State, to sell power within said State, and to construct the necessary facilities therefor, or to carry on its business and operations generally in the State of Georgia.

3. It is further ordered that complainant may have this case set down for final hearing, as it appears that it is now ripe for such hearing, and may apply in this case for such other and further relief as it may think that it is entitled to.

4. Leave is also granted to defendants to apply to this court in this proceeding for any further relief that they may think themselves entitled to.

This the 19th day of January 1937, at 4:05 p. m.

E. MARVIN UNDERWOOD,
United States District Judge.

Filed in clerk's office 19th day of January 1937, J. D. Steward, clerk, at 4:10 p. m.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Northern District of Georgia:

I, J. D. Steward, clerk of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing five pages is a true and complete copy of the findings of fact and conclusions of law, and order of the court, in the cause stated, as remains of file and on record in my office at Atlanta, Ga.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed the seal of the said district court at Atlanta, Ga., this the 20th day of January, A. D. 1936.

[COURT SEAL]

J. D. STEWARD,
Clerk, United States District Court,
Northern District of Georgia.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the request made by the Senator from Alabama is so extraordinary that I desire to occupy just a few moments of the time of the Senate to discuss the question involved.

The Georgia Power Co. went into the courts in Georgia. I think the suit was commenced in the State court and then transferred to the Federal court for the northern district of Georgia. Judge Underwood, for some reason, did not hear the case, and it was heard by Judge Sibley, of the circuit court of that circuit.

The case came on for hearing on a motion for a preliminary injunction, wherein it was asked that the same things be enjoined that were afterward enjoined by Judge Gore. Judge Sibley heard the evidence and listened to the argument of counsel on both sides, and then denied the temporary injunction. The very next day after Judge Sibley denied the injunction the Georgia Power Co., in connection with 18 other power companies, went into the northern district of Alabama in the Federal court asking and praying for the same kind of injunction. The day before that request came on for hearing the power companies went into court and dismissed the proceeding.

On the same day they commenced a suit in northern Alabama, the day after they had been defeated in their application in the Federal court of Georgia, they filed another suit of the same kind in Tennessee. This was filed by the same 19 corporations. That case was transferred to the Federal court in Tennessee, and there a hearing was had before Judge Gore and an injunction was granted tying the hands of the T. V. A., as the President said in his letter—and I shall digress a moment to comment on that letter.

In ending the further proceedings in the conference which had been held with the idea of coming to some agreement, he dismissed them all on the ground of the issuing of the injunction. He said in his letter:

> Since the conference of September 30 a sweeping preliminary injunction has been issued against the Tennessee Valley Authority upon the application of 19 utility companies, including certain companies who were parties to the conference. The securing of an injunction of this broad character, under the circumstances, precludes a joint transmission facility arrangement and makes it advisable to discontinue these conferences.

The case first commenced in the Federal court of Georgia was not dismissed. The application for preliminary injunction still remained on the docket. When Judge Gore issued the same kind of an injunction on application of the 19 companies, including the Georgia company, it was the T. V. A. which brought to the attention of Judge Underwood, judge of the northern district of Georgia, the fact that while in that court he had denied the injunction, another court had granted the injunction. This brought about the remarkable condition to which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] has referred.

That case was entitled Georgia Power Co. against Tennessee Valley Authority and others, in equity no. 817.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I may say to the Senator that when the case was brought in Tennessee it was filed in the eastern district of Tennessee. There the judge recused himself on the ground that his wife owned some stock in one of the power companies. He sent to middle Tennessee and secured Judge Gore to take charge of the case in eastern Tennessee, so it was really a matter of going to four judges instead of three.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. It is a very remarkable condition. At a not distant date I intend to address the Senate on the subject of government by injunction.

This is an illustration of a case where the power companies traveled around from one court to another for purposes of their own—I presume to find a friendly court—and when they found one they stayed there, although in one case, where they were under the same rules, a court of concurrent jurisdiction had denied their application after full hearing.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I take it that the inference to be drawn from this state of facts is that the power interests felt there was a judge who would be more friendly to them than the judge who had passed upon the question?

Mr. NORRIS. I presume so.

Mr. BORAH. Is it the purpose of the presentation of the facts to show that condition? Is there anything in support of it that is to be submitted by the Senator?

Mr. NORRIS. I am going to offer something in support of it right now. It is the decree of the court which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] has asked to have printed in the RECORD.

This situation was called to the attention of Judge Underwood upon motion of T. V. A. They asked that the parties in Georgia be enjoined where the injunction had already been denied, but another court in Tennessee had issued an order on application of the power companies, so they could nullify and prevent any action on the part of T. V. A. in Georgia.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask a question at that point?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does it appear from the record whether the court which finally issued the injunction that was later enjoined knew of the former presentation of the matter?

Mr. NORRIS. I cannot answer the question directly, but it appears that there was some such objection raised in the court.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator, of course, will see the pertinency of the question?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; I see it.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the court issued the injunction on the basis of what might be said to be the merits of the matter as presented in that court, it would be an entirely different question from that which would arise if the court was advised of the fact that another court of equal and concurrent jurisdiction had denied it.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes. I am not finding fault with any court. I am not attempting to criticize any judge. What I am attempting to call to the attention of the country is the methods the power companies pursue to nullify acts of Congress. They are guilty even though they never told the court anything about it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, they should have advised the court.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course they should.

I am now about to read from the statement of the court on the motion of the Tennessee Valley Authority:

MOTION OF DEFENDANT FOR PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

This case came on to be heard at this term upon the motion of defendant, Tennessee Valley Authority, for preliminary injunction. Evidence was introduced and the case argued by counsel orally and by brief.

FINDING OF FACTS

The complainant's original bill—

This is the judge speaking. I am reading from his decree.

The complainant's original bill, removed from the State court, sought to enjoin the defendants from certain things alleged to have been imminent and harmful to complainant. Both interlocutory and permanent injunctions were prayed for.

Upon the hearing on the application for interlocutory injunction, Circuit Judge Sibley, sitting as judge designate, after a full hearing upon evidence adduced and elaborate argument of counsel, denied same by decree dated May 28, 1936, in which he held, among other things, that complainant had in this court "a standing to question the right of T. V. A. to operate there (in north Georgia) if T. V. A. has no lawful right"; and that the "great question which now presses for decision is whether T. V. A. is so clearly without statutory or constitutional authority to do what it is about to do in Georgia as that it should be halted in its tracks." Answering this question, Judge Sibley found as a matter of law that the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Ashwander v. Tennessee Valley Authority (297 U. S. 288) settled that electric energy generated at Wilson Dam and not needed for governmental purposes may be sold under authority of Congress, and that to effect sale transmission lines may be bought or built to a market for it, and this was held, although evidently the contemplated sale was not a transient or casual one but a continuous operation amounting to a business. Judge Sibley further held that "the lines which T. V. A. is now building, whether for its own use or for transfer to North Georgia Membership Corporation, are within its lawful power. That for the present they will be fed by current interchanged with Tennessee Electric Power Co. is no objection. The interchange enables T. V. A. to sell its power at Wilson Dam which otherwise would go unsold. The interchange is a mode of sale." And further that "I cannot say that any limit of power has yet been transgressed by T. V. A. in this case."

Judge Sibley accordingly refused the preliminary injunction, but with leave for either party to apply further in case any future fraudulent or false statements to present or prospective customers made by the authority or connivance, or encouragement of the other, or of any wrongful attempt by either party to induce customers or grantors of rights-of-way to break their contracts, or to organize any illegal boycott.

The day following this adverse judgment, and without the consent of this court, complainant, in conjunction with 18 other power companies, filed suits against T. V. A. and others in a court of the State of Alabama, which was, on the day before the date of hearing, dismissed by complainant, and in the chancery court at Knoxville, Tenn., which was subsequently removed to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee.

Listen to this, now:

The petition in the latter was an elaborate printed petition of 146 pages, which had evidently been prepared some time before the hearing and before the decision by Judge Sibley. So far as complainant is concerned, the issues and prayers of this petition are substantially the same as those in the suit in this court, and the relief sought could be afforded as well here as in the Tennessee court.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. The question asked by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], which was not completely answered at the time, is so important that, if the Senator from Nebraska will permit, I desire to call his attention to a fact in connection with it.

Mr. NORRIS. Would the Senator just as soon let me finish reading the decree, so that it will be more continuous, and have his interruption come in afterward?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly. I simply desire to call attention to the fact that the decree, if the Senator is going to read it all, will show that the T. V. A. presented to the judge in Tennessee the fact that the court in Georgia had denied an injunction on the identical facts on which an injunction was sought in Tennessee.

Mr. NORRIS. I continue reading from the decree:

Subsequently complainant in the Tennessee suit filed a motion for preliminary injunction, and, after hearing thereon, the court, on December 22, 1936, granted a preliminary injunction enjoining defendants in this case from engaging in undertakings which Judge Sibley had previously held they had a right to do.

Complainant voluntarily invoked the jurisdiction and affirmative aid of this court prior to the institution of the Tennessee suit and subsequently voluntarily proceeded to a decision, which it has not sought to have revoked or modified by this court or reviewed and reversed by an appellate court; and, upon receiving a judgment which was not to its liking, it proceeded, over defendant's objections, to relitigate the same controversies in another court.

The suits filed against defendant in the Alabama and Tennessee courts were harassing, vexatious, and unnecessary; and, insofar as parties in this case are concerned, the issues and subject matter of all suits are substantially identical.

This court prior to the filing of suits in the other courts had assumed jurisdiction over the parties and the controversies and had passed upon such controversies.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

It is not only the right but the duty of this court to protect its jurisdiction and to effectuate its orders and decrees.

"The use of the writ of injunction by Federal courts first acquiring jurisdiction over the parties or the subject matter of a suit for the purpose of protecting and preserving the jurisdiction until the object of the suit is accomplished and complete justice done between the parties is familiar and long-established practice" (Looney v. Eastern Texas R. R. Co., 247 U. S. 214, 221).

To accomplish this end a court of equity "is not always limited to the restraint of the contemplated or threatened action, but may even require affirmative action where circumstances of the case demand it" (In re Lennon, 166 U. S. 548, 556).

Furthermore "The jurisdiction of courts of equity to enforce and effectuate their own decrees by injunction or writs of assistance in order to avoid the relitigation of questions once settled between the same parties is well settled" (Root v. Woolworth, 150 U. S. 401, 411–412). (See also Continental Bank v. Rock Island Ry., 294 U. S. 648, 675–676.)

The ruling of Judge Sibley set out in said decree is the law of this case and binding upon complainant until modified or set aside by proper proceedings in this court or upon appeal. Defendants acquired plain and definite rights by the decree which was invoked by the voluntary and affirmative action of complainant. These rights are substantial and must be respected, and the jurisdiction and orders of this court protected and made effective.

The facts disclose no laches nor waiver nor estoppel on the part of defendants. They had a right to assume that the jurisdiction of this court and the effectiveness of its orders would be recognized and respected when brought to the attention of another court of concurrent jurisdiction, and the pleadings presenting such facts to the district court in Tennessee and asserting the validity and binding effect of the decision of this court constituted no waiver of nor estoppel to claim in this court rights flowing to them by virtue of said proceedings and decree (Kessler v. Eirod, 206 U. S. 285, 290). For like reason, the failure of defendants to invoke the injunction process in this court before the Federal court in Tennessee passing upon such pleadings is excusable and the delay in taking such action did not constitute laches.

Complainant has invoked equity and therefore must do equity. It is not equity to seek relief in this court and then after a full hearing and an adverse decision to hasten to two other courts on the very next day and pray of them substantially the same relief sought and denied in this court. Such conduct is not only inequitable but is vexatious and productive of a multiplicity of suits and should be enjoined.

This proceeding is not a collateral attack upon the judgment of any court of concurrent jurisdiction, but is one to make effectual to defendants rights which this court has decreed in this suit to be in defendants and which complainant seeks to set at naught by the enforcement of a later decree of such other court. This court is undertaking only to preserve its own prior jurisdiction and to enforce its own decree by demanding obedience to it of a complainant party now before it and at whose instance the decree was rendered. This court is not undertaking to impinge upon the jurisdiction of any other court or to direct or influence its action in any way. That is a matter entirely within the control of such other court. But this court is undertaking to control the action of complainant and its agents to the extent, and only to the extent, necessary to compel obedience to its decree and respect for its jurisdiction.

Whereupon it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the Georgia Power Co. and its solicitors of record—

Some of these names will be familiar to Senators—including Messrs. Frantz, McConnell & Seymour, Messrs. Trabue, Hume & Armistead, Messrs. Baker, Hostetler, Sidle & Patterson, and Messrs. Colquitt, MacDougald, Troutman & Arkwright, and all of its or their officers, directors, attorneys, partners, associates, clerks, representatives, and employees, and all others acting or purporting to act on its or their behalf or in concert with them, or any of them, be, and they are hereby, enjoined and restrained as follows:

1. From taking, authorizing, or permitting any action to enforce the decree of interlocutory injunction issued on December 22, 1936, by the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Tennessee, in the case of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. et al. v. Tennessee Valley Authority et al., now pending in said court, insofar as said decree relates to the rights of the Tennessee Valley Authority to construct transmission or rural distribution lines within the State of Georgia, to negotiate and execute contracts for the sale of power within said State, to sell power within said State, and to construct the necessary facilities therefor, or the right of the Tennessee Valley Authority to carry on its business and operations generally in the State of Georgia.

2. Unless hereafter authorized by this court, from continuing in any manner with or maintaining the proceedings in said Tennessee case, insofar as said proceedings may prevent or interfere with the exercise of the rights of the Tennessee Valley Authority under the decree of this court, to construct transmission and rural distribution lines within the State of Georgia, to negotiate and execute contracts for the sale of power within said State, to sell power within said State and to construct the necessary facilities therefor, or to carry on its business and operations generally in the State of Georgia.

3. It is further ordered that complainant may have this case set down for final hearing, as it appears that it is now ripe for such hearing, and may apply in this case for such other and further relief as it may think that it is entitled to.

4. Leave is also granted to defendants to apply to this court in this proceeding for any further relief that they may think themselves entitled to.

This the 19th day of January 1937, at 4:05 p. m.

E. MARVIN UNDERWOOD,
United States District Judge.

Filed in clerk's office 19th day of January 1937. J. D. Steward, clerk, at 4:10 p. m.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Northern District of Georgia:

I, J. D. Steward, clerk of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing five pages is a true and complete copy of the findings of fact and conclusions of law and order of the court, in the cause stated, as remains of file and on record in my office at Atlanta, Ga.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed the seal of the said district court at Atlanta, Ga., this the 20th day of January, A. D. 1936.

[COURT SEAL]

J. D. STEWARD,
Clerk, United States District Court,
Northern District of Georgia.

Mr. President, at this time I have nothing more to offer than is disclosed by the decree issued by Judge Underwood. It seems to me it ought to excite the interest of every person, not only in regard to this matter but the general subject of the issuing of injunctions.

LIMITATION OF JURISDICTION IN INJUNCTION CASES

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask consent to introduce a bill; and, in view of the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], I ask unanimous consent that the clerk may read the bill. It is very short.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred; and the clerk will read.

The bill (S. 1174) to limit the jurisdiction of district courts and circuit courts of appeals with respect to suits to enjoin the execution of acts of Congress was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Judicial Code, as amended, is amended by inserting after section 264 the following new section:

"SEC. 264A. No district court or circuit court of appeals shall have jurisdiction of, and no district or circuit judge shall have jurisdiction or power to issue an injunction in, any suit in which it is sought to enjoin, suspend, or restrain the enforcement, operation, or execution of any act of Congress unless and until such act shall have been held finally invalid by the Supreme Court."

Mr. McKELLAR subsequently said: Mr. President, today I introduced a bill limiting the jurisdiction of district and circuit judges in granting injunctions. I wish to give notice that at its next meeting I shall address the Senate on that subject as soon as I may be able to obtain the floor.

THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The calendar is in order under rule VIII. The clerk will state the first bill on the calendar.

The bill (S. 766) to provide for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men and former enlisted men of the Navy for the value of personal effects destroyed in a fire at the radio direction-finder station, North Truro, Mass., on December 27, 1934, was announced as first in order.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 62) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a free highway bridge across the Missouri River at or near Atchison, Kans., was announced as next in order.

Mr. BULKLEY. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 110) for the relief of Fred M. Munn, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks for an explanation of the bill.

Mr. KING. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CROP PRODUCTION AND HARVESTING LOANS

The bill (S. 1053) to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1937, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, this is a very important bill. An identical bill has been passed by the House of Representatives and is now on the table of the clerk. I move that House bill 1545, which is identical with the one on the Senate calendar, be substituted for Senate bill 1053, and be considered at this time.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1545) to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1937, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, hereinafter in this act referred to as the Governor, is hereby authorized to make loans to farmers in the United States (including Hawaii and Puerto Rico), for fallowing, for planting, for cultivation, for production of crops, for harvesting of crops, for supplies incident and necessary to such production or harvesting, and for feed for livestock, or for any of such purposes. Such loans shall be made and collected through such agencies, upon such terms and conditions, and subject to such regulations, as the Governor may prescribe.

SEC. 2. (a) No loan shall be made under this act to any applicant who shall not have first established to the satisfaction of the proper officer or employee of the Farm Credit Administration, under such regulations as the Governor may prescribe, that such applicant is unable to procure from other sources a loan in an amount reasonably adequate to meet his needs for the purposes for which loans may be made under this act; and preference shall be given to the applications of farmers whose cash requirements are small.

(b) There shall be required as security for any such loan a first lien, or an agreement to give a first lien, upon all crops of which the production or harvesting, or both, is to be financed, in whole or in part, with the proceeds of such loan; or, in case of any loan, for the purchase or production of feed for livestock, a first lien upon the livestock to be fed.

(c) No loan made under the provisions of this act to any borrower shall exceed $400, nor shall a loan be so made in any calendar year which, together with the unpaid principal of prior loans so made to such borrower in that year, shall exceed $400 in amount: Provided, however, That in any area certified by the President of the United States to the Governor as a distressed emergency area, the Governor may make loans without regard to the foregoing limitations as to amount, under such regulations, with such maturities, and in such amounts as he may prescribe.

(d) Each loan shall bear interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum.

SEC. 3. The proceeds of each loan made by the Governor under the provisions of this act shall be impressed with a trust for the purposes for which loans may be made under this act, and may be used only for the purposes stated in the application therefor, and such trust shall continue, and the proceeds shall be free from garnishment, attachment, or the levy of an execution, until such proceeds have been used by the borrower for such purposes.

SEC. 4. (a) Fees for recording, filing, registration, and examination of records (including certificates) shall not exceed 75 cents per loan, and may be paid from the proceeds of the loan.

(b) No fees for releasing liens given to secure loans made pursuant to this act, nor any other fee not specified herein, shall be paid from the funds herein authorized to be appropriated.

SEC. 5. (a) The Governor shall have power, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States, to employ and fix the compensation and duties of such agents, officers, and employees as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act; but the compensation of such officers and employees shall correspond, so far as the Governor deems practicable, to the rates established by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

(b) Such agents, officers, and employees, or any of them, and the agents, officers, employees, and facilities of the Farm Credit Administration available for use in connection with loans made under the provisions of this act or of prior crop-production, seed, and feed loan acts of the same general character, may be used by the Governor to perform services for any institution operating under the supervision of the Farm Credit Administration, upon such terms and conditions as the Governor may determine; and such institutions are hereby expressly empowered to enter into agreements with the Governor for such purpose.

(c) For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, and for collecting loans made under other acts of the same general character, including loans made by the Governor with funds appropriated by the Emergency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1935, or the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, the Governor is authorized also to use the facilities and services of any agency or corporation operating under the supervision of the Farm Credit Administration, and of any officer or employee of any such agency or institution, or of the Farm Credit Administration, and may pay for such services and the use of such facilities from the funds made available for the payment of necessary administrative expenses, and such agencies and institutions are hereby expressly empowered to enter into agreements with the Governor for the accomplishment of such purposes and to perform the services provided for therein.

SEC. 6. (a) Except with the written permission of the Governor or his duly authorized representative, it shall be unlawful for any borrower to willfully use the proceeds of any loan:

(1) For any purpose other than those specified in the application therefor; or

(2) For the purpose of fallowing, or for the planting, production, or harvesting of any crops on, any land other than that described in his application for such loan.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any person to make any material false representation for the purpose of obtaining, or assisting another to obtain, a loan under the provisions of this act; or willfully to dispose of, or assist in disposing of, except for the account of the Governor, any crops or other property upon which there exists a lien securing a loan made under the provisions of this act.

(c) It shall be unlawful for any person to charge or accept a fee for preparing or assisting in the preparation of any papers of an applicant for a loan under the provisions of this act.

(d) Any person violating any provision of this section of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 6 months, or both.

SEC. 7. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000,000 for the purpose of enabling the Governor to carry out the provisions of this act.

(b) The moneys appropriated in pursuance of subsection (a) of this section, any amounts collected for services rendered under section 5 (b), and all collections of principal and interest of loans made under this act may be used by the Governor for making loans under this act, and for all necessary administrative expenses incurred in connection with the making and collection of such loans.

(c) Expenditures for printing and binding necessary in carrying out the provisions of this act may be made without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am sure the very able Senator from South Carolina, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, desires to make a statement concerning the provisions of this measure. I recall that last year when a similar bill was proposed and passed by the Congress the President vetoed it. However, I believe that from other sources than the one provided a sufficient sum to take care of the needs of the distressed farmers was obtained. I wish the Senator from South Carolina would address himself to this matter. What has been the change in the program, the plan, or the view of the President? What view does he now entertain concerning this proposed legislation?

Mr. SMITH. I frankly admit that I have not been informed, but I have reason to believe that the bill now under consideration, if passed, will not receive the fate that the former proposed legislation received. I think it is our duty to pass the bill. The enactment of the measure is unanimously desired both in the House and in the Senate. Judging from the sources from which the bill originated in the House, I believe it will receive more favorable consideration than similar proposed legislation received last year.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from South Carolina a question at this point. Is there any fund, within his knowledge, from which allocations may be made for loans of the character provided for in the bill?

Mr. SMITH. Through repayments of loans and from other sources, I think funds are available for this very character of legislation. I should like to state that almost 100-percent repayment of similar loans has been made in the southern and eastern sections of the country, and outside of the region stricken by terrific drought an average of over 60 percent of the loans has been repaid.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator evidently misunderstood my question. Last year, when the so-called seed-loan bill was passed, we were advised that there existed a fund, from which allocations could be made, adequate for the purposes of the legislation; and for that reason the bill was vetoed, and no effort was made to pass it over the Executive veto so far as the Senate was concerned. Now I am asking whether it is necessary to pass this bill in order that the loans may be continued.

Mr. SMITH. It is.

Mr. ROBINSON. So there is no fund within the Senator's knowledge which may be allocated to this purpose?

Mr. SMITH. There is no specific fund. The general operation was that the funds collected were covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, but from time to time they were segregated and were reissued. However, there is no specific fund for the purpose, and it is necessary for us to pass the proposed legislation.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think the Senator from South Carolina should discuss the subject from a historical standpoint. I recall that on a great many occasions bills of this nature have been passed and there has not been a reasonable return of the money borrowed under the provisions of such bills. Last year, when this matter came up, the President used language to the effect that we were tapering off in this form of assistance.

I wish the Senator would specify what amount of money was received last year for this purpose and out of what fund. As I recall, Mr. President, after the veto message had been brought to Congress, and no action was taken, about $40,000,000 was acquired from some distinct governmental agency. What amount of that has been repaid? Is any sum of that kind available this year? Is there necessity for the appropriation of this particular amount of money? What sections of the country need it most? What sums were recovered by the Government from loans made last year?

I should like a full explanation of those matters.

Mr. SMITH. The Farm Credit Administration has issued an exhaustive detailed statement as to who received the money and how much was repaid. This year, outside of the drought-stricken region, upward of 90 percent has already been paid back.

I desire to state that this is perhaps the most popular form of Government aid. It preserves the self-respect of the borrower, who pays it back whenever he is able to pay it back; and the Government ultimately stands to lose nothing, for the reason that, for example, in my State the Government not only collected practically 100 percent of last year's loans but collected the delinquencies of previous years. As to the amount of money spent last year, advices coming to me have been that the total amount spent was upward of $50,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to supplement what the Senator from South Carolina has so well said in reference to the uses of this loan. Memphis is in the center of a loan district. The people who borrow this money are the small farmers, white and colored, who are unable to borrow money from banks, or from merchants, or from any other source.

Mr. ROBINSON. They are not eligible for so-called crop-production loans because they have no collateral.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is entirely true.

Mr. ROBINSON. These loans are made exclusively on the basis of prospective crops. If a drought comes, and no crop is made, the borrower cannot pay. It is a singular fact that in the States where these loans have been made, and where droughts have not occurred, a greater percentage of the loans has been repaid than under any other form of credit extended by the National Government. It is a tribute to the honesty of the people who secure the loans, and the loans are made in very small amounts.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, our distinguished leader is absolutely correct. What he says is entirely true, certainly in the section where I live. It is also true that those who apply for these loans are the very poorest classes of persons. They probably would be on relief if it were not for the loans. They obtain the loans, they make their crops, and they pay back their loans.

Before I left my home a short time ago, the administrator in my State told me that more than 90 percent of last year's loans have been repaid, that repayments have been made on previous years' loans, and that the borrowers not only paid back their loans but, by reason of the loans, kept themselves and their families off the relief rolls.

To my mind, to the extent that this work is done, the Government of the United States is not doing a better work anywhere in the country than it is doing through making these loans.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I am in favor of the passage of the bill. In regard to the inquiry made by the Senator from Oregon, I wish to say that when these loans were first authorized by the Congress I happened to be a Member of the other House and a member of the conference committee out of which the first appropriation was made for the State of North Dakota, if I correctly recall. What the Senator from Tennessee has said is true, as well as what has been stated by the majority leader.

So far as the State of South Carolina is concerned, I believe the record has been a most remarkable one, not less than 95 percent of the loans having been repaid in any year. That is true of Arkansas and of Tennessee and of a number of other States. I must also state that there is one district which has paid as low as 5 percent; and, if my recollection is accurate concerning this district, I doubt that it has ever repaid more than 35 or 50 percent of the loans in any year since the loans were first made. Possibly the Senator from Oregon is interested in that phase of the matter; and I suggest to my colleague that he put into the RECORD a statement of the repayments by the various States, not only for the current year, but I wish it could be done for years past, because the loans have served a wonderful purpose in many States of the Union to farmers who have no collateral and who would be unable to operate their farms were it not for the loans. I fear, however, that there are some other States where the loans have been looked upon as gifts, or else there are some States engaged in farming where there is a drought every year and the farmers cannot repay the loans.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not desire to prolong the consideration of the proposed legislation. It is a commendable enterprise. I should like to know how much money was obtained last year for this purpose, how much has been repaid to the Government, and what figures or facts operate as the basis for the amount of money here sought; namely, $50,000,000. Someone ought to be sufficiently familiar with the proposed legislation to make some explanation of it. That is all I am seeking.

Mr. SMITH. I have here the figures in full, Mr. President. In 1935, $57,419,915 was loaned. The Senator will find the figures given by districts and by States. It so happens that Alabama is the banner State in the matter of repaying the loans. Here are the total amounts loaned, by States and by districts. I ask unanimous consent to have statement of emergency crop and feed loans, prepared by the Farm Credit Administration, printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

Farm Credit Administration, Division of Finance and Research.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I think it is well known that I have not been in harmony with some matters in this category; but our banks are now being used as fiscal agents of the Government; 72 percent of this money is tied up in Government securities. The result of this is that local banks are not functioning as they did in olden times, and are not performing all of what I regard to be their normal operations.

There can be no doubt, however, that farmers must have working funds with which to carry on their activities. It has been the practice of farmers always to go to the local banks and to be accommodated with loans for the preparation of the soil and for the harvesting of crops; and in the fall, when the crops were sold, the loans were repaid. If there is a situation in which banks fail to function as they formerly did, I can see no other means of relief than this proposal.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I venture to say to the Senator from New York that loans under this measure have no relation whatever to bank loans or other forms of commercial loans. There is not a bank in the United States which would make the class of loans that are authorized under this bill. If these loans are not made through a Federal agency, they will not be made at all. Therefore the question is whether the loans should be made.

Now, in respect to the statement of the Senator from New York, if he will permit me one further reference, that the funds of banks have been so absorbed in Government securities that the banks are unable to make this class of loans—that is the implication of the statement—I do not think that statement is justified. While it is entirely true that Federal securities have been taken over by banks in large amounts, the failure of the banks to make loans cannot fairly be ascribed to that fact, because every bank with which I am familiar has an abundance of funds from which loans may be made. The difficulty is that the class of applications which are presented to the banks are not of such a nature that the bank authorities feel that they are justified in making the loans. In other words, banks are very cautious about making loans; and so the failure to extend their activity cannot be attributed in large part to their inability to make loans or to a lack of funds in their possession with which to make loans, but is attributable to their policies. In any event, however, no loans of this character would be made by any other Federal Government agency, for the reason that all of them are expected to take collateral, and no bank would make a loan on the basis of a prospective crop not as yet planted. The banks never have done that; they ought not to be expected to and will not do it. This class of loans is to a group of borrowers who cannot secure credit anywhere else.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. Just on the point, if the Senator from New York will permit me, as to the capacity of the banks to lend money, the morning newspapers of today carry the statement that the excess reserves in the banks of the country as of yesterday is $2,153,000,000.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] misapprehends the purpose of my feeble remarks. I rose to support this bill and I intend to do it; but I still insist that in my section of the country it was the common practice in rather recent years for local banks to finance the farmers. That was one of the functions of the local banks. If a farmer wanted to raise a crop and did not have the wherewithal to go forward, he went to his local bank and secured a loan.

Whether it is because the banks have been called upon to utilize such a large amount of their resources in taking up Government securities or not I suppose has really nothing to do with the question. But there has come over the banks such a spirit of conservatism, for one reason or another, probably including the one I have given, that now it is not possible for the local farmer to go to his bank and be accommodated.

The point I wish to make is that if crops are to be raised, if farmers are to be encouraged to produce, they must have working capital. I like this provision of the pending bill because it preserves the self-respect of the borrower. The farmer is not receiving a gift from the Government; he is obligating himself to repay the loan. He takes the money which he receives under the operation of this measure, plants his crop, harvests it, and then in due time comes to the Government and pays his note. That to me is appealing—far more so than many other projects which are really in the nature of gifts. I say the self-respect and independence and old-time American initiative must be preserved, and if I thought that this measure was not in that direction I would vote against it. I believe, however, this bill has great merit and that it will encourage many farmers to plant and to produce, and at the same time it will preserve their self-respect, as I have said, because of the knowledge that they are expected to walk up to the captain's desk in due time and pay the note. Therefore, so far as I am concerned, I shall be glad to vote for the measure.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I merely wish to say, in response to the inquiry heretofore made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], that the statistics furnished by my colleague, the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], which are to be printed in the RECORD, show that the total amount of loans made in 1936 was $16,621,280, and of that amount the collections were $8,685,889, or 52.3 percent. The balance outstanding is $7,935,391, and, as the senior Senator from South Carolina has said, this year we are collecting upon loans of previous years. The figures I have cited as to repayments do not represent the total amount that will be collected upon the loans made, but I know the Senate will be interested in the figures which my colleague has placed in the RECORD, and which, in the various districts, show the amount paid in each State.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator have any figures indicating the aggregate amount of loans from the beginning? I was interested in the statement made by the Senator that when he was a Member of the House of Representatives this policy, if not then initiated, at any rate, was then in practice.

Mr. BYRNES. The information which my colleague has placed in the RECORD will give to the Senator from Utah the information he desires.

Mr. KING. From the beginning?

Mr. BYRNES. I said 1920. I was wrong by 1 year; it was 1921; but from 1921 down to date the figures are included in the table which has been placed in the RECORD, and I know the Senate will be interested in it.

Mr. KING. Does the document to which the Senator refers indicate the amount that is in default now for all the years?

Mr. BYRNES. I will say it does not give the information which I should like to have printed in the RECORD, and which later I am going to have printed in the RECORD, showing the repayments by the various States through the years, because I think it would be of interest to know that in certain States these loans have been repaid to the extent of between 90 and 100 percent and in some other States have not been repaid in such proportion.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will permit me, I hope the Senator from South Carolina will have the figures as to the payments by each State put into the RECORD, because I happen to know that my State has a very high repayment record. In 1 year I know it paid 98 percent.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I should like to state that this pamphlet or document gives, by States, the amount received, the number of loans, and the amount repaid.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the chairman of the committee permit me to make an inquiry?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I know in my State, and I am told the same situation exists in other States, considerable amounts, in the aggregate, have been loaned by the Resettlement Administration to farmers who are in the same category as those referred to by the Senator. I was wondering if he knew how much had been loaned to the farmers by the Resettlement organization throughout the United States without any collateral whatever?

Mr. SMITH. I do not. I have no figures or statistics on that subject. My interest is largely in this particular seed-loan proposal.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me that there is a duplication, if the information which I have is correct, between two organizations. The Resettlement Administration has made and is making loans to farmers without any collateral whatever, upon the plea that the farmers are unable to obtain loans through any other source. I have no information as to the aggregate amount which has been loaned by that organization, but I assume, from the information which I have obtained, that it extends into the millions of dollars. I know that in my own State the amount is several million dollars, and it would seem to me that all loans to the farmers in the same class as those that are contemplated by the bill under consideration should be made by one organization, instead of having so many organizations as we have in the Federal Government for the extension of credit. It would be a very good measure for economy if we could consolidate the loaning agencies. The overlapping and duplication and the enormous expense incidental to these operations ought to compel us to change the policy which has been pursued.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a few questions regarding this measure.

This loan is to be administered by the Farm Credit Administration, as in previous years?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. Further, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if the interest rate of 4 percent is not a reduction? My recollection is that the interest rate in 1936 was 5 or 5½ percent.

Mr. SMITH. It was 5½ percent. The House reduced it to 4 percent, and the Senate bill carries the same rate.

Mr. GEORGE. So that this particular loan will carry only 4-percent interest to the farmers?

Mr. SMITH. That is correct.

Mr. GEORGE. Is the limitation of $600 to any one borrower, except in such distressed areas as may be certified by the President to the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, the same as last year's limitation?

Mr. SMITH. No. The House bill which we have substituted for the Senate bill provides for a limitation of $400.

Mr. GEORGE. Is that the maximum?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; except in extraordinary cases.

Mr. GEORGE. Except in areas certified as distressed areas?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, was not the maximum last year less than is provided in the House bill this year?

Mr. SMITH. No. The conferees agreed on $400 last year and that is the amount inserted in the bill this year.

Mr. GEORGE. May I ask an additional question of the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. Is the limitation of the amount which may be deducted from the loan to cover registration and recording fees the same as it was in last year's law, to wit, 75 cents?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. Not exceeding 75 cents?

Mr. SMITH. Yes. It is identically what the conferees agreed on last year.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I express the hope that the bill will pass speedily, because on previous occasions we have been delayed in the enactment of similar legislation until it was too late to be of real service to the farmers in some sections of the country. That will not be true if the bill is passed today.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I do not object to the theory of the suggestion made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that it would be well to have all the loans made under one agency. In my State we are confronted with an emergency situation involving some 40 drought-stricken counties. The ensilage of the dairy farmers in our section of the country will be exhausted by about the first of February. By the middle of February there will be practically no feed left. The only alternative, unless some emergency fund shall be forthcoming, will be the cutting down of the dairy herds which it has taken years and years to build up. That would be an irreparable injury to the dairy interests of my State. I hope the bill now before the Senate, which will afford some relief to the people thus situated, may be speedily enacted into law.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] a question?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I understood the Senator's colleague [Mr. BYRNES] to say that this fund last year involved the expenditure of only $16,000,000, despite the fact that last year involved many major emergencies. If $16,000,000 was sufficient last year, why ask for $50,000,000 this year?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, that involves the question which was propounded by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. The total amount under the act to which the Senator from Michigan refers and under the President's Executive order for relief of this nature was in excess of $50,000,000.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I may say that the report of the House committee shows that the President allocated $37,000,000 for this purpose. In certain Western States drought loans were made from relief funds appropriated which ordinarily would have come out of the fund to which the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] refers. The amount allocated, according to the statement in the report, was $37,000,000, but the difference is due to the fact that other funds were made available out of the relief funds to take care of the situation.

Mr. SMITH. The total amount was $57,000,000.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I desire to invite the attention of Senators to the statistical details set forth on page 76 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD Appendix. The statement was made that the State of Alabama had made the best record in the repayment of loans. The statistics to which I refer show that the State of North Carolina has made the best record of all States in the Union in the matter of the repayment of loans.

Mr. SMITH. I stand corrected.

Mr. BAILEY. I think it is due my State to make that fact known. The percentage of loans made and still outstanding in North Carolina is only 7.7 percent. I question whether it would be fair to mention other States, but some have loans outstanding as high as 67 percent.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. In those States, however, they had such droughts that there was almost an entire crop failure.

Mr. BAILEY. I am not going to enter into anything in the way of an invidious comparison. I simply desire to call attention to the primacy of the record of North Carolina, of which I am duly proud.

Mr. McKELLAR. The drought States were in the Northwest, and I think they can hardly be blamed for their inability to repay.

Mr. BAILEY. May I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that he should not confine his statement to the Northwest? However, I am not going into that matter. The Senator can read the record for himself.

There is another matter of some importance to which I wish to refer. Inquiry was made, I believe, by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] as to how much of a balance of loans is outstanding. That information is contained in the table to which I have referred. There is $104,489,929 outstanding and uncollected as of December 31, 1936. That is out of a total of $306,066,794. Reduced to percentage, 34.1 percent of the loans made throughout the period of the loan policy was outstanding as of December 31, 1936.

Then, to come down to a further definite figure, the number of borrowers under this system who had not paid up on December 31, 1936, was 1,062,933.

Mr. President, I think that is a bad record. Probably it is not becoming of me to comment upon it, but I am going to make one comment. Unless the Government can lend and collect its money more efficiently than that record discloses to be the case, one of two things will happen: Either the States which are now paying will cease to pay, following the example set for them; or the losses will be so great that we will resolve this matter into a subsidy and give the money away. We cannot go on with 34 percent of the loans uncollected, while some of the States have paid their loans down to 10 percent.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. May I inquire of the Senator whether it does not occur to him that in the event the loans had not been made, the cost to the Government in the way of relief would have exceeded by far the sum of $100,000,000, greatly in excess of the losses through the years by reason of nonpayment of a portion of the loans?

Mr. BAILEY. I would not dispute that statement. That may be true.

Mr. OVERTON. May I make the further inquiry whether the Senator thinks it is proper to suggest, if I understand his argument correctly, that the States which have made such a splendid record in the repayment of the loans, because they were in a position to do so by reason of their crop production, should be penalized because other States had suffered calamities in the form of crop failures, and therefore were unable to make the repayments which other States had been able to make?

Mr. BAILEY. I am not suggesting anything like penalizing any State. I am suggesting that the statements here made that the failure to collect these loans was due to drought will not stand the test of the disclosures made by the tables to which I have referred, but I am not going to read the details because if I did I would appear to reflect unduly upon some State. I do not intend to do any such thing as that. The delinquencies are not confined to the drought-stricken States. That is a fact which the Senate should ascertain for itself.

While I am on my feet I should like to congratulate the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON]. His State has made a very fine record.

Mr. OVERTON. I thank the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BAILEY. Only 8 percent of the loans in his State are still outstanding. Louisiana ranks right next to North Carolina in that respect. I congratulate the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, as pertinent to this particular subject, I ask unanimous consent that the clerk read an interesting relic of real constitutional government; and I ask that he do it deliberately, so that the Senate may hear it read. It is a brief veto message by a great President, Grover Cleveland; and, incidentally, I may state that the veto message was overwhelmingly sustained by the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 16, 1887.

To the House of Representatives:

I return without my approval House bill no. 10203, entitled "An act to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seeds in the drought-stricken counties of Texas, and making an appropriation therefor."

It is represented that a long-continued and extensive drought has existed in certain portions of the State of Texas, resulting in a failure of crops and consequent distress and destitution.

Though there has been some difference in statements concerning the extent of the people's needs in the localities thus affected, there seems to be no doubt that there has existed a condition calling for relief; and I am willing to believe that, notwithstanding the aid already furnished, a donation of seed grain to the farmers located in this region, to enable them to put in new crops, would serve to avert a continuance or return of an unfortunate blight.

And yet I feel obliged to withhold my approval of the plan, as proposed by this bill, to indulge a benevolent and charitable sentiment through the appropriation of public funds for that purpose.

I can find no warrant for such an appropriation in the Constitution, and I do not believe that the power and duty of the General Government ought to be extended to the relief of individual suffering which is in no manner properly related to the public service or benefit. A prevalent tendency to disregard the limited mission of this power and duty should, I think, be steadfastly resisted to the end that the lesson should be constantly enforced that though the people support the Government the Government should not support the people.

The friendliness and charity of our countrymen can always be relied upon to relieve their fellow-citizens in misfortune. This has been repeatedly and quite lately demonstrated. Federal aid in such cases encourages the expectation of paternal care on the part of the Government and weakens the sturdiness of our national character, while it prevents the indulgence among our people of that kindly sentiment and conduct which strengthens the bonds of a common brotherhood.

It is within my personal knowledge that individual aid has to some extent already been extended to the sufferers mentioned in this bill. The failure of the proposed appropriation of $10,000 additional to meet their remaining wants will not necessarily result in continued distress if the emergency is fully made known to the people of the country.

It is here suggested that the Commissioner of Agriculture is annually directed to expend a large sum of money for the purchase, propagation, and distribution of seeds and other things of this description, two-thirds of which are upon the request of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress supplied to them for distribution among their constituents.

The appropriation of the current year for this purpose is $100,000, and it will probably be no less in the appropriation for the ensuing year. I understand that a large quantity of grain is furnished for such distribution, and it is supposed that this free apportionment among their neighbors is a privilege which may be waived by our Senators and Representatives.

If sufficient of them should request the Commissioner of Agriculture to send their shares of the grain thus allowed them to the suffering farmers of Texas they might be enabled to sow their crops, the constituents for whom in theory this grain is intended could well bear the temporary deprivation, and the donors would experience the satisfaction attending deeds of charity.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, a sufficient answer to the message from former President Cleveland is the statement that he was President in the horse-and-buggy days; and if the doctrine of his message were applied to the measures proposed in the present session, the R. F. C. authorization which we passed the other day with practical unanimity would meet with a veto, and the veto would be sustained in the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly. I wish to finish the sentence, however.

There is a difference, Mr. President. When President Cleveland wrote that message, there was nothing to justify any statement to the contrary of his declaration that he knew of no constitutional warrant for the expenditure of public money for personal need or public aid. In 1922, however, there was a decision by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case now so widely known as Mellon against Massachusetts—the Mellon being the then Secretary of the Treasury—in which the Supreme Court did hold that neither a person nor a State could challenge the spending power of the Congress, and the appropriation for the Children's Bureau was upheld. Then last year, I think in the month of April, the Supreme Court rendered a decision in the Butler case, as we call it—the A. A. A. case—in which for the first time the welfare clause in section 8 of article 1 of the Constitution, relative to the taxing power of Congress, was discussed thoroughly and with some authority; and a reading of that discussion will, I think, justify the conclusion that the Supreme Court is prepared to hold that Congress may levy taxes for the general welfare; that is, a general public purpose, just as it does for the national defense, provided the money is not expended in such a way as to impinge upon the rights reserved to the States. So far as I know, that is the only limitation.

Grant that President Cleveland was right in saying there was no constitutional authority for such appropriations in his day. He was right. We now have two constitutional authorities, however: Mellon against Massachusetts, in which it is held that neither a State nor a taxpayer may attack the spending power of the Congress, and the Butler case, in which it is held that the Congress may tax and spend, I might say, ad libitum—I dislike to use so broad a term—provided it does not so spend as to invade the powers reserved to the States and the appropriation is for a public purpose.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. KING. Will not the Senator agree with me when I state that a reading of the last case to which he referred, dealing with the general-welfare clause of the Constitution of the United States, shows that the Court did not definitely decide that question, but it was obiter dictum?

Mr. BAILEY. I will agree that it was obiter. The case was decided on another question, and I took pains to say that the statement of the Court would justify the conclusion stated by me. I did not say that the Court had so held as a final matter in a case adjudicated.

Mr. KING. It is to be hoped that when this question is again raised before the Supreme Court of the United States it will not follow the obiter dictum, but will resolve the question along the lines of the Madisonian interpretation of the Constitution and the interpretation placed upon the Constitution of the United States by many Presidents and by many courts.

Mr. BAILEY. That is a hope, Mr. President; but let us get to the point of that case.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thank the Senator. I shall be compelled to leave the Chamber in a few moments.

I repudiate the implication which has been injected into this debate that the Constitution of my country and yours renders the National Government powerless to relieve distress and suffering of the people who constitute its citizenship. If that doctrine was ever entertained by any considerable number of lawyers or others in this country, it has long ago been abandoned; and instead of indulging the hope that the United States will go back, as some here have suggested, to a theory and a practice that disarm the greatest power we possess in the face of peril, I express the hope that our National Government will go forward rather than backward.

We now have a situation in which 500,000 people in the United States have been driven by floods from their homes in terror. The doctrine of the veto message cited by the Senator from Virginia is that those people should not rely on the National Government for assistance; that the National Government should have and exercise no power to render them aid; that all power that exists, and all assistance that should be extended, must come from the neighbors of those who are in distress; and yet it is pointed out that most of the neighbors are in the same situation as those sought to be relieved by legislation of the character now pending.

There is practically no limitation on the appropriating power of the Congress except that which is imposed by conscience and a sense of duty. The National Government has the power to prevent farmers from starving or from being driven onto the relief rolls by lending them money with which to plant and to make crops. There is not the slightest likelihood that the Government will ever go back to the doctrine that the Constitution of this country renders the United States powerless in time of great peril to aid its citizens.

Of course, the Congress must exercise its very great powers in good conscience and in good faith, and of course there are dangers that grow out of the employment of such powers in any other way than that suggested. No real danger lies in using all the powers which exist, whether they be State, National, or individual, in times when the lives and the property of millions of people are imperiled. [Applause.]

Let us get the idea out of our minds that we are doing anything wrong when we use the power we have to help people who are suffering. It is a doctrine which cannot be shielded behind the Constitution or under the flag of our country. The Federal Government has the power, and has exercised that power, and it will continue to do so. I would hide my face in shame if I held that there is no power, save that possessed by those who are helpless, to face the storm and peril. [Applause.]

The Congress must be the judge when the necessity for action exists. And when it acts, no permanent harm will come to anything or anybody worth preserving and protecting.

Mr. GLASS rose.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I shall be very happy to yield to the senior Senator from Virginia, but I did desire to conclude.

Mr. GLASS. I will not interrupt the Senator. I will speak in my own time.

Mr. BAILEY. I shall be through in just a moment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I apologize to the Senator from North Carolina for taking so much of his time; but, as I stated in the beginning of my remarks, I shall be compelled to leave the Chamber soon.

Mr. BAILEY. I am not complaining at all. I wish to respond, however, to the statement made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. He expressed the hope that the Supreme Court would take the view of Madison. The Supreme Court said in plain language in the Butler case that the view of Madison could not be sustained and that the view of Story and of Hamilton was correct. That is obiter, but it is very powerful obiter. That was not said by the Court for nothing. It was said by six of nine Judges in the opinion, but the other three agreed to it, so it was unanimous.

What I am dealing with is the simple fact of the law, and as showing the difference between the policy under President Cleveland and the policy of this hour. I began by saying that there was a difference; that there is a difference. The Constitution has been construed.

This is the point of my remarks in one sentence. Since the responsibility for the spending power is almost exclusively vested in the Congress, we have a very solemn duty. We should not spend one dollar unnecessarily, and we should not spend one dollar to advance our own political interests or to exploit our own hopes for reputation for benevolence. We should spend the public money, which we extract from the labor of the American people by way of taxes, with a scrupulous honesty within ourselves, a scrupulous regard for the National Budget and the possibilities which confront us in this long-continued failure to balance it. We might work more ruin there than we could ever cure by the appropriation of even hundreds of millions of dollars.

The responsibility comes home to me by way of these decisions. So far as I am concerned, when we lend money I want it collected, and when we appropriate money I want it appropriated for public needs and public welfare and the interests of the Government. I should be ashamed of myself if I betrayed the high trust imposed in me and used the almost unlimited power to tax to give for political or personal purposes.

Mr. President, having said this, I am content.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I distinctly stated, when asking consent to have the message of a great Democratic President read from the desk, that it was a relic of constitutional government. I had not the remotest idea that it was going to affect the question pending before the Senate. I had not the faintest notion that it would control the vote of a single, solitary Senator.

Perhaps I am a relic of constitutional government—I am rather inclined to think I am. I entertain what may be the misguided notion that the Constitution of the United States as it existed in the time of Grover Cleveland is the same Constitution that exists today, and that if Mr. Cleveland, with his clear conception and his courage, could find nothing in the Constitution then which authorized appropriations for special purposes and not for the general welfare, I could not today find anything in the Constitution warranting such action.

Incidentally, I may express the greatest astonishment that any Member of the Senate should appeal to decisions of the Supreme Court, whether actually involved or incidental, at the very time when arrangements are going forward to tear down the Supreme Court, when so many people have no conception of its establishment or its uses in constitutional government.

The reference to the general-welfare clause simply provokes the statement that whenever Congress desires to appropriate money for any purpose it is at liberty to appeal, and does appeal, to the general-welfare clause. Latterly, the interpretation of the general-welfare clause by the Congress of the United States differs as widely from the interpretation of it by the man who wrote it, James Madison, as our attitude now differs from the constitutional conceptions of Grover Cleveland.

I merely desire to indicate now that I am not one of the Senators who is proud of the fact that some people in Virginia wanted to make a pawnshop of the Treasury of the United States. I am proud of the fact that they paid back the money they borrowed, but I still am of the conviction that the Treasury of the United States was not set up to be a pawnshop, and that it was not set up to enter into the lending business, whether for this, that, or the other purpose.

So far as Mr. Cleveland's message being related to the great disaster now afflicting the country is concerned, everybody knows that this is a national disaster, and not a local disaster. Everyone knows that when we deal liberally and generously with a situation of this sort we are dealing with the general welfare of the country. So the vehement and rhetorical address to which the Senate has just listened has no application to my attitude or to that so succinctly and courageously expressed by Grover Cleveland and overwhelmingly sustained by the Congress of the United States at that time. Of course we should appropriate funds to alleviate the afflictions and to abate the distresses resulting from a great national disaster which affects not merely the unfortunate people immediately involved but affects the entire Nation, and I have no patience with oratorical efforts in commendation of such appropriations. I have no respect for them either.

Nor am I hiding my face in shame at the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina or at that of the Senator from Arkansas. I am in favor of the "horse and buggy" age, if that means respect for the Constitution of the United States and of the Supreme Court acting under the Constitution of the United States. I am not willing to tear down that Court because I may disagree with some of its decisions. I wish some of them had never been rendered, such as that which has destroyed intrastate commerce, and that which said we might swindle our own people but not foreigners in the matter of our contractual relations. However, although I, a layman, disagree with those decisions of the Court, I am not willing under my oath as a United States Senator to contribute in any degree or at any moment to the effort to tear down the Court and make it useless.

Mr. President, I had not purposed to raise a riot of oratory here in the Senate. Simply as a matter of amusement to myself and, I trust, of interest to the Senate, I wanted to indicate how far we had gotten away from some constitutional bases when we contrast them with what we now think about the Constitution and the courts.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have no desire to delay a vote on the pending measure, but I do wish to make one statement. I do not assume that it would have made any difference in the attitude of Grover Cleveland toward approval or veto, but my understanding is that the bill which he actually vetoed provided for an outright gift by the Congress and not for a loan. I, of course, draw no deduction as to what would have been his attitude had the bill provided for a loan; but had his attitude been analogous in the matter of loaning money to farmers who were afflicted by drought, or for other reasons, I am willing to assume that he would have vetoed a loan bill with as much alacrity as he vetoed a bill providing for a gift.

Neither do I wish to indulge in any criticism of the Supreme Court, although I think I may say that when the Supreme Court by a vote of 5 to 4 nullifies an act of Congress intended to help labor, agriculture, and business to solve their problems in a great disaster, I am not guilty of treason if I happen to agree with the four rather than the five. I know how easy it might have been for the minority opinion to have been that of the majority had someone else had the appointing power, and had someone else been appointed to the Supreme Court by that appointing power; but if I were disposed to indulge in any criticism of the Court I should be in most excellent company. Thomas Jefferson, who is the patron saint of many of us politically, to whom is given the credit for establishing not only political and religious but intellectual liberty in this country, did not hesitate to criticize the Supreme Court, and particularly to criticize its great Chief Justice, John Marshall.

Andrew Jackson, who is another one of our patron saints, did not hesitate to criticize the Supreme Court of the United States.

Abraham Lincoln, who is the political patron saint of many of our colleagues here, and who is revered, admired, and respected by all of us, did not hesitate to criticize the Supreme Court when it rendered a decision with which he did not agree; and it might pay some of us to read some of Lincoln's speeches as to the effect of certain decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

If I desired to indulge in any such criticism, I should likewise be in the company of Theodore Roosevelt, who not only denounced certain Court decisions, but in one of his campaigns for President actually proposed, as part of the platform on which he stood, the recall of judicial decisions by vote of the people whenever the Court rendered a decision which he thought was not for the best interest of the country.

In referring to these matters I do not myself indulge in any criticism of the Court, although I do not hesitate to say that I have disagreed and expect to continue to disagree with it, and to say so without any fear that I am to be regarded as a traitor or guilty of treason if I happen to agree with a minority of the Court rather than a majority of the Court, at the same time granting to every member of the Court what he is entitled to—my respect and my belief that he is actuated by honest and patriotic motives.

My friend the Senator from Utah adverted to the Madisonian interpretation of the Constitution. I think no man has a greater admiration or respect for James Madison than I have. I agree with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] that Madison contributed more than anyone else to the writing of the Constitution, and not only that but he contributed almost everything we know concerning the deliberations of the body known as the Constitutional Convention. Had it not been for the Madison papers and the Madison notes taken by him during its deliberations we might never have known anything about what went on behind closed doors when the Constitution of the United States was being written.

However, while Madison was President of the United States he vetoed an act of Congress appropriating money to improve rivers and harbors in the United States of America on the ground that Congress had no constitutional power to appropriate money for that purpose. Notwithstanding that veto and that attitude of Madison, it has been the settled policy of the Government for nearly a century to appropriate money for this identical purpose; and the power of Congress to appropriate it for that purpose has never been seriously questioned.

Mr. President, had the Madisonian view been maintained from that day to the present time there would not be a lock or dam in any river in the United States, and there would not be a deepened harbor to afford accommodations for our commerce anywhere in the United States, and there would not be a reclamation project anywhere in the West, including the State of Utah, from which the distinguished Senator [Mr. KING] comes.

So when we talk about the Madisonian view of the Constitution, I think we are entitled to consider that we are living in a different economic and social age from that in which Jefferson and Madison lived. In their day they were among the most progressive statesmen of the world; and were they living now, in the midst of all the complexity of our lives and in our efforts to solve our problems through the agency of the Government, I believe they would in all probability be two jumps ahead of all of us in trying to make the Government of the United States the agency for the solution of all the problems which face the American people.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I think Mr. Cleveland's reputation and that of James Madison will survive both the condemnation and praise which we have heard here today.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not intend to occupy the time of the Senate for more than a moment, and should not do so except for what I assume was the inadvertent observation just submitted by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. He referred to reclamation projects in the West, and assumed, as I thought, that the Government appropriations were for purely private purposes. Under the Constitution of the United States, Congress has exclusive jurisdiction over the public domain and the public property of the United States. That ownership and jurisdiction constitutionally entitle the Government to make disposition of that property in such a way that the greatest rewards will flow into the Treasury of the United States.

There were millions of acres of sterile and barren land in the Western States, lands which were condemned by Senators and Representatives at an earlier period in the history of our Republic.

Even Daniel Webster, upon the floor of the Senate, called attention to the arid condition of the lands, given over to sagebrush and the homes of wolves and jackrabbits, and said that the land was valueless and would never support a population.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator will not contend, will he, that irrigation projects have been limited to the public lands?

Mr. KING. Yes; I insist the development of the public domain was the purpose and the genesis of the reclamation projects.

Mr. BARKLEY. It may have been the genesis but not the exodus. [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. I am not sure that the Senator is correct. I think he will find that the reclamation projects were founded upon what is known as the Newlands bill, which was first introduced in the House of Representatives, as I recall, in 1897 and passed under the administration of Theodore Roosevelt. That bill provided that the lands of the United States susceptible of reclamation might be irrigated and that irrigation projects might be initiated and carried to completion in order that the lands within such projects might be sold for the benefit of the Government of the United States. And so the reclamation projects under that act have had in mind the settlement of the public domain, making it habitable, and, in the end, providing a return to the Government of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, let us have the yeas and nays on this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The decision of the Chair has been made. It is now too late to ask for a yea-and-nay vote.

Without objection, Senate bill 1053, to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1937, and for other purposes, will be indefinitely postponed.

DANIEL YATES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next bill in order on the calendar.

The bill (S. 113) for the relief of Daniel Yates was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I suggest that the bill go over. The War Department clearly recommends against it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I ask if an executive session is to be held today?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is a question to be decided by the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. Let me say to the Senator that I understand an executive session will be held.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 3587) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate, and especially of the Committee on Appropriations, to a provision carried in the bill just laid before the Senate by the Chair. The Senate will recall that in the last Congress the Committee on Interstate Commerce was authorized to conduct an investigation into some phases of railroad financing in the United States. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] submitted a resolution authorizing such an investigation, and the investigation is now in progress. I think all those who have kept themselves informed as to the progress of that investigation will agree that much valuable information has been revealed concerning the methods of certain railroad manipulators of this country in financing their enterprises at the expense of the American people, and that the information would have been very valuable, not only to the Senate and the other House of the Congress but to the country, if it had been developed earlier by such an investigation. It may be that the information comes too late in order to correct some of the evils which have been brought to light by the investigation of the Wheeler committee into certain railroad financing, but, nevertheless, the information which will be obtained will be of benefit in guiding the Senate and the House of Representatives in legislation hereafter. In the resolution authorizing the investigation referred to it is recited that—

> The Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to obtain such facts as the Federal Coordinator of Transportation, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and other Government agencies may have, and to secure the assistance of the Federal Coordinator of Transportation, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and other Government agencies in the investigation hereby authorized. The member of the Interstate Commerce Commission heretofore designated by the President as Federal Coordinator of Transportation under the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act, 1933, is hereby authorized and directed to select the railroads to be included in the investigation.

Pursuant to that authority the Committee on Interstate Commerce called upon the Interstate Commerce Commission, called upon the Department of Commerce, and during one period, when the funds appropriated by the Senate had been exhausted and additional funds had not been made available, there was a small allotment made out of the funds which had been appropriated for relief and work in order that this investigation might go on. The sum was insignificant, but it was helpful in continuing the investigation.

I wish to say also that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] submitted a resolution, Senate Resolution 266, authorizing the Committee on Education and Labor to make an investigation of violations of the rights of free speech and assembly and undue interference with the rights of labor to organize and bargain collectively.

In the resolution it is provided—

> For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-fourth and succeeding Congresses, to employ and to call upon the executive departments for clerical and other assistants—

And so forth.

That committee is now in session carrying on the investigation which it has been authorized to conduct. I have no doubt that the committee, under the guidance of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], will provide valuable information to the Senate and the House and the country with respect to the matters within its jurisdiction, looking toward the enactment of any legislation which may be necessary to correct such evils as may be revealed.

Now, the House of Representatives has inserted in the bill which has just been laid before the Senate by the Chair and referred to the Committee on Appropriations this language:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation or of the appropriation in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936 shall be used hereafter to pay the compensation of any person, not taken from relief rolls, detailed or loaned for service in connection with any investigation or inquiry undertaken by any committee of either House of Congress under special resolution thereof.

I do not wish to say anything which might be regarded as a criticism of the other body of Congress; I do not wish to impute to anybody any improper motive in the inclusion of that language in the appropriation bill as passed by the House; but, whatever may have been the intention of those who wrote that language, whatever may have been anybody's design in incorporating it in the bill, the effect of it, in all probability, will be to cripple the investigations now in progress by the Committee on Interstate Commerce and the Committee on Education and Labor to which I have already referred.

I am now calling attention of the Senate and of the Committee on Appropriations to this language, in the hope that the committee will eliminate it before the bill shall be brought back to the Senate. It has no place in this bill. If either one of these committees can obtain from any agency of the Government, whether it be a regular department or any emergency agency that has been set up, information that will assist it in revealing facts that the American people ought to know and Congress ought to have, certainly they ought not to be handicapped in undertaking to obtain such information. I, therefore, hope that the committee will eliminate the provision before the bill shall be reported back to the Senate; but I wish to say—and I do not say it in any spirit of threat or coercion—that if the committee should not eliminate it and some other Senator should not move to strike it out, I intend to move on the floor of the Senate to eliminate that language from the bill.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, this appropriation bill was not passed by the other branch of Congress until last night. We have had no opportunity to examine the discussion which took place or determine what is meant by the insertion by an overwhelming vote of the House of the language objected to by the Senator from Kentucky. I rather think it is premature to discuss the matter here now beyond merely saying that I have heard it stated that the House was utterly opposed to taking a dollar of the relief funds for the purpose of paying the expenses of an investigation by either branch of Congress.

I should think, that being the overwhelming sentiment of the house as indicated by the vote, that the speedier and better way for the Senator from Kentucky to accomplish his purpose would be to propose an amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill providing separate funds for investigations of the committees designated by him, and not to take for other purposes an appropriation intended for the relief of suffering humanity.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the funds ordinarily available for investigations in both Houses are paid out of the contingent fund of the particular House authorizing the investigation.

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I brought the matter to the attention of the Senate because the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, is detained from the floor of the Senate, and because the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], chairman of the other committee to which I referred, is ill and unable to be here, and both of them are concerned about this provision. I did not know whether or not I would have an opportunity to appear before the Committee on Appropriations on the subject, and for that reason I wished to call it to the Senator's attention and to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator should know that he is at liberty to appear before the Appropriations Committee or any subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee to present any view that he would like to present as to any provision of any bill before the committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the Senator's statement.

Mr. GLASS. My suggestion is that the better and surer way to accomplish his purpose would be to propose an amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill, and not to have us get into a quarrel with the other branch of Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator from Virginia that nobody desires to use relief funds for the purposes of any investigation, but this language would not allow the committee to call for the loan of a single person employed by any of these agencies for as much as a week without involving the loss to such employee of his salary.

Mr. GLASS. So far as I am concerned, I am of the opinion that the committee will have to inquire into the matter to ascertain what is the purpose and what is the effect of the language in the bill as it passed the House. We cannot commit ourselves on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not asking the Senator to do that.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I may state for the information of the Senator from Kentucky that pending before the Appropriations Committee now is a recommendation for an appropriation of $125,000 for use by the Senate to finance the investigation to which reference has been made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, reported favorably the following nominations:

Milburn L. Wilson, of Montana, to be Under Secretary of Agriculture, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate, vice Rexford G. Tugwell, resigned; and Harry L. Brown, of Georgia, to be Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate, vice Milburn L. Wilson.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported favorably the following nominations:

W. S. Key, of Oklahoma, to be State administrator for Oklahoma in the Works Progress Administration; and Louis M. Nims to be State administrator for Michigan in the Works Progress Administration, vice Harry Lynn Pierson.

Mr. McKELLAR also, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, reported favorably the nomination of William M. Leiserson, of Ohio, to be a member of the National Mediation Board for the term expiring February 1, 1940 (reappointment).

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

CHARLES EDISON, ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE NAVY

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, last Friday the nomination of Mr. Charles Edison, of New Jersey, to be Assistant Secretary of the Navy, was confirmed. A rule of the Senate permits a Senator to move reconsideration of the confirmation at any time during two consecutive executive sessions thereafter. It has been several days since the nomination was confirmed. Mr. Edison has been serving as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, of course, without pay because the President has not been notified of the confirmation of his nomination. I now ask unanimous consent that the rule be suspended and that the President be notified of the confirmation of Mr. Edison's nomination.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

REGISTER OF LAND OFFICE, IDAHO

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar is in order. The first nomination in order on the calendar will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Frank E. DeKay, of Idaho, to be register of the land office at Blackfoot, Idaho.

UNDER SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Roswell Magill, of New York, to be Under Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

BOARD OF TAX APPEALS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Justin Miller, of North Carolina, to be a member of the Board of Tax Appeals for the unexpired term of 12 years from June 2, 1926.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

NATIONAL EMERGENCY COUNCIL

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the National Emergency Council.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that nominations in the National Emergency Council may be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Morrison Shafroth, of Denver, Colo., to be Assistant General Counsel for the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William P. Stuart, of Prescott, Ariz., to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Arizona.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of James F. Munday, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., to be collector of internal revenue for the twelfth district of Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Public Health Service.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the several nominations in the Public Health Service be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc. That completes the calendar.

ADJOURNMENT TO FRIDAY

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Friday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Friday, January 29, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 27, 1937

UNDER SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY

Roswell Magill to be Under Secretary of the Treasury.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 27, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most gracious Father, the maker of heaven and earth, the source of every blessing, we thank Thee for this new day. Prepare us for its duties; purify us from all guile and endue us plenteously with heavenly gifts. We earnestly pray Thee that the breath of unselfish service may sweep through our land, bringing comfort to the unfortunate by sharing their heavy loads. May the sublime example of Calvary's cross be our guide and inspiration. Almighty God, be mercifully near the mourning thousands of the flood-stricken States. O save Thy people and bless Thine inheritance; feed them also and lift them up forever. Forsake them not, O Lord, our God; be not far from them. Make haste to help them, O Lord of our salvation. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 368. An act to amend the act of May 25, 1933 (48 Stat. 73).

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the following resolution:

Senate Resolution 68

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. ANDREW J. MONTAGUE, late a Representative from the State of Virginia.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative the Senate do now adjourn.

GEORGE ROGERS CLARK SESQUICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of Public Resolution 51, Seventieth Congress, as amended, the Chair appoints to fill the vacancy on the George Rogers Clark Sesquicentennial Commission the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. LUCE.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein an address delivered by my colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] upon the conferring of honorary degrees by Baylor University upon the Vice President and Mrs. Garner.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. PHILLIPS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

WAR-TORN SPAIN

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I would feel presumptuous in appearing on this occasion and in speaking today as a new Member were it not for the urgency of the subject matter of my remarks and for the conviction which possesses me.

Those of us who had the opportunity to sit near our Christmas trees on Christmas Eve heard coming over the ether waves the beautiful strains of Silent Night, Holy Night, All Is Peace, All Is Bright. This came to us from New York. Presently, by a shift of the dial on the master broadcasting radio, we heard the strains of Silent Night, Holy Night, All Is Peace, All Is Bright coming to us from far-away Austria, from a little church in a little snowy town over there where the strains of that immortal melody were first borne to the world by the author who sang it and played it. Then presently, with another turn of the same dial, we heard the strains of Silent Night, Holy Night coming to us from far-away Buenos Aires from the cathedral there. A moment later we heard it from an old Spanish mission in California. Then again we heard Silent Night, Holy Night, All Is Peace, All Is Bright from New York City, and finally from Austria again.

Mr. Speaker, on that Christmas Eve we did not hear the strains of Silent Night, Holy Night, All Is Peace, All Is Bright come to us from war-torn Spain. Could we have dialed in over there, we would have heard the sound of dropping bombs raining destruction and death on helpless women and children on that holy, peaceful evening. We would have heard these bombs raining destruction and death on helpless men and women and children on many evenings after that.

We then picked up the newspapers, and what did we read? We read that individuals calling themselves American citizens were responsible for some of that destruction, death, and carnage. They call themselves citizens of our country. They were selling themselves for blood money as foul murderers of the air, who dropped destruction by means of bombs on helpless women and children on that Christmas Eve and on other evenings and on other days. They did this for gold—foul blood money.

We picked up the paper later, and what did we read? We read that some of these same people were leaving this miserable piracy of the air in which they were engaged. Why were they leaving? Because the funds had run out and they were no longer being paid this blood money for foul murder and destruction.

Mr. Speaker and ladies and gentlemen, I think your blood boiled and my blood boiled when we read of those events; when we read that those calling themselves American citizens were guilty of selling themselves to engage in the murder of helpless women and children and others anywhere in this world. I think the majority of the Members of this House, as well as the majority of the American people, agree that we should take away citizenship from those who are willing to sell themselves as murderers for any cause anywhere at any time.

Mr. Speaker, representing my constituents, who do not believe in profits in war, and who believe in doing everything we can to keep the United States out of war, to which I heartily subscribe, and representing, I feel, a majority of the American people, I have caused to be introduced the following bill, which, with your permission, I will read:

Be it enacted, etc., That any citizen of the United States who, after July 1, 1937, enlists, serves, or accepts a commission in any military or naval service other than that of the United States shall be deemed to have expatriated himself or herself and shall lose all rights and privileges of citizenship.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will be heard at 10:30 o'clock tomorrow, Thursday, before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. With due humility, Mr. Speaker, as a new Member of this House, I ask the cooperation of my colleagues in seeing that the bill is enacted into law.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I will.

Mr. SCOTT. I am heartily in sympathy with the idea behind the remarks of the gentleman from Connecticut, but may I call his attention, just for his own consideration, to the picture that hangs at the left of the Speaker's chair.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has called my attention to this picture. I look at it every day with a great deal of pleasure and realize that the gentleman whose picture he points out was fighting for a principle and not as a paid murderer. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE TO INCLUDE POSTMASTERS OF THE FIRST, SECOND, AND THIRD CLASSES

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York submitted the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules for printing in the RECORD under the rule:

House Resolution 89

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 1531, a bill to extend the classified civil service to include postmasters of the first, second, and third classes, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1½ hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Civil Service, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a radio address of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein a radio speech which I recently delivered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON WILDLIFE CONSERVATION

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina submitted the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules for printing in the RECORD under the rule:

House Resolution 11

Resolved, That the special committee to investigate all matters pertaining to the replacement and conservation of wildlife is authorized to continue the investigation begun under authority of House Resolution 237 of the Seventy-third Congress, and continued under authority of House Resolution 44 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, and for such purposes said committee shall have the same power and authority as that conferred upon it by said House Resolution 237 of the Seventy-third Congress, and shall report to the House as soon as practicable, but not later than January 3, 1939, the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations, for necessary legislation. Any unexpended balance of the total amount authorized for the use of said special committee under House Resolution 263 of the Seventy-third Congress is hereby continued available until said date.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Resolution 11, which deals with the continuance of a select committee to investigate wildlife conservation and other allied subjects.

The Clerk read the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to get some information. I happen to be very much interested in this resolution, and I am in favor of it, but I wonder if the minority members of the committee have been advised by anyone that the matter is to be considered at this time.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. They were advised that it would be taken up before the Rules Committee.

Mr. SNELL. But were they advised it was going to be brought up on the floor? I know they are for the resolution, but I am against the policy of bringing these things in here without telling us in advance that you are going to do so.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. I can only say to the gentleman that it was stated in the Committee on Rules that immediate consideration would be given the resolution.

Mr. SNELL. How long ago was that?

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. About 45 minutes or so.

Mr. SNELL. I do not suppose the gentleman would think that sufficient notice. I am in favor of the resolution and I want it considered, but I think it is absolutely unfair to spring resolutions of this sort on us without notifying the minority members of the committee concerned, and specially as the majority leader said yesterday there was no business on the program for today.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. Of course, I assumed that the ranking minority member of the Rules Committee would do whatever was necessary.

Mr. SNELL. But the gentleman has just stated that it was only 45 minutes ago that the resolution was considered. I do not want to be obstreperous in any way, and it happens you have brought up a matter in which I am deeply interested, but I am opposed to this method of procedure, and we might as well have it understood at the beginning of the session that we are not going to stand for it. The chairman of the committee concerned is one of my closest friends in the House.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. I naturally assumed that the able gentleman from Massachusetts, who is the ranking minority member of the Rules Committee, would notify his colleagues.

Mr. SNELL. But the gentleman from Massachusetts just found out about it himself about 10 minutes ago and has not had time to do that. Some of our Members want to discuss the resolution. Like the rest of your Members, they want to say to the people of the country that they are for it.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. So far as we were able to learn, there was no opposition to the resolution.

Mr. SNELL. It is not a question of opposition. Personally I am very much in favor of the resolution, but I think you ought to notify us about these matters. I think we are entitled to that consideration.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. The gentleman did not permit me to finish my statement. There was no opposition and this seemed to be a very opportune time to dispose of the matter; but if the gentleman seriously objects, we will let it go over until the minority can be publicly notified.

Mr. SNELL. I presume we shall have to object for the present, not because we are opposed to the resolution but because we think we are entitled to have proper notification given us, and it is a matter of principle with me.

Mr. RAYBURN. Why object now?

Mr. SNELL. Because we want to get the Members here. If the gentleman will wait 10 or 15 minutes until we can get them here——

Mr. RAYBURN. I think the gentleman from North Carolina is willing to withdraw his request without having objection made.

Mr. SNELL. I do not want to object to the consideration of the resolution, and if you will withdraw this request for the present it will be better.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it was stated yesterday that we had nothing to do today. The minority leader asked what was to be done today and the statement was made that one Member had permission to address the House for 10 minutes. An effort was made to locate the gentleman so as to postpone the session for today. Under these conditions I do not think it is proper now to bring in legislation, even though the entire committee, Republicans and Democrats alike, know all about it. There are a lot of Members of the House who are not on the committees concerned and who understand that no legislation will be given consideration today, therefore I shall object to the consideration of the resolution. I favor the resolution, however there may be some who oppose it or desire to offer amendments. This is not an emergency legislation and there will be plenty of time tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I wished to add to the remarks of the leader of the minority that I read the report of the Wildlife Committee rather carefully and had marked several places in it concerning which I wanted to ask some questions of that committee. Explanations of certain portions of the report seemed desirable. That is one reason why we should have notice when the resolution is to be considered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CRAWFORD (at the request of Mr. MAPES), indefinitely, on account of illness.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 368. An act to amend the act of May 25, 1933 (48 Stat. 73), to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, January 28, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at 10 a. m., January 28, 1937. Business to be considered: Open hearing on H. R. 1668, long-and-short-haul bill. In view of the exhaustive hearing held in the previous Congress, the committee desires to make this hearing as brief as possible.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization will meet in room 445, House Office Building, at 10:30 a. m. on Thursday, January 28, 1937, for hearings on H. R. 29, H. R. 1541, and H. R. 2002.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

304. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a lease issued pursuant to the provisions of the act of May 23 1934 (48 Stat. 796); to the Committee on the Public Lands.

305. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the draft of a bill with two sections, and the first section containing an amendment of article of war 50½, and the second section containing an amendment of article of war 70, which the War Department presents to the Congress with a view to its enactment into law; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

306. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a draft of a bill to change the name of the Chemical Warfare Service, which the War Department presents to the Congress with a view to its enactment into law; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

307. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the draft of a bill to authorize the sale of surplus War Department real property, which the War Department presents for the consideration of the Congress with a view to its enactment into law; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

308. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of legislation to provide relief for and to adjust certain accounts of John L. Summers, former disbursing clerk, Treasury Department, and Frank White, G. F. Allen, H. T. Tate, and W. O. Woods, former Treasurers of the United States; to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 89. Resolution providing for the consideration of H. R. 1531, a bill to extend the classified civil service to include postmasters of the first, second, and third classes, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 62). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 11. Resolution authorizing the Special Committee on Wildlife Conservation, appointed under authority of House Resolution 237, Seventy-third Congress, continued under authority of House Resolution 44, Seventy-fourth Congress, to continue its investigations during the Seventy-fifth Congress; without amendment (Rept. No. 63). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mrs. O'DAY: Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. H. R. 26. A bill to amend section 23 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (39 Stat. 874), as amended (U. S. C., title 8, sec. 102); without amendment (Rept. No. 64). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mrs. O'DAY: Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. H. R. 28. A bill to authorize the deportation of aliens who secured preference-quota or nonquota visas through fraud by contracting marriage solely to fraudulently expedite admission to the United States, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 65). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WOLVERTON: A bill (H. R. 3785) for the better assurance of the protection of persons within the several States from mob violence and lynching, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GREEVER: A bill (H. R. 3786) providing for the allocation of net revenues of the Shoshone power plant of the Shoshone reclamation project in Wyoming; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

By Mr. MAPES: A bill (H. R. 3787) for the better assurance of the protection of persons within the several States from mob violence and lynching, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KVALE: A bill (H. R. 3788) to improve the navigability and to provide for the flood control of the upper Mississippi River; to provide for reforestation and the use of marginal lands in, and for the agricultural and industrial development of, the upper Mississippi River Basin; to provide for the restoration and preservation of the water level, and for the development of electrical power, in the upper Mississippi Basin; and for other purposes; to the Committee on Flood Control.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3789) to abolish capital punishment in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3790) to provide for the commemoration of the Battle of Birch Coulee, in the State of Minnesota; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3791) to prevent the use of Federal official patronage in elections and prohibit Federal officeholders from misuse of positions of public trust for private and partisan ends; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 28, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite God, in whose wisdom and goodness there is neither variableness nor shadow of turning, consider and hear us. Support us this day with a sense of Thine approval. Deliver us, O Lord, from all mistaken notions of Thee and help us to see Thee in the light and mission of Thine only begotten Son. If any wrongs of injustice have been imposed upon us, may we forgive and forget with the realization that hatred or resentment cannot harmonize with the Golden Rule. Establish eternal hope in all breasts and allow nothing to obscure Thy face from us. Heavenly Father, be the guest at every hearthstone, the great physician at every cot of affliction, and the comforter of all. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 1545. An act to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1937, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 206. An act to provide a preliminary examination and survey of the Snake River and tributaries in the States of Idaho, Washington, and Oregon, with a view to control of floodwaters; and

S. J. Res. 20. Joint resolution authorizing the President to invite the Pan American Republics and the Dominion of Canada to participate in the proposed Greater Texas and Pan American Exposition.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the special order today, which is an address by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK], I may be permitted to address the House for 4 minutes in connection with the flood situation in our country.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. My understanding from the leadership of the House is that the matter of placing postmasters on the civil service will be taken up today. I hope the gentleman will defer his request until tomorrow. My understanding is that we have nothing to do tomorrow.

Mr. LUDLOW. This is a matter applicable immediately today, I regret to say, and I think when the gentleman knows what I have in mind he will not regret having withheld his objection.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Several other gentleman have wanted to speak today, and some of them have agreed to defer their requests until tomorrow. We cannot treat gentlemen differently here.

Mr. LUDLOW. I think I may say to the gentleman from Georgia that their situation is not on a par with mine, because this involves a measure being introduced today, and the information in regard to it has already gone out.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I ask the gentleman to defer it until we get through with this matter today. We cannot treat the gentleman from Indiana differently from other gentlemen.

Mr. LUDLOW. It is for only 4 minutes, and I should like to go ahead with it.

Mr. RAMSPECK. If I agree to that, then I should have to agree to several others.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I object.

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, I be allowed to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, I be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I now request that, after the disposition of the business in charge of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK], I may be permitted to address the House for 4 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. We have two matters that we wish to dispose of today, one pertaining to the civil service in respect to postmasters, and then also the one creating a select committee on conservation. Those two matters are on the program today, and we desire to dispose of them. That will carry us quite late tonight, I fear.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Would it not still be possible for the gentleman to address the House after we dispose of the business today?

Mr. LUDLOW. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the disposition of all business on the calendar today I be permitted to address the House for 4 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that, after the disposition of business on the calendar today, he be permitted to address the House for 4 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not press his request. I have already objected to others, and I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

PERMISSION TO FILE REPORT

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until Saturday night at midnight to file a majority report from the Committee on Ways and Means on the Reciprocal Tariff Act, and that the minority may have the same time in which to file minority views.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is that agreement satisfactory to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]?

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is the understanding that we reached today with the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. SNELL. Further reserving the right to object, when does the gentleman expect to bring this matter before the House?

Mr. DOUGHTON. As early as we can get the right-of-way, and we hope that will be by the middle or latter part of next week, probably Thursday.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I think I should say to the gentleman from New York that this will not come until after the independent offices appropriation bill has been passed.

Mr. SNELL. Then that will follow the independent offices appropriation bill?

Mr. RAYBURN. That is the intention now. Something might come up that will change that, but the tariff act will not be considered before the passage of the independent offices appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that a quorum is not present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-three Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 8]

Andresen, Minn.	Farley	Hope	Palmisano
Biermann	Ferguson	Imhoff	Peterson, Fla.
Buckley, N. Y.	Gasque	Jarrett	Quinn

Dempsey	Harlan	McGroarty	Taylor, Colo.
Doxey	Harter	Mason	Tinkham
Driver	Higgins	Meeks	Wearin
Duncan	Holmes	Norton	White, Idaho
Engel	Hook	Owen	White, Ohio

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LEWIS of Colorado). Three hundred and eighty Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD to include a speech that the gentlewoman from Indiana [Mrs. JENCKES] delivered this morning at the Conference of Patriotic Women in behalf of national defense.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by placing therein an address delivered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] on yesterday at the National Defense Conference at the Mayflower Hotel.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the other special orders, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] may have 10 minutes within which to address the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a joint resolution which I introduced today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] is recognized for 30 minutes.

SUPREME? WHO? PEOPLE OR THE COURT? AMERICA MUST FACE THE ISSUE

FLOODS, STRIKES, NATIONAL EMERGENCIES—IS CONGRESS IMPOTENT?

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, as we are sitting here today in our steam-heated Chamber, this Nation is in distress. The greatest emergency since the World War is in effect this very minute, this being the devastating floods all over the country. More than likely the aid being extended by the President is unconstitutional—according to some interpretations. And, indeed, the only way we can stop floods is by a policy of conservation, going back to the source in our lands and our forests to conserve the soil. We must go back to the farms of America and keep the excess waters from flooding into the streams. But the Supreme Court says agriculture is a mere local matter, and that Congress is incompetent to act.

Floods menace this entire Nation to the extent of tens of millions, yes billions, of dollars, with a consequent destruction of human life and the forced migration of millions of homeless people. Water flows across State lines. Shall we permit the Supreme Court to prevent us from acting in behalf of the welfare of the Nation and conserving its farms and lands? That is certainly something to think about.

And today, also, there is still in effect the greatest strike in American history. The General Motors Corporation, through Mr. Sloan, is "sitting down" and refusing to cooperate. In fact, the General Motors Corporation has sat down on the President of the United States and defies the law of the land, which requires them to recognize representatives of the majority of the employees who wish to meet and discuss wages and working conditions. The General Motors has sat down on a law of the people of this country, passed by the House of Representatives and the Senate and approved by the President of the United States, and after an election has approved that same Congress and President Roosevelt.

THIS SESSION WILL BE MOST SERIOUS IN HISTORY

Mr. Speaker, this session of Congress will be the most serious in our national history. I regard the question of whether or not Congress can effectively legislate as the issue we must solve at once. What is the use in passing legislation for the people, if it is to be knocked out by the Supreme Court?

Mr. Speaker, we are having today what is called "business recovery." I am very glad. But the question is, Will we have human recovery?

The answer to that question will be "yes", if the Government will follow the instructions of the people in the last election and have a progressive and fair administration. This means not only the enactment of fair and progressive legislation and its enforcement; it means also a progressive and fair interpretation by the Supreme Court.

It has been facetiously stated that the Supreme Court "follows the election returns." But, seriously, why should not the Supreme Court consider the will of the people? It seems to me they should also take as much cognizance of science, progress, and plain, ordinary fact as any other branch of our Government.

DRED SCOTT CASE WAS A LEADING CAUSE OF THE CIVIL WAR

So again, I say, let us face the issue of the Supreme Court. Let us go back before the Civil War and consider the case of Dred Scott, a Negro slave. (See below, I, Story of Dred Scott.) What was the holding of the Court? It was that the Missouri Compromise, accepted for 37 long years, was unconstitutional. This meant Congress had no right to legislate a compromise on slavery. Worse, it meant slavery could be maintained in the Territories in defiance of the laws of the United States and the will of the American people, including the southern people, who had also accepted the compromise. It meant—for the Court said it—there was no power under the Constitution that could deal with slavery at all. By this the Court put a sword in every man's hand.

Bitter discussions followed this decision. Hatred increased. The talk began to be of war. The Republican platform of 1860 denounced the decision of the Supreme Court as "dangerous political heresy", and the Republicans were right. Abraham Lincoln said in his first inaugural address that—

> The people were no longer their own rulers if all far-reaching Government policies were to be irrevocably fixed by the Supreme Court.

The answer came in the guns of Fort Sumter, S. C. For the sword put in each man's hand by the Court was drawn. From then on it was bugles and blood, death and destruction, instead of adjustment, democracy, and representative government. Our Nation, our fathers and uncles and grandfathers of many of those present, both North and South, plunged into 4½ years of killing to reverse a decision of the Supreme Court! Brother killed brother, property was destroyed, the economic order torn to pieces, and the end is not yet. The Dred Scott decision was not the only cause of the Civil War, but war might have been prevented except for it.

AGRICULTURE HELD TO BE A MERE LOCAL MATTER

Let us compare the Dred Scott decision with the recent one of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. (See II, Legislation for Welfare of Farmers Knocked Out.) Right or wrong, this Congress—and we are the representatives of the people—enacted the A. A. A. for the purpose of adjusting the problems of agriculture and the economy of the Nation. The act had helped revive agriculture. Farm foreclosures were slowed down. The revival of the purchasing power of the farmers was also helping the city people to recovery. Then the Supreme Court, by 6 to 3, held agriculture a mere local matter—agriculture, which is dependent on the interstate flow of rivers, great dust storms which cloud the Nation, rain, drainage areas, railroads, the soil, the forests, the natural elements, and the prosperity of all the people. Congress, charged with the solemn constitutional duty of providing for the general welfare of the people, was declared incompetent to act.

Now, let us go back to the Civil War. Suppose the principle involved in the Misssouri Compromise had not been knocked out by the Court. Public opinion all over the world was crystallizing against slavery.

Then suppose Congress had passed another A. A. A.—an "African Adjustment Act"—and had said to the slave owner: "We will pay you $2,000 each for your slaves." In a short time most of the slave owners would have complied, for many of the owners themselves opposed slavery, and tens of thousands opposed secession. Only 30 percent of the southerners were slave owners. Many believe slavery was overwhelmingly opposed by the white people of the South. It is quite conceivable that if adjustment and compromise had been possible that we would never have had that awful war.

SHALL 130,000,000 PEOPLE BE TUMBLED INTO ECONOMIC DESTRUCTION BY NINE MEN?

Just so now, would it not be wise, if our great President is courageous enough and has vision enough to suggest we gradually adjust our agricultural and other problems, that we do so? Also, that we establish social security and abolish sweatshops and child labor, and that we arrange to do so and not permit the Nation to be tumbled into economic destruction by Supreme Court decisions?

Mr. Speaker, I do not prophesy civil war. But this Nation may have another bubble of prosperity, another period of inflation, and then economic collapse. What then? What if we had not attacked our problems fundamentally, providing for the economic welfare of the people? It is conceivable that we would fall into such destruction as might bring on civil war.

Now that our country is having business recovery, some people are already forgetting some of the lessons of the depression. But if we are really to end the depression, to finally get out of it and stay out of it, we must have democracy, and representative government. I am one who is determined that our country shall not go back, that we shall not have economic dissolution or disaster later. Let us all as the American people, and let us as the representatives of the people, face our questions now. One of them is whether or not the people desire the acts passed for the general welfare of themselves to be knocked out as unconstitutional.

WHEN LAWYERS FALL OUT, READ THE CONSTITUTION YOURSELF

So let us look at the Constitution and its provisions. First in the preamble it is set out that the purpose is to promote the general welfare of the people. (See below, sec. III, Constitution Belongs to the People.)

Then Congress is specifically given the power and the duty to provide for the general welfare. (See below, sec. IV, Specific Power to Enact General Welfare Legislation.)

On top of this, the Constitution says that Congress can make all laws necessary for the carrying out of these powers. (Sec. V, Power of Congress to Enact Necessary Laws.)

It is true that the President can veto. (Sec. VI, Constitutional Power of Veto.) But Congress, duly elected constitutional representatives of the people, can pass a law over the veto by a two-thirds vote. The Constitution says so.

But nowhere in the Constitution does it say the Supreme Court has the power to declare acts of Congress as void and unconstitutional.

In fact, the Constitution says the Supreme Court can try cases about ambassadors, consuls, and States, but that all other cases shall be those brought from the lower courts. Then it says in article III, section 2, what the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court shall be, and adds these exact words:

With such exceptions and under such regulations as Congress shall make.

PRESIDENT CHECKS—CONGRESS BALANCES

But listen carefully. When the President vetoes an act of Congress, that is a "check." When Congress, after thoughtful consideration and because of the will of the people, repasses an act over the veto of the President, that is a "balance."

In other words, it has been said, and truthfully, I believe, that this is a government of "checks and balances."

SUPREME COURT CHECKS—BUT THERE IS NO BALANCE

But take the Supreme Court.

It declares an act unconstitutional without any power in the Constitution. That is a "check." Thereafter there is no "balance", because the act merely stays unconstitutional and the people have no remedy.

But, Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court has over and over again recognized the power of Congress to regulate it in more than 20 decisions, beginning with Chief Justice Marshall in 1810 and extending beyond a hundred years of our history. (See VII, Twenty Famous Cases.) President Roosevelt just said in his address to Congress that means must be found to adapt our legal forms and judicial interpretation to the actual present needs of the largest progressive democracy in the world.

He also said:

During the past year there has been a growing belief that there is little fault to be found with the Constitution of the United States as it stands today. The vital need is not an alteration of our fundamental law but an increasingly enlightened view with reference to it.

THREE ALTERNATIVES CONCERNING CONSTITUTION

To meet the present situation in which legislation is necessary for the people, one of three things must be done:

A. Supreme Court can give liberal interpretation

First. The Supreme Court should, of its own volition, recognize the interdependence of all parts of the country, recognize that what was local a hundred and fifty years ago has in many instances become national; and further recognize that it is the constitutional duty of Congress to provide for the general welfare; or

B. Congress should exercise power to regulate

Second. Congress should again exercise and enforce its rights to regulate the appellate jurisdiction of the Court in order that laws enacted for the general welfare can be effective.

Why should not a law enacted by Congress and approved by the President be a law for the Supreme Court as well as for the rest of the Nation?

C. Clarifying amendment

Third. An amendment might be passed clarifying the powers of Congress and the Court.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE TO BE HELD IN WASHINGTON

In making the above suggestions, I am indicating a state of facts. On the situation, I think that all persons will agree. But in making these suggestions I repeat that Congress has the power to regulate the Supreme Court if they wish to exercise it. In fact, we are really regulating the Supreme Court now through the Judicial Code passed by the first Congress and succeeding Congresses.

I am glad to announce that besides the general discussion of the people, that a general conference will be held in March here in Washington to study the whole situation. This conference will attempt to determine what amendments, if any, are needed to the Constitution or to the judiciary act, and it will present its views to Congress and to the public. The will of the American people must be made effective. The chairman of the conference will be Senator GEORGE W. NORRIS, so I am sure that you will consider it as worthy of support.

Concerning the unlimited exercise of power by the Supreme Court, let us look at the history of the income tax. An income tax was enacted way back in 1864 to help pay for the Civil War, and the power was not questioned for 16 years. In 1880 it was held constitutional. But in 1895, under a curious 5-to-4 decision, the Court held another income-tax law of a year previous unconstitutional. To do so it had to reverse, overrule, and find void five of its own decisions handed down over a period of a hundred years. (See VIII, Supreme Court Overrules Five of Its Own Decisions.)

People then said it would be necessary to have a constitutional amendment. After 19 more years, in 1913, an income-tax amendment was adopted, to be paid on incomes "from whatever source derived." (See IX, Income-Tax Amendment.)

We cannot wait 19 years now to get legislation to preserve our form of government!

JUDGES THEN EXEMPT THEMSELVES

As most of you know, an income-tax case soon came to the Court, and the Supreme Court of the United States held that Federal judges did not have to pay a cent of income tax on their salaries. (See X, Judges Exempt Themselves.) Everybody else had to pay, but not members of the Supreme Court and the lesser Federal justices.

The Court quoted John Marshall about an ungrateful and sinning people, said nothing influenced a judge but God and his conscience, and exempted themselves from the tax, and the constitutional amendment which said the tax should be collected from whatever source derived. Justice Holmes and Brandeis dissented scornfully, and added that they saw no reason why a judge should not fulfill the ordinary duties of a citizen.

SHALL SUPREME COURT HAVE VETO POWER?

The point here involved is whether, if an amendment is passed, would it not be interpreted away, as has been the power to tax and the power to provide for the general welfare, and other important parts of the Constitution? Some have suggested that the Supreme Court be given a veto power similar to that of the President. The Supreme Court has never been given this power, but should they have it, certainly Congress should have the power to decide, as in the case of the President, whether or not that veto shall stand.

In the Income Tax case the Court upset its own century-old law and the law under which it ordered the American Government to act, and gave opposite orders. And one can never know when an act is unconstitutional. Added to that is the fact the Court changes its mind, sometimes overnight, as in the Legal Tender cases. The Court's duty is to provide stability—what kind of stability is this? The fact is that Justice Hughes, while not on the bench, said: "The Constitution is what the judges say it is." Which means that in a 5-to-4 decision the single vote of one man irrevocably decides the case and can defeat the will of 130,000,000 Americans.

BRITISH CROWN MAKES PRESIDENT'S FOREIGN ACTS CONSTITUTIONAL

Let us further examine the powers of Congress in the light of the Curtiss-Wright decision of the Supreme Court just lately rendered concerning neutrality. (See XI, Foreign Powers Constitutional Because of British Crown.) It was held that the President had almost unlimited power in foreign relations, and his actions were constitutional because they proceeded, historically, from the British Crown; further, the Government should have effective power to deal with international relations.

It seems any reasonable person must say the people ought to also have, through the American Government, the effective power to control internal problems for the general welfare of themselves.

KILLING AND DESTRUCTION CONSTITUTIONAL; WHY NOT PEACE AND CONSTRUCTION, TOO?

The Court says that these unlimited powers do not depend upon the "affirmative grants of the Constitution." No; war and conquest are constitutional. The right to send soldiers to be killed on foreign fields, and against their will, is constitutional. Taxing the American people for those purposes is also constitutional. Draft laws to send American boys to fight in all wars is constitutional. Taxing the American people to lend money to foreign countries and to take up private loans by the Morgan Co. and other international bankers, so that these foreign countries can fight wars, is constitutional. Lending billions to these foreign countries, who will never pay back a dime, is constitutional—and the American people must pay the bill.

I do not even say this is wrong. But if Congress has the right to declare a war, draft a man and send him to a foreign country to be killed, should not the representatives of the people also have the power to maintain peace, to see that our citizens have employment at home? If Congress has power to build battleships, should we not also build our country? If Congress has power to build great army posts and appropriate billions for the finest housing in the world for military reservations, should not the American people also be afforded the right to have slum clearance and low-cost housing?

CONSTITUTION SAYS NOTHING OF BRITISH CROWN; BUT OF GENERAL WELFARE; YES

Yes; the Court says that these unlimited powers in foreign relations need no "affirmative grant in the Constitution"; for the power proceeds historically from the British Crown. There is not a word in the Constitution about the British Crown—but the general welfare is mentioned in black and white as a duty of Congress.

If control of foreign affairs is constitutional through the British Crown, the reasonable control of national affairs through the black and white terms of the Constitution itself would seem unquestionable.

BRITISH CROWN—PRESIDENTIAL POWER; BRITISH COURTS—WHY NOT THE SAME RULE?

Mr. Speaker, let us make a comparison. The President has certain powers transferred to him by the British Crown at the time of the formation of the Union. Following that reasoning, would not the Supreme Court have the same power of the highest court of England?

The highest court of England did not then have the power to declare acts of Parliament void. It does not have the power now. Therefore, it would seem that if the Court used the same rule for itself as it has laid down for the President, that it has no such power as to declare acts of Congress void and unconstitutional, and this by its own reasoning. Besides, as I have said, the Constitution gives the Court no such power.

Mr. Speaker and Members of this House, I say again, we must face the issue. The people are reading the Constitution, and they can understand it as well as we can, and as well as any lawyer in the country. (See below XII, Bibliography.) The people want their constitutional rights. Liberty Leaguers financed by the munitions interests will weep to the people over the radio as they did in the campaign. But remember they are the ones, along with others, in the big-money and big-monopoly groups, who would break down the average businessman, labor, the white-collar worker, the ordinary citizen, the free-born American who does the work, fights the wars, and pays the bill.

Do the American people revere and respect the Constitution? Yes; all of us revere and respect it—but we all want a living Constitution, not a dead one. And neither do we want a Constitution paralyzed by lawyers. [Applause.] The times and the people demand a restoration of democratic government, one responsive to the will of the people and capable of carrying out that will.

The present situation of a Supreme Court, appointed for life, without accountability and with self-asserted powers, must be corrected. It must be corrected by one of the three possibilities I have suggested—by amendment, by regulation of the Court, or by the Court itself recognizing that times have changed and that the provision of the Constitution defining the duty of Congress to provide for the general welfare means what it says. [Applause.]

STORY OF DRED SCOTT AND CIVIL WAR

(See Dred Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 393, March 1857)

This case covers over 250 pages of small type. It involves all kinds of technicalities and is hard reading. The real story is about as follows:

Congress enacted the Missouri Compromise in 1820. It provided that in all the territory of the huge Louisiana Purchase north of 36°30′, not including Missouri, slavery and involuntary servitude should be prohibited. Dred Scott, Negro, claimed freedom, alleging also residence in Illinois, where slavery was prohibited by the State constitution, and other reasons for himself and wife. Moreover, the Missouri Compromise said that if an owner took a slave voluntarily into free territory that that slave was free. Where a slave escaped, the fugitive slave law brought him back and the rights of all slave owners were protected. Dred's owner had voluntarily taken him into free territory.

In similar circumstances Lord Mansfield, of England, had ruled "a slave cannot breathe the free air of England and not be emancipated."

Technically it is true that the Missouri Compromise was repealed by the Kansas-Nebraska Act of 1854. This, however, was merely the substitution of one compromise agreement for another. Both recognized that there was to be some limitation upon the extension of slavery into the Territories.

Both were based on the right of Congress to legislate as to slavery in the Territories. The principle was recognized and retained in the act of 1854.

But the Dred Scott decision definitely set aside, outlawed, and declared void the very principle of the Missouri Compromise. Thus it was knocked out by the courts. Although the Missouri Compromise was not before the Court, it was brought into the decision and was declared void because it was not within the constitutional powers of Congress. No longer was the Congress to have the right to legislate as to the extension of slavery into the Territories.

In The American Doctrine of Judicial Supremacy, 1932, by Dr. Charles Grove Haines, a recognized authority on the Constitution, this statement is made:

> The Chief Justice of the United States, with a majority of his associates, was finally prevailed upon to announce the decree that the power of Congress over the Territories acquired since the adoption of the Constitution was limited by all its provisions in favor of private rights, that the Missouri Compromise Act of 1820 was necessarily unconstitutional, and that Congress could not prohibit slavery within the Territories.

Dred Scott, in order to establish his freedom, had brought suit in the Federal court of Missouri against Sandford, his owner, for assault. He said Sandford struck him, his wife, and children, and demanded damages.

Sandford's defense was that as Scott was a slave he could not be a citizen of Missouri and hence could not bring the suit. The judge instructed the jury to find for Sandford, the slave owner, on the ground that even if Sandford struck Scott he was within his rights as a slave owner.

Scott took an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. Chief Justice Taney delivered the opinion of the Court. He took 55 pages to state his reasons for deciding that the lower court was without jurisdiction and that Congress exceeded its power in prohibiting slavery in the Territory of Louisiana north of 36°30'.

Since Chief Justice Taney held the lower court was without jurisdiction, without more ado, he could have dismissed the suit.

But he wanted to settle the slavery question for all time, in spite of overwhelming public opinion, and whatever the representatives of the people thought.

He held that Congress could not prohibit slavery in the Territories. Also, that the Missouri Compromise was beyond the power of the representatives of the people. He held that although Congress had power by the Constitution to make needful rules and regulations belonging to the United States (art. V, sec. 3, clause 2), this power was limited to territory in possession of the United States at the time of the treaty of peace with England—and although a territory of the United States, did not include Louisiana, gotten from France!

The opponents of slavery were aroused. The slave-holding States, who had been satisfied, now became belligerent in mind. Compromise and possible adjustment, although proposed, was now unconstitutional. So the Nation fell into war, disintegration, physical and economic destruction.

Finally the question was settled, by an amendment to the Constitution. But when? In December 1865, after 4 years of blood. Adjustment and compromise would have been better.

II

LEGISLATION FOR WELFARE OF FARMERS KNOCKED OUT

(United States v. Butler, Receiver, Hoosac Mills, 297 U. S. 1)

Mr. Justice Roberts delivered the opinion of the Court. He said:

The act invades the reserved rights of the States. It is a statutory plan to regulate and control agricultural production, a matter beyond the powers of the Federal Government.

Also:

None—

The Court is referring to the constitutional powers of Congress—to regulate agricultural production is given, and therefore legislation by Congress for that purpose is forbidden.

It is true that the Constitution does not expressly give Congress power to regulate "agricultural production" by name, nor does it expressly authorize power to regulate rivers, railways, radios. Likewise, the Constitution did not give express power to govern and regulate other phases of American life which are required to be regulated by the times. It is easy for a court to pick out exceptions and make it difficult to govern. It is easy to evade the obvious. And obviously when the Constitution was written it was a framework, and naturally our forefathers could not possibly have thought of the numerous details of a complicated industrial and modern civilization.

Mr. Justice Stone dissented with Mr. Roberts in very strong language. He pointed out that the Constitution gives Congress the power to levy taxes for the general welfare and to spend money for its promotion. He said:

There is no basis for saying that the expenditure of public money in aid of farmers is not within the specifically granted power of Congress to levy taxes to "provide for the general welfare." The opinion of the Court does not declare otherwise.

* * * It is insisted—

By the majority of the Court—that, while the Constitution gives to Congress, in specific and unambiguous terms, the power to tax and spend, the power is subject to limitations which do not find their origin in any express provision of the Constitution and to which other expressly delegated powers are not subject.

He points out—

That the governmental power of the purse is a great one is not now for the first time announced.

Then Justice Stone very plainly says that the Supreme Court has no right to curtail the valid power of Congress, the representatives of the people, because a judge thinks their action unwise, and significantly refers to judicial abuse. He says:

The suggestion that it must now be curtailed by judicial fiat because it may be abused by unwise use hardly rises to the dignity of argument. So may judicial power be abused.

SUPREME COURT JUDGE CHARGES TORTURED CONSTRUCTION OF CONSTITUTION

He continues:

A tortured construction of the Constitution is not to be justified by recourse to extreme examples of reckless congressional spending which might occur if courts could not prevent expenditures which, even if they could be thought to effect any national purpose, would be possible only by action of a legislature lost to all sense of public responsibility. Such suppositions are addressed to the mind accustomed to believe that it is the business of courts to sit in judgment on the wisdom of legislative action.

COURTS NOT SOLE AGENCY OF GOVERNMENT

Then he calls attention to something that every American should know and read. Here are his very important and historic words:

Courts are not the only agency of government that must be assumed to have capacity to govern.

Then, to show that we live in a democracy and that all people, even courts, make mistakes, he points out:

Congress and the courts both unhappily may falter or be mistaken in the performance of their constitutional duty.

After that he calls attention to the fundamental character of our Government, the legislative, executive, and judicial, showing our Nation may be destroyed should any one branch arrogate to itself exclusive rights:

But interpretation of our great charter of government, which proceeds on any assumption that the responsibility for the preservation of our institutions is the exclusive concern of any one of the three branches of government, or that it alone can save them from destruction, is far more likely, in the long run, "to obliterate the constituent members" of "an indestructible union of indestructible States" than the frank recognition that language, even of a constitution, may mean what it says: That the power to tax and spend includes the power to relieve a Nation-wide economic maladjustment by conditional gifts of money.

Justice Brandeis and Justice Cardozo joined in Justice Stone's opinion.

III

CONSTITUTION BELONGS TO THE PEOPLE

PREAMBLE—GENERAL WELFARE SET OUT AS PURPOSE

We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and to our posterity, do establish this Constitution.

IV

SPECIFIC POWER TO ENACT GENERAL WELFARE LEGISLATION

Article I, section 8, clause 1, of the Constitution

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all taxes, duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

V

POWER OF CONGRESS TO ENACT NECESSARY LAWS

Article 1, section 8, clause 18

The Congress shall have power—

To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer hereof.

VI

CONSTITUTIONAL POWER OF VETO

(See art. I, sec. 7)

Every order, resolution, or vote to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the same shall take effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two-thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in the case of a bill.

It must be noted that the power of the President to veto is given by the Constitution, which is written. Nowhere is the Supreme Court given any such power. At the Constitutional Convention any such idea was frowned on and voted down three times.

Also, Jefferson said:

No, no, my countrymen. The opinion which gives to the judge the right to decide what laws are constitutional and what are not * * * makes the judiciary a despotic branch. The Constitution has erected no such single tribunal, that to whatever hands confided * * * its members would become despots.

VII

TWENTY FAMOUS CASES

Below is an excerpt of article III, section 2, of the Constitution. For distinction, the original jurisdiction is shown in ordinary type, and the appellate jurisdiction in italics:

In all cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers, and consuls, and those in which a State shall be a party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. *In all other cases * * * the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction,* both as to law and to fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make.

The Supreme Court has rigidly honored this dictate of the Constitution that Congress shall determine its appellate jurisdiction. One of the earliest cases in which this power of Congress was acknowledged and respected by the Supreme Court was Durousseau v. United States (6 Cranch, 307 (1810)). In that case Chief Justice Marshall said:

The appellate powers of this Court are not given by the Judicial Act. They are given by the Constitution. But they are limited and regulated by the Judicial Act and by such other acts as have been passed on the subject. * * * they (the Congress) must be understood as intending to execute the power they possessed of making exceptions to the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

This opinion of Marshall's has been religiously followed by the Supreme Court through the more than 125 years since it was written. In the following cases the Supreme Court has recognized that its appellate powers are limited and regulated by the Congress:

Ex parte Vallandingham (1 Wall. 243, 251).
Daniels v. Railroad Co. (3 Wall. 250, 254).
Ex parte McCardle (7 Wall. 506) (see below).
Merrill v. Petty (16 Wall. 338, 346).
Murdock v. City of Memphis (20 Wall. 591, 620).
United States v. Young (94 U. S. 258, 259).
Railroad Co. v. Grant (98 U. S. 398, 401).
Barry v. Mercein (5 Howard 102, 119).
United States v. Curry (6 Howard 106, 113).
Forsyth v. United States (9 Howard 571).
Wiscart v. D'Auchy (3 Dallas 321, 327).
Crawford v. Points (13 Howard 11).
National Exchange Bank v. Peters (144 U. S. 570).
American Construction Co. v. Jacksonville R. Co. (148 U. S. 372).
Colorado, etc., Mining Co. v. Turck (150 U. S. 138).
The Francis Wright (105 U. S. 381, 385).
St. Louis, etc., Railroad v. Taylor (210 U. S. 281).

Ex parte McCardle (7 Wall. 506) is singularly important in this connection. There the case had actually been argued before the Court when Congress legislated away the power of the Court to consider appeals in the class of cases to which it belonged. The Supreme Court, according to the Constitution and in view of the act of Congress depriving it of jurisdiction, dismissed the case immediately.

VIII

SUPREME COURT OVERRULES FIVE OF ITS OWN DECISIONS

(See Pollock v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co., 157 U. S. 429, Apr. 8, 1895, and rehearing, 158 U. S. 601, May 20, 1895)

In 1864 there was passed an income tax to help pay for the Civil War. It was collected, accepted by the Nation, and declared constitutional and proper by the Supreme Court. This declaration of constitutionality was in Scholey v. Rew (23 Wall. 331), and the question was whether the income tax was a direct tax or not. But the Court held:

It is plainly an excise tax or duty * * * it is expressly decided that the term (direct taxes) does not include the tax on income.

Hence, of course, income tax was constitutional. This was approved again in Springer v. United States (102 U. S. 586). The question of "direct taxes" was again brought up in order to defeat the income tax, and the same law already declared constitutional in the preceding case. The Court again held the income tax constitutional, and that it was not a direct tax.

The Pollock case, cited in the caption above, reversed the two above cases and also, in principle, Hylton v. United States (3 Dallas 171); Pacific Insurance v. Soule (7 Wall. 433); and Veazie v. Fenno (8 Wall. 433).

The majority in the Pollock case, holding the income tax law unconstitutional, and also five of their own decisions unconstitutional, was vigorously opposed by Justices Harlan, Brown, Jackson, and White. The opinion of Justice Harlan is of great interest. He in effect shows the Court has reversed itself in its five previous decisions. The Court held in the first decision that the act was unconstitutional so far as it purported to impose a tax upon the rent or income of real estate and income derived from municipal bonds. The effect of this decision and others resulting in the exemption of billions of dollars of still other securities is of grave importance to the people and should be studied. But that is another question.

For a complete compilation of cases in which the Court (a) has explicitly reversed itself, and (b) has done so, as the judges say, sub silentio (under silence), see list by Justice Brandeis in Burnet v. Coronado Oil & Gas Co. (285 U. S. 393).

IX

INCOME-TAX AMENDMENT

(Wording of sixteenth amendment to Constitution)

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States and without regard to any census enumeration.

XI

FOREIGN POWERS CONSTITUTIONAL BECAUSE OF BRITISH CROWN

(See United States v. Curtiss-Wright, October term, 1936)

This is an interesting case. The Court says:

The investment of the Federal Government with the powers of external sovereignty did not depend upon the affirmative grants of the Constitution.

Also:

During the colonial period those powers (in foreign affairs) were possessed exclusively by and were entirely under the control of the Crown * * * the powers of external sovereignty passed from the Crown * * * to the colonies in their collective and corporate capacity as the United States of America.

Then the Court says the Union existed before the Constitution, which was ordained and established, among other things, "to form a more perfect Union." Then something is said about the Union being the "sole possessor of external sovereignty."

Also:

In this vast external realm, with its important, complicated, delicate, and manifold problems, the President alone has the power to speak or listen as a representative of the Nation.

And that—

For his conduct he is responsible to the Constitution.

Which everyone knows, and so is every Federal official or employee.

The general reasoning is that the President, as the Chief Executive, took over the powers of the Crown at the formation of the Union. The Court did not say, but it might have said, the powers of the British courts at that time did not extend to declaring acts of Parliament void. In this case, the Court was not called upon to pass upon the general welfare clause. But it would seem with the expansive opinion of the Court, granting that the President and Government have tremendous power in foreign relations, that it would follow the Government should have sufficient power in internal relations for effective government.

The Court merely says, concerning foreign relations and local government, that—

There are differences between them, and that these differences are fundamental may not be doubted.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and fifteen Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 9]

Anderson, Mo.	Driver	Imhoff	Polk
Andresen, Minn.	Engel	Jenkins, Ohio	Rabaut
Biermann	Farley	Jenks, N. H.	Robinson, Utah
Bigelow	Ferguson	Kirwan	Ryan
Buckley, N. Y.	Fieger	Kniffin	Sadowski
Cannon, Wis.	Fletcher	Lambertson	Scrugham
Celler	Gasque	Lamneck	Secrest
Chapman	Goodwin	Larrabee	Stubbs
Clark, Idaho	Greenwood	McGroarty	Sullivan
Claypool	Guyer	McLaughlin	Sweeney
Cravens	Harlan	McSweeney	Taylor, Colo.

Crosser	Higgins	Meeks	White, Idaho
Dempsey	Holmes	Mosier, Ohio	Wigglesworth
Dingell	Honeyman	Norton
Dixon	Hope	Palmisano
Doxey	Hunter	Peterson, Ga.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and sixty-seven Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and other special orders I may proceed for 30 minutes in reply to the address delivered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENDING THE CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 89.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 89

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 1531, a bill to extend the classified civil service to include postmasters of the first, second, and third classes, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1½ hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Civil Service, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR]. This is a rule for the consideration of H. R. 1531, to put postmasters of the first, second, and third classes under the civil service. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I disclaim any intention to reflect on the good faith of the chairman of the Committee on the Civil Service or others who sponsor this legislation. But it seems to me that, instead of this measure being conducive of reform in the civil service, it is exactly the antithesis, because it will be hard to convince the average person that this is not a measure simply to freeze into a permanent job the Democratic Presidential postmasters throughout the United States today.

If this measure was brought forth in good faith, why has its presentation to Congress been delayed until all of the terms of Republican Presidential postmasters in the United States have expired?

It is very true that we had something similar to this in the last session of Congress, but it was defeated when voted upon under suspension of the rules, and I attribute its defeat to the fact that there were many Democrats who still had Republican postmasters in their districts.

But now, the terms of these Republican postmasters having expired, this bill is brought forth again with a view to freezing into the service—you might say covering or blanketing into the service—the Democratic postmasters throughout the country.

I have read carefully the minority report, and I hope that every Member will read it, because I think you will endorse the report both in letter and spirit.

As a matter of fact, there is no one in this House who is a greater believer in the merit system than I am, but I want that merit system to be absolutely free from politics. I want it to be genuine and without any subterfuge or sham. One of the provisions of this bill, as will be observed, is that the Postmaster General now may weed out such undesirable postmasters as he sees fit, and those who are in the service may or may not, in the discretion of the Postmaster General, be certified to the Civil Service Commission for examination. Those in the Service are not subjected to the usual and ordinary competitive civil-service examination, but they are given an examination without competition. Of course, we all understand exactly what that means. If this bill provided for a bona-fide competitive examination for these postmasterships I could see no objection to the bill, but it does not make provision for any such ordinary competitive civil-service examination. If those who are holding office today were subjected to a competitive examination, and everyone in the country, regardless of their political affiliations, were given a chance to qualify, that would be a genuine, bona-fide civil-service reform, but under the terms of this bill the present incumbents will not be subjected to any such competitive examination.

Of course, I do not pretend to voice the sentiments of this side of the House, but personally I can see no reason why a Presidential postmaster should be placed under civil service. I have had a great deal of experience in the appointment of postmasters, because for 10 years as patronage referee for nine congressional districts in Tennessee, postmasters were appointed on my recommendation, and during that period there was no difficulty in finding well-qualified Republicans in every town that had a Presidential post office to fill these positions. Postmasterships of the Presidential class are executive positions which do not require scientific skill. But I would have no objection, as I said at the outset, to this measure if it were a real civil-service reform measure that gave opportunity to all classes to qualify for these positions, but inasmuch as it is discriminatory and highly partisan, I am opposed to it.

Also, during the past 4 years, in my opinion, under the present administration, under the administration of this man whom we hear acclaimed here on the floor of the House every day as the greatest statesman and humanitarian since the days of the lowly Nazarene, civil-service integrity has suffered more than during any other similar period in the history of civil-service reform. I know that is true in my district, because down in my district, notwithstanding the fact that fourth-class postmasters are now under civil service by law, there is no fourth-class postmaster in my district who has a job which pays as much as a dime a day who is not a Democrat. They always find some pretext for removing the Republican incumbent and putting a Democrat in his place, notwithstanding civil-service regulations.

I call attention to another incident which happened in my district in the present administration. After the building of the Norris Dam and a vast area was inundated by the backwater from that dam, eliminating a post office and three rural carriers, notwithstanding the fact that they had been in the service for more than 15 years, the Post Office Department could not find a vacancy anywhere to which to transfer them. Why? Simply because they happened to be Republicans; and every time that I have heard of a vacancy in my district in the post of rural carrier, or anywhere within reach, I have called it to the attention of the Postmaster General in the hope that he would transfer and take care of these three deserving rural carriers, who had served for a period of 15 years each. They are still out of the service and will doubtless continue to be.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. I am sure my colleague does not wish to be misunderstood. If I correctly understood him, he said that there were practically no Republican fourth-class postmasters now serving in the State of Tennessee. The gentleman surely greatly overstates it. As a matter of fact, Republican fourth-class postmasters have not been disturbed in my district.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. They have in my district, and I know of only one Presidential postmaster who is holding office in Tennessee today, and that is due to the fact that the Representative and the Senator cannot agree as to his successor. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MITCHELL] is doubtless familiar with the case to which I refer.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. As a matter of fact, there are a great number of Republican postmasters in my State.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I am not speaking of the entire State, but in my congressional district I do not know of any Republican fourth-class postmaster in an office that pays anything at all substantial. They have all been removed and the job given to a Democrat, notwithstanding the fact that they are under civil service by act of Congress.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. In the First Maryland District within the last 4 years there have been no fourth-class postmasters removed except, I think, in one or two cases where there have been defalcations, and I do not know the politics of those postmasters; but only in those cases has there been any change in the fourth-class postmasters.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. It has been my experience that when they want to get rid of a Republican postmaster they have no difficulty in doing so, because they have a wrecking crew of post-office inspectors that they send out for that specific purpose. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS].

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this rule, and I am opposed to this legislation upon a much different basis than that expressed by the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR]. I doubt if there is any Member of this House who is more partisan than I. [Laughter and applause.]

I am interested in this legislation, first, because I am interested in myself and my own well-being. Second, I am interested in the service that the postmasters and the Post Office will render to my constituents. I also am interested in another fundamental thing. I hope that before I leave this Congress I will see this body stiffen its back and quit delegating and giving away the authority which they now hold and which they should continue to hold unto themselves.

Civil service—the merit system. If it were a merit system, I would be on this floor fighting for it with every pound of my fighting strength, but civil service is no longer a merit system. I say to you without fear of contradiction that at this minute civil service in Government throws a cloak of protection around more inefficiency than any other thing in Government. [Applause.]

I say further to you that when you take a man out of your district, whether he gets the appointment as postmaster by your recommendation or not, and give him a lifetime position and throw a cloak of protection around him called civil service, at that time you have ruined and destroyed a good citizen of your district. [Applause.]

At this minute each of you Members who wish to return to Congress is busy about the business of making a record upon which you can go back to your constituents and say, "Have I done the job well or have I failed? If I have failed, this is your opportunity to discharge me." So it should be with every other officeholder in the Government. You ought to send your postmasters back to the people to render an accounting of the stewardship of their office every 4 years, so that if they have done the job well you can reappoint them upon your recommendation, and if they have not, then the wrath of the people will come down on you so strong that you will be compelled to displace him and appoint somebody else.

I am constitutionally opposed to lifetime appointments. I am certainly opposed to making lifetime appointments without competitive examinations, of men who at least to a greater or lesser degree are probably not qualified. I think I have the finest bunch of postmasters in the United States. I know all that I appointed are mighty good ones, but I do not want to see those boys ruined. I want them to be left on their mettle. I want them to be left alone so that they will have to continue to render efficient service to their people or be removed from office.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOODRUM). The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. NICHOLS. Of course, if we are going to discuss it from the standpoint of politics, many of the positions in my post offices are filled with civil-service employees who are of the political faith and complexion of my friends of the minority group. Under this act I say to the Postmaster General—and I do not know how long we are going to have this one or when we may have another one—I say to him, and give him a law to back him up, "First, Mr. Postmaster General, you can, if you want to, appoint the incumbent. If you do not appoint the incumbent, then your next alternative is to promote some civil-service employee in the post office to the job of postmaster," be he Democrat or Republican, be he good or bad, be he qualified or not.

I hope this will not offend the brethren on the Republican side, but I am just scared of that proposition. I do not want to fix it so that by promotion the Postmaster General can, without competitive examination, elevate a Republican to a lifetime job in a post office in my district, or in any town in my district.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Is the gentleman afraid that the present Postmaster General might do that?

Mr. NICHOLS. I will say this: I will say that the Civil Service Commission has left many of my post offices in just this shape.

I think it is perfectly proper that the party in power should hold for the Members of Congress—you men who represent this Nation in the halls of Congress—something for yourselves that we may give as a reward to the faithful down in our districts for services they have rendered us. [Applause.]

I am exceedingly sorry that I find myself in the position of opposing my two good friends, the distinguished gentlemen from Georgia, Mr. RAMSPECK, chairman of the Committee on Civil Service, and the distinguished gentleman from New York, Mr. O'CONNOR, chairman of the Rules Committee. Several of my colleagues said to me today, "Jack, you are making the mistake of your life if you get up and oppose this bill today, because every one of your postmasters will be against you if you do."

Well, I doubt that, in the first place, and, in the second place, if they are against me because I try to be possessed of a sufficient amount of intestinal fortitude to fight for those things which I think are right, I do not give a darn if they are. [Applause.]

If I must, in order to stay in this body, pursue demagogic pursuits and nothing else, and if I am never to be permitted to say what I think, then I do not care to be here. Some of the Members laugh, but in talking to some of my distinguished friends about this matter they have said, "Now, of course, I am against the bill, but I just feel like I am going to have to support it, because I cannot take the chance of making anyone mad at me."

My friends, I sincerely hope you will defeat this rule. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, both of the major political parties have in different words declared themselves in favor of the merit system in the employment of Federal employees.

The House will recall that last year this matter came before us on the Consent Calendar and a great deal of discussion was had at that time, and subsequently when a motion was made to suspend the rules and pass the Ramspeck bill. The present bill is substantially the same bill that was introduced and considered in the last session of Congress. I was asked at that time in the colloquy which took place when the bill was considered on the Consent Calendar to offer something better than the Ramspeck bill. In consultation with the legislative drafting counsel I worked out a plan which I though had real merit and introduced a bill at that time—and have reintroduced it at this session—providing in substance that the present postmasters may finish their 4-year terms, at which time a vacancy in the office would be created and at which time a civil-service examination would be held and the Postmaster General would requisition from the Civil Service Commission a postmaster for that vacancy the same as he would now fill vacancies in the clerkships and carrierships. This would put the first-, second-, and third-class postmasters on the merit system.

As we understand it to be desirable to give encouragement for promotion through the ranks I also provide in this bill that those who are now in the Postal Service, except those appointed by the President as patronage appointees, shall be given an advantage of 50 percent in marking their examinations. It might be well to put some figures into the RECORD concerning what this amounts to. In the first place, the press has commented upon the fact that it is quite obvious that there is not any particular need for these offices. There is not any need for a first-class postmaster, a second-class postmaster, or a third-class postmaster; because, after all, he does very little work and becomes merely the custodian of the post-office building. However, if the offices are to be continued, it is desirable to name somebody who knows something about the Service and who has had actual experience in the Service.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Under the gentleman's bill, would the personnel of one postal district be eligible for appointment in any other postal district; in other words, would the gentleman's bill make of the Postal Service a career service?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes, it would; because I have no prohibition in the bill against appointing from outside the district.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. That is very important.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The last figures I was able to obtain on this are as follows: There are 1,007 first-class postmasters, 3,158 second-class postmasters, and 9,565 third-class postmasters, or a total of 13,730 so-called Presidential postmasters. The aggregate of their salaries is $28,045,600.

It was charged when this matter was last under consideration that this bill was designed primarily to blanket into the service, or perpetuate in office, the present postmasters. That would be done, of course. I see no reason, however, while we are considering this subject, that we should not have a real merit bill; because, if I know this question as clearly as I think we should know it, the day will come when the Republicans will return to power in this House; and they are going to insist on an amendment to or repeal of this measure and substitute for it a real merit system. While we are considering it today is not this the proper time to write into the law a real merit system with respect to to civil service, for first-, second-, and third-class post offices?

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to read excerpts from an editorial from the Detroit News appearing when this matter was being considered last year.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The editorial is headed "Don't Forget Mr. G. O. P." and reads as follows:

DON'T FORGET MR. G. O. P.

Probably the most obvious of governmental reforms is that of excluding the spoils system from the Postal Service. The Presidential postmasters, taking them by and large, are literally political supernumeraries. The post offices would be run just as well or better by their "assistants" of the career civil service. Their salaries are a sheer waste, a political subsidy that must be paid by every user of the mails.

Yet this obvious reform apparently must wait until some national administration seizes the issue, dramatizes it before the public, and forces it on a reluctant Congress.

That is why we may take only an academic interest in the proposal of a Michigan Republican Congressman, JESSE P. WOLCOTT, of Port Huron, that all incumbent postmasters be dismissed and their places be filled by bona-fide civil-service employees.

Mr. WOLCOTT makes one observation that needs mention. This is that no plan to cover the Post Office Department wholly into the civil service can succeed unless it ejects the incumbent political postmasters, body and breeches. Otherwise the Republicans always will object to reform while the Democrats hold office, and the Democrats will do the same when they are out of power.

Plainly this is true, and plainly also it makes the reform that much more difficult to come by. The country will have to wait for it until some administration is willing to embrace and sincerely urge just such a proposal as Mr. WOLCOTT's.

We hope that, when and if the Republicans do come into power, they will not forget their present zeal in this regard.

We are not waiting until we get back into power to effect this reform; we want the reform now as much, if not more, than the Democrats want it; and we are willing to cooperate on a real merit bill which will carry into effect the spirit behind this editorial you have just heard. I hope when the proper time comes, either on this bill or one similar to it, that you gentlemen on the Democratic side will forget your desire to blanket into the service all of your present incumbents and support a substitute measure that will make history and put into effect a real merit system.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman's bill provided that the present holders of these offices and any others who wished might take the examination and that the offices be filled by those who received the highest grade, would not that overcome any political aspect?

Mr. WOLCOTT. My bill contemplates that upon the expiration of the term the office shall be declared vacant and that if the present postmaster wishes to compete he may do so upon the same basis as any outsider or any other member of the Postal Service. To give encouragement, however, for promotion from the ranks I give to present employees of the Postal Service an advantage of 50 percent in rating.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman expect to offer such an amendment?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Answering the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I do unless it is done by the minority members of the committee. I understand a motion will be made to substitute something similar to the bill I have been discussing for the bill we will consider under the rule if the rule is adopted.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I may say that the minority does plan to submit as a substitute on a motion to recommit the so-called Bacon bill introduced on January 18, which is a real career bill on the merit system.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. The statement made by the gentleman that postmasters of the first, second, and third classes do not work is not true in Oregon; they do work and take their part, and they are under instructions, I understand, from the Department.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I did not say they did not work.

Mr. PIERCE. The gentleman said they could be dispensed with.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I said the officers could be dispensed with. It is unreasonable to expect a man picked up from civilian life and put into a large office like the Detroit office or the Seattle office to know one one-hundredth part as much about the Postal Service as the man who is actually doing the work of the office, the assistant postmaster or the superintendent of mails.

Why not give the assistant postmaster or the superintendent of mails the title of postmaster and let him do the work of postmaster? [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD].

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, the specific difference between the legislation we are about to consider and conditions as they exist today have not been properly developed in this debate.

Under the present Presidential order now effective an examination for the selection of a new postmaster is held under the direction of the Civil Service Commission. An eligible list is presented, from which the first name must be sent to the Postmaster General and to the President. Under this bill, if enacted into law, we carry out the original intention of the Civil Service Act signed by President Arthur in 1883, which developed a civil-service list, from which one of the first three may be selected.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BULWINKLE. This would not prevent the President from issuing another order?

Mr. MEAD. No; it would not.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Just like he has in the past?

Mr. MEAD. Correct.

Mr. Speaker, there is another difference. Under the Executive order a man is covered by the civil service for a definite term of 4 years. Under this bill, if it becomes law, he is protected by the civil service during good behavior for an indefinite term.

If there are any here who are interested in the selection of postmasters under the old spoils system, I may say that that system is a thing of the past. The President's order is now in effect; it is effective, and it will be carried out while he is President of the United States.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I have only minutes to present my statement.

Mr. NICHOLS. Just for a short question.

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. May I ask the gentleman if he will support an amendment to this bill to put the selection right back like it was before the President issued his Executive order providing that they may be appointed for 4 years, the Postmaster General making his selection from the top three on the eligible list?

Mr. MEAD. I do not favor that, because I believe in the civil service. I see in this bill a great opportunity for advancement for the 250,000 men and women who make up the personnel of the Postal Service. It gives to the man or woman who enters as a clerk or carrier, even as a laborer, the opportunity to earn the reward to which he or she may be justly entitled. I should like to see the time come when a man could go from the bottom of this great enterprise to the very top of it; therefore I would not be in favor of the gentleman's proposal.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield right on that point?

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the gentleman from New York for just a minute.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I agree with the remarks being made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD], but does he not understand that under section 2 there can be no such thing as a career service in the Postal Service? Any postoffice official in the service of a post office in a little third-class place, for example, has to remain there and can never get out of that rank.

Mr. MEAD. Under the bill a laborer appointed to the Postal Service in the city of New York may become the postmaster in that great city, the biggest, most responsible office in the Postal Service.

Mr. Speaker, there is another side to this argument I want to dwell on and then I am through. I want to leave with the Members a thought before I pass to another subject. That is, that the President's order is now effective. By this order a general examination must be held unless the present incumbent or someone in the office is promoted. When this examination is held the name of the top eligible on the list goes to the Postmaster General and to the President of the United States.

I now want to trace the history of the civil service and show how loyal, faithful, and wholeheartedly the Republican Party has been in espousing the cause of the civil service. I want to leave the thought that those who would amend this bill in order to make it perfection itself are violating every tradition of the Republican Party on this subject.

In 1883 the first civil-service bill was passed and signed by President Arthur. It was, however, President Cleveland who issued the first order extending the civil service outside of the District of Columbia and bringing the clerks and carriers of the Postal Service within the civil service. Before that time it was more important that they carry their precincts than to carry the mail. After that time, and as a result of the civil service, the Postal Service has become a most efficient organization.

In 1889 President Cleveland issued another Executive order, and brought the Railway Mail Service under the merit system. That order was to become effective on March 15, 1889, but in the meantime Mr. Harrison had become President of the United States and, although President Cleveland's order covered every railway-mail clerk within the civil service, including railway clerks who were appointed under Republican Presidents years before that time, President Harrison postponed the effective date until the following May. In the meantime 2,300 railway-mail clerks were removed from the Service and their places filled without civil-service examination, after which they were all blanketed within the civil service by the then President's order.

President Theodore Roosevelt next extended the civil service to the fourth-class postmasters, and he did it a few weeks before he turned over the reins of office to his successor, President Taft. He covered them all in 14 of the States, and they were all blanketed in, without having to pass any sort of an examination. There was not even a qualifying test.

President Taft, in keeping with the tradition of his party, issued another civil-service order 3 weeks before Mr. Wilson was elected President. He covered in, without examination or test by the Civil Service Commission but with its protection, all the remaining fourth-class postmasters in the United States.

Then Mr. Wilson became President of the United States. Theretofore it had always been commonplace when one administration succeeded another that nearly all the postmasters were either told to get out or some reason for their separation from the Service was usually found. But Mr. Wilson issued an order by which all postmasters remained in the Service, Republicans and Democrats alike, until they had completed their service, and not one was to be eliminated for political reasons. He issued another order bringing the first-, second-, and third-class postmasters within the civil service and requiring a bona-fide examination, and also requiring that the first one on the list be selected. This Executive order remained only for a short time after another Republican, Mr. Harding, became President of the United States.

In keeping with the tradition of his party, he weakened that order and made it possible to appoint any one of the first three who took the examination prescribed for these positions.

And now, Mr. Speaker, President Roosevelt, as President of the United States, let it be known early in his term of office that postmasters would serve to the end of their terms and not be removed for political reasons; and he, too, issued an Executive order which requires an examination to be held and that the first eligible on the list be appointed. He has recommended this bill. This is the fairest bill of this nature that has ever been considered by the Congress. It does not blanket in those affected, but it qualifies them under the rules prescribed by the Civil Service Commission, and the Civil Service Commission alone. I hope the rule will pass so that we may discuss this bill with you. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 8 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I should oppose this rule today if I did not feel it were possible to recommit the bill to the committee with instructions to report out the so-called Bacon bill, which was introduced on the 18th of January by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON]. This is, in my opinion and in the opinion of everyone I know, a pure merit bill.

I am extremely sorry for any partisan politics in the discussion of this bill today. I do not speak as a Republican, but as one who, from the bottom of her heart, feels that the merit system should really exist in this country today. Personally, I have had nothing but cooperation from the Democratic postmasters in my own district under this administration, and when the Republicans were in power I asked that several Democrats be appointed as postmasters in my own district. So you see I did not play politics so far as I personally was concerned.

I wish I could go along with the chairman of the Committee on the Civil Service, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK]. There is no finer or more splendid chairman of any committee of the House than the gentleman from Georgia, and I believe in his heart he is a thorough believer in the merit system. If this were not so he would not try to insist upon having it made possible that real civil service apply to those on the temporary rolls at the present time. It is obvious to my mind that in his heart he does not favor this bill which he said on the floor of Congress last year was not a pure merit bill.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of this Ramspeck bill, a postmaster now serving may be examined noncompetitively at the expiration of his term by the Civil Service. If he is found qualified he is frozen into the civil service for life. This practically debars the promotion of men in the Postal Service at the present time, men who have served practically all the years of their maturity in that Service, men who know it infinitely better than men who have acted as postmasters, presumably, for just a few years.

I shall ask at the proper time for recommitment of the bill and the substitution of the particular measure I have referred to. I personally should be very pleased to feel that it would not be necessarily to recommend anyone for appointment as postmaster, but that the Civil Service would promote a man of worth and a man who had served in the Postal Service to the position of postmaster if he was found qualified. This would make men now in the Postal Service take even more interest in their work.

If there are not men who are qualified, then the postmasters should be appointed as the result of open competitive examinations in order that everyone have an equal chance. With these provisions, then and then alone, our postmasters would be appointed under a genuine merit system. I earnestly hope, Mr. Speaker, the House will adopt our substitute bill. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I am reminded that the President, in his message this year, spoke of the need for extending the merit system, as I recall it, upward, downward, and outward. This, to me, appears to be the first actual bill presuming and purporting to carry out the spirit of that recommendation.

I have been interested in listening to the historical references to similar occasions dealing with civil-service reform as advocated by previous administrations. It would appear that selfish political motives have usually dictated past changes made. It has always been an attempt to create opportunity for new employees or to freeze old ones into their positions.

Personally, I support any civil-service reform that will improve the Postal Service, whether it is inaugurated by Republicans or Democrats. The only real way to accomplish this is to put the Postal Service on a career basis. This measure will not do this. Quite the contrary.

I want to remind you that there were bills passed during the past two sessions which gave full opportunity during those sessions to the Members to express themselves in favor of a merit system as applied to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. The record shows that on the last occasion there were only three Members of the Democratic majority who voted in favor of applying the merit system to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. Why has there been such a rapid change of heart on your part insofar as applies to the Postal Service? The time is coming, I would assume, during this session when you will again be given an opportunity to express yourselves insofar as the merit system is concerned with respect to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, which employs countless more employees than does the Post Office Department.

Now that the H. O. L. C. has filled all of the positions which under law it is entitled to, I assume we will soon be asked to vote for a measure which will also permanently freeze all of its employees into the civil service.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of the civil service in all of its aspects. For the last 7 years I have been intimately associated with a first-class post office. It seems we ought to have a bill which will give the postal employees who have been working 5, 10, and 15 years in the Post Office Department, who have been making it their goal to some time be the postmaster, an equal opportunity to become postmaster.

It has been my observation that the postmasters of first-class offices are certainly fine gentlemen but they do not know any too much about the postal system, and certainly not as much as those men who have been connected with the system 5, 10, or 15 years.

I think we ought to have a bill which gives these men in the system an equal opportunity to take a civil-service examination along with the postmaster and select those best fitted for the job. Then if you want to make it for life, dependent upon good conduct and worthy service, I am for the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK].

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to get into any controversy in the few minutes that I have on the rule about politics. Briefly, I want to tell you what the bill provides and what it proposes to do.

In the first place, we are operating under the Executive order issued by the President of the United States, which provides exactly the same thing that this bill provides, with one exception.

Under the present Executive order, where you have a competitive examination, the person making the highest grade in that examination must be appointed. Under this bill we revert to the basic civil-service law and the rules and regulations which provide that a selection from the three highest names from the civil-service examination shall be appointed.

That is all there is to this bill. We are doing the same thing that the President's Executive order does.

I should be very glad to answer questions as to the details of the bill when I take the floor after we have passed the rule. I ask the House to vote for this rule and give us a chance to go into the matter. The only argument we have had here today which I think is really germane to the question is the argument made by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS], who frankly tells you that he does not believe in the civil service. Of course, if you do not believe in the civil service, you ought not to vote for this bill, because it is a civil-service bill. I shall not try to fool you about it; I am going to be frank with you. It does not mean, however, as the gentleman says, that you give them a lifetime job, because any civil-service employee can be removed, and he has no right of appeal under the present law. It is just putting these postmasters in the same position that your fourth-class postmasters and your rural carriers and city carriers and clerks are in today, and you know they are being removed from time to time whenever there is sufficient cause.

Another thing I emphasize is that the fact that we Democrats are consulted by the Postmaster General in reference to appointments now is not a matter of right or law, but simply a matter of party practice. Under the law the President makes these appointments, and he does not have to consult a single Member of Congress about it.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes.

Mr. WOOD. If this bill passes, it will place postmasters under civil service? That is to say, that all postmasters will have to take a regular civil-service examination for first, second, and third class?

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. RAMSPECK. It does this: First, the Postmaster General may reappoint the incumbent by a noncompetitive examination.

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman does not understand my point. After the postmaster has taken the civil-service examination and he is appointed as a postmaster of the first, second, or third class, then he has to be confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. RAMSPECK. No; absolutely no! It takes that power of appointment away from the President and confirmation away from the Senate and he is appointed like any other civil-service employee. The fact that we have been consulted, and that during Republican administrations Republican Members have been consulted about these appointments, is not a matter of right or law but simply party practice, and any President who wanted to could quit consulting us at any time that he saw fit to do so.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I understand that if this bill goes into effect one of the three highest will be eligible for appointment?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes.

Mr. McCLELLAN. And who determines which one of those three shall be appointed postmaster?

Mr. RAMSPECK. The Postmaster General.

Mr. McCLELLAN. And is he going to determine that as in the past by consulting Congressmen?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I cannot answer that, but I presume that he may do so.

Mr. McCLELLAN. This is the thought that I have in mind, that we either ought to have a civil-service law that will take the whole responsibility and remove it from Congressmen, and let the country know it, or we ought to have a law that places the responsibility with Congressmen, and hold them responsible. [Applause.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. I say this to the gentleman from Arkansas. Under the law now the name of any civil-service appointee may be presented to a Senator or Representative for endorsement, but only as to character. You cannot keep people from consulting others by law.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken.

The Chair announced himself in doubt.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 159, noes 85.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1531) extending the classified civil service to include postmasters of the first, second, and third classes, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 1531, with Mr. WOODRUM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, if I may have the attention of the membership of the Committee, I want to clear up a few misapprehensions that have been brought to my attention.

In the first place, under the present law the appointment of postmasters is the responsibility of the President of the United States, subject to confirmation by the Senate. As I said a while ago in the House, there is no right by which a Member of Congress has any voice in those selections. It is simply a party custom that has been used by both parties.

The present situation in this administration is that the President issued on July 20 last an Executive order, which is almost word for word like this bill, with the exception that it provides that when a competitive examination is used the person making the highest mark must be appointed. There is absolutely no choice available. I want the membership to understand that, because if you are fighting to retain the right to appoint postmasters, under the present Executive order you do not have any such right. You cannot be consulted, because there is only one person, in case of a competitive examination, that has any chance for it.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. TERRY. Is there not another distinction between your bill and the Presidential order, that under the Presidential order a competitive examination can be called for and that anybody can take that competitive examination, whether he has a civil-service status or one not with a civil-service status, but under the present bill, unless the incumbent is appointed, only those within the office may take the competitive examination. Is that not true?

Mr. RAMSPECK. No; that is not correct, I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas. The bill has three methods of appointment: First, reappointment by noncompetitive examination of the incumbent postmaster. It is purely a matter of choice with the Postmaster General as to whether or not he exercises that privilege.

Second, promotion appointment of a civil-service employee in the Postal Service, living within the area served by the vacancy office. That can only apply to first- and second-class offices, because there are no civil-service employees in third-class offices. They, therefore, would not be eligible for promotion from a third-class office. They would have to stand an examination.

A third method is an open competitive examination, and any person who is a resident of the area served by the office can participate, whether they be Federal employees or not. Those are the three methods.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. MAY. What would be the method of ascertaining who would be appointed in a second-class office, where a civil-service examination has already been held and one of the three highest has been appointed? When he goes out of office, what about the other two who had already acquired a civil-service status?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Under the general rules of the Civil Service Commission, eligibility lists last only 1 year.

Mr. MAY. And they would be out?

Mr. RAMSPECK. They would be out. They would hold a new examination or promote somebody in the office.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The question I desire to ask is this: It occurs to me there is still another distinction between the method of appointment under the President's order and under this bill. Under this bill the Postmaster General would be required to reappoint the present postmaster or some person having a civil-service status in that office.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not agree with the gentleman's construction. Section 1 of the bill provides:

> That hereafter postmasters shall be appointed in accordance with the provisions of the civil-service law.

And there is a proviso there which reads:

> That postmasters now serving who have satisfactory records shall continue to serve until their 4-year terms of office expire, after which they may be reappointed without term in accordance with the provisions of section 2 of this act.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Then read section 2. That is what I had reference to.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The word "shall" in section 2 applies to the general question of appointment of postmasters hereafter. It reads:

> * * * shall be made by the reappointment and classification, noncompetitively, of the incumbent postmaster, or by promotion from within the Postal Service in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Service Act and rules—
